Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "three" where it occurs the second time in line 4 and inserting the word "four;" and by striking out the word "four" in line 5 and inserting "three;" so as to read "four clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2."

The purpose of this amendment is to enable the stenographer of this bureau to be placed on the same footing as the other stenographers of his grade and class. I have talked with the chairman and other members of the committee on this subject, and I think there is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Circuit court of appeals: For nine additional circuit judges, at $6,000 each; for nine clerks, at $3,000 each; in all, $81,000.

Mr. TERRY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph just read the following:

"Provided, That said clerks shall make annually, within thirty days after the 30th day of June, to the Secretary of the Treasury a return of all costs collected by them in cases disposed of during the preceding year by said courts, and, after deducting the incidental expenses of their respective offices, including clerk hire, and their compensation as provided by section 9 of the act of March 3, 1891, establishing the circuit courts of appeals, not exceeding $500, said expenses to be certified by the senior circuit judge of the proper circuit, shall pay any surplus of such costs that may remain into the Treasury of the United States at the time of making said return: Provided further, That each circuit court of appeals shall be entitled to retain and have expended, under the direction of the Attorney-General, for law books for its use, one-half of such surplus accrued therein for the fiscal year 1896."

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve a point of order upon this amendment on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. TERRY. I do not think the amendment is obnoxious to a point of order; and if it should be, I hope my friend from Maine will not insist on the point. This is a very necessary matter. By communications received from the judges of the circuit courts of appeals, it is made apparent that they need this appropriation to purchase law books. You give here to the Attorney-General's Office $1,000 for the purchase of additional law books, although that office already has a library. You give to the Department of Labor $1,000 for the purchase of books. But here are these circuit courts of appeals, high tribunals charged with the most important duties, and they have absolutely no library at all.

Attention has been called to this matter by different judges of the courts of appeals, and from letters I have received myself I know how important they regard it; and I am satisfied that this proposition is in the interest of economy, as it will conduce to the prompt dispatch of business if these judges should be furnished with a convenient library. Under the present circumstances, when some knotty question is brought up, they are often obliged to send out in order to get books of reference. If it is necessary that the Supreme Court should have a library, it is just as necessary that these courts of appeals should have, as the greater proportion of business stops with them—never gets to the Supreme Court at all.

My amendment is in the identical language employed in the last appropriation bill, the only change being the insertion of 1896 instead of 1895. I trust that my friend from Maine will not object to the proposition either by a point of order or otherwise.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, my objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas does not lie in the fact that it is an appropriation for the purchase of a library for the court of appeals, but to the method by which it proposes to reach the desired end. In the first place, under the law enacted last year all of these fees must be covered into the Treasury. Then in the last appropriation bill, on motion of the gentleman from Arkansas himself, a proviso was added to which we consented with the understanding that it was to be for the current year only—a proviso that one-half of the fees might be reserved for the purchase of a library for the court of appeals. I consented to the enactment of that proviso on the assumption that it applied only to the current year. But the principle involved is entirely wrong. The fees should be covered into the Treasury absolutely and fully; and if then an appropriation is to be made for the purchase of a library or for any other purpose, it should be made in the ordinary way directly. Otherwise, of course, we can have no knowledge of, or check on, the expenditures.

Has the gentleman from Arkansas the information which will enable him to state the amount of the expenditure for this purpose during the year?

Mr. TERRY. I have not at hand. I telephoned to the Attorney-General this morning for the information, but have not yet received it.

I will state to my friend from Maine, however, that he is mistaken as to how the appropriation got on the bill of last year. It was not entirely on an amendment of mine—

Mr. DINGLEY. But at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas it was included, under the expectation that it was to apply simply to this year—the current year. There was no expectation that it was to be repeated. If there had been I certainly should have opposed it, because I object to the principles involved.

Mr. TERRY. I had introduced a bill making a permanent provision, the gentleman will remember—

Mr. DINGLEY. You introduced the bill, but objection was made.

Mr. TERRY. And the committee, instead of taking my view of the matter—that is, instead of making it permanent—made it applicable to the one year only, and I then had an amendment made to the proposition as reported by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is correct. It was only for the one year, and for the reason I have stated.

The committee will perceive that the gentleman from Arkansas is not able to give us the information as to the amount expended this year. We have no positive information as to how much money was actually expended on this account; and that is the evil of this form of appropriation. We do not know the amount that will be expended and have no check whatever on the expenditure.

I would say, with all due deference to my friend from Arkansas, that if it is proposed to make this appropriation for the library it should be a direct appropriation and the fees covered entirely into the Treasury. If it was to continue for the next fiscal year only perhaps I should not object, but as a permanent system I do most seriously object to it.

Mr. TERRY. I am not asking to make it permanent now. I think from the letter I showed to the gentleman from Maine this morning from one of the judges, that the provision if made in this bill for one year will be sufficient.

Mr. DINGLEY. My impression is that we shall find the same application coming to us next year.

Mr. TERRY. I will agree with the gentleman from Maine that if I bring it forward again he may object to it. Let me have it now, and I am quite sure it will not be necessary to repeat it.

Mr. DINGLEY. As far as I am concerned, I wish to say that if the system will terminate with the pending bill, and in the future if such an appropriation is desired that it shall be made directly. I will withdraw my objection for this time.

Mr. TERRY. I think I can assure the gentleman on that point. I am very much obliged to him.

I ask a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter every officer required by law to take and approve official bond shall cause the same to be examined at least once every two years for the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of the sureties thereon; and every officer having power to fix the amount of an official bond shall examine it to ascertain the sufficiency of the amount thereof and approve or fix said amount at least once in two years and as much oftener as he may deem it necessary.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will give some explanation of this provision. It seems to me that the legislation would be faulty. For instance, there are some bonds that are required by one officer and are approved by another.

Mr. DOCKERY. This paragraph was prepared by the Solicitor of the Treasury in connection with the Postmaster-General and a number of other gentlemen.

Mr. HEPBURN. But is it practicable to carry it out? Here are bonds, for instance, approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury and deposited with the Comptroller. He has no control over the bonds from that time. This provides that it is made the duty of the officer who takes the bond to examine into the sufficiency of the sureties every two years; but at the same time the bond may be in the custody of another man. It also requires the officer who has power to fix the amount of the bonds to examine as to the sufficiency of the amount at least once in two years when he may not have it under his control.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Solicitor of the Treasury reviewed it and has informed us that it is desirable to have it enacted into law. We find on an investigation of the matter that the present system is all chaotic. This does not disturb the existing law as to fixing the amount of the bonds or their approval; but in the case of an officer where he has power to take and approve a bond it is his duty to examine as to the sufficiency of it and also to ascertain whether the sureties are solvent from time to time.

Mr. HEPBURN. But here is the difficulty. The section provides that—

Hereafter every officer required by law to take and approve official bonds shall cause the same to be examined at least once every two years, etc.

Now, there are a number of bonds required by one officer and approved by another officer.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true, but wherever he has taken or approved an official bond, it matters not where the bond may be, it is his duty to examine it. This provision was very carefully examined by the Postmaster-General and the Solicitor of the Treasury, and I believe it is correct.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 6. Section 3711 of the Revised Statutes is amended, to take effect on and after July 1, 1895, to read as follows:

"Sec. 3711. It shall not be lawful for any officer or person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States in the District of Columbia to purchase anthracite or bituminous coal or wood for the public service except on condition that the same shall, before delivery, be inspected and weighed or measured by some competent person, to be appointed by the head of the Department or chief of the branch of the service for which the purchase is made from among the persons authorized to be employed in such Department or branch of the service. The person so appointed shall ascertain that each ton of coal weighed by him shall consist of 2,240 pounds, and that each cord of wood to be so measured shall be of the standard measure of 128 cubic feet. Each load or parcel of wood or coal weighed and measured by him shall be accompanied by his certificate of the number of tons or pounds of coal and the number of cords or parts of cords of wood in each load or parcel."

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I desire to make a point of order to this section, that it changes existing law and does not reduce expenditures. At the present moment the inspectors of coal and wood are not paid by the Government as such inspectors. They are paid by fees which they receive from the contractors who furnish the Government with coal and wood.

Mr. DOCKERY. The point of order can not be well taken, because on the 30th of January this bill was referred to the Appropriations Committee, with leave given by the House to insert it in this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. If the Chair holds that this point of order is not well taken I desire to move to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Missouri to state that leave has already been given by the House to insert the section in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, on the 30th of January.

The CHAIRMAN. That being so, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I move to strike out section 6. The law at present provides that the officials who inspect or weigh the coal and wood delivered to the different Departments shall be paid not by the Government but by the contractor, 20 cents on each ton of coal that is weighed and 9 cents on each cord of wood. This provision does not save anything to the Government. It simply saves to the contractors, and the Government employs men to do this work who are doing other work at small pay and who take these places because the fees give them additional pay. If this section be suffered to remain in the bill it will simply save the contractors from paying for the inspection of this coal and wood and will compel the Government to make provision for it.

Mr. COOMBS. Do you not think that the contractor can afford to furnish his coal or wood at a less price if he does not have to pay these fees?

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I do not think he would do so. I do not think it would enter in his contract price at all. I do not believe he would make any less contract with the Government, and at the same time the Government would have to pay the salaries to these people. It is hard work. They have to be up early in the morning, sometimes as early as 3 and 4 and 5 o'clock, to do this weighing. The men who do it at present are mainly laborers, and the increased compensation that they get in the way of these fees is relied upon by them for their pay. This will simply work a saving to the contractors and not to the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say a word in reply to my friend. In the first place he is in error in the statement that these positions are held by laborers in the main. That is true as to one or two, but in the War Department the position is held by an eighteen-hundred-dollar clerk, who receives about $1,200 fees additional. In the Treasury Department the position is held by an assistant custodian who gets $1,200.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Who holds this position in the War Department?

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe a gentleman by the name of Thorpe.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. The gentleman whom I know holds the place, and whom I have always understood does the weighing for the War Department, for the White House, and for the Monument, is a laborer.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hold in my hand the following letter:

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY, January 8, 1895.

The person now designated under section 3711 of the Revised Statutes to inspect coal and wood purchased for the State, War, and Navy Department building holds an appointment under the War Department as clerk of class 4, and receives a salary of $1,800 per annum. He has inspected about 5,000 tons of coal and about 150 cords of wood for which the contractor should have paid him about $1,013.50.

THOM WILLIAMSON,
Chief Engineer, U. S. N. S.

Hon. ALEX. M. DOCKERY.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I refer to the man who does this work for the White House and Monument.

Mr. DOCKERY. This letter is dated January 8, 1895. That is the only information I have.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. That is certainly a mistake, because there is a constituent of mine, a laborer, who does it and who gets all the fees.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is another man. In the Department of Justice there is a clerk who gets $1,200. This case is simply this: Under the statute as it exists now gentlemen in the public service are designated to weigh coal and wood. They receive certain compensation.

That compensation, of course, is in addition to the regular salary, or a salary paid by these contractors to these persons so designated, in round numbers, according to official statements, of $8,475.65 in all the various Departments. Of course the fact that these fees are to be paid by the contractors appears in the advertisement. It therefore costs the Government just that much more for coal than it otherwise would—that is $8,475, assuming these figures to be correct. Then, again, in the opinion of the committee the fee system is objectionable at every point. We know that in the operations of the Department of Justice the effort has repeatedly been made to supplant the fee system there with a salary list; and the committee believe that men already in the Government service who are fully compensated should be designated to perform this service without additional cost to the Government, and the result will be a saving of at least $8,500 in the price of coal. It will also have the effect of removing temptation to give large weights from those engaged in connection with this work of weighing, and the Government should have its own agents to inspect the coal without putting these gentlemen under any obligation to the contractors.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. By the present law the persons who are performing this duty are under official bond in the amount of $5,000 to secure the faithful performance of their duties, and they each receive 20 cents a ton from the contractors. Now, under the present section in this bill the Government will simply have to take men from other duties in order to perform this service, and they have to rely upon that for their fees.

Mr. DOCKERY. It takes them now, and then pays in addition.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. It takes the man to whom I am calling your attention. This work is done by men who get the fees and a small salary; whereas, if you adopt this plan, the salaries will have to be increased.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have a vote, if the gentleman is through.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 2, page 117, insert:
"Provided, That this section shall not apply to or affect persons designated who are not receiving $900 salary or more than $400 in fees."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] makes his fight against the coal weighers because he says they are getting large fees.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is mistaken. My objection was against the whole fee system.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That was the object of it. The gentleman referred to the War Department, where the party who does this weighing gets $1,800 in salary and about $1,200 in fees.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true of that Department.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, then, that salary is sufficient perhaps to enable that man to discharge this duty as to that office, but the gentleman ought not to strike out the other men, laborers perhaps, who get small wages and who are doing this work out of office hours frequently. The gentleman ought to know that the Department can not designate men to do this work out of the regular office hours. They can not designate men to go there at 7 o'clock in the morning and work at this employment until 6 o'clock or 7 o'clock in the evening, as the case may be.

Mr. DOCKERY. That can be done under this law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It ought not to be so. These men who are doing this weighing and getting 20 cents a ton have to give bond in the amount of $5,000. They have to go to the surety companies, and, as they require 1 per cent, they would have to pay $50 for making that bond.

Mr. DOCKERY. They would come under the new law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the bond is running, and they have already paid.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman will understand that this does not take effect until the 1st of July.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But still these parties who do the weighing have to go to work and do it out of regular hours. They commence with this work long before the other people of the Department are at work and they work until 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening if it suits the contractor to deliver at that time. How are you going to compel these employees to do it? You can not do it out of the regular hours, and you would not ask these men to render longer service than the other people in the Department. I do not think it is just and proper that it shall be forced upon them. They are getting very small wages in the majority of instances. Now, because some men do get a larger amount, why does the gentleman want to strike at the other men, the laborers, who are designated, some of whom are only getting $700 or $800 a year. If they do get 20 cents a ton for weighing the coal it does not amount to more than $300; and the Government does not pay it. It is paid by the contractor. Now, if you want to favor the poor men who are getting very small wages, you ought to make the exception in the case where the work is done by laborers.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Have you a constituent doing that work in one of the Departments?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have one, in the Agricultural Department, who is getting $800 and the fees for weighing coal, amounting to $300; making in all about $1,100. Is it right and proper to eliminate this small sum? Will this House cut down the compensation of a man who is as competent as many who are getting better salaries? Will they allow such a man to be designated and be required to work from 7 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock at night perhaps, while the other employees of the Department are only required to work from 9 until 4? That would not be fair. The head of that Department can not designate a man to do this work except in the regular hours of the Department. Ordinarily these duties are performed after the Departments close. The hours of the Departments do not correspond with the hours of the business people of the city. I want to ask the gentleman how he is going to get over that? How are you going to designate men to commence this work at 7 o'clock in the morning and continue it until 6 o'clock in the evening. The Department has no authority over the employees before and after the regular hours. This is the reason fees were allowed. Would you have them do this extra work for nothing while others who are connected with the Department have gone to their homes and are sitting by their warm firesides?

Mr. DOCKERY. How does the gentleman say it is done?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You must have uniform rules; you can not work one man ten hours a day and another six.

Mr. DOCKERY. The law expressly provides for not less than seven hours a day, and then it provides that the head of a Department can extend or limit it. That rests with the head of the Department. The work may not exceed eight hours.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You can not make the contractors keep those hours. You have to meet them within the business hours of the city. Why do you not provide that these men designated to do this work shall not meet these contractors at different hours from the Department hours? Why do you not provide an increase of their salaries to meet that objection? I say that this is a serious objection to your reform, and I do not believe that this House will enforce such a rule upon men who are getting small salaries so as to require them to do this work for nothing when it does not cost the Government a cent as the law now is.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Government can fix the time for the delivery of the coal. They will be very glad to deliver it at any time that is fixed by the Government, and they will make a very handsome profit, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CRAWFORD, the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880, for the relief of settlers upon the public lands, is repealed. Contests and rights already initiated shall not be affected by this repeal.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the provision just read.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is useless. I will say to the gentleman that this was reported to the House by the Joint Commission of Congress with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; it was so referred and was reported from that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations with the right to incorporate it in an appropriation bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska offered the following as a substitute for section 8:

That section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880, for the relief of settlers upon the public lands be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancellation of any preemption, homestead, or timber-culture entry he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands: Provided, That the contestant shall in all cases in his affidavit of contest allege and on the hearing prove that he institutes said contest in good faith and for the sole purpose of entering and holding the lands covered thereby under the homestead laws of the United States as and for his home, and that he will in all respects comply with the homestead laws in relation to said entry: Provided further, That said register shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for giving such notice, to be paid by the contestant and not to be reported. Contests and rights already instituted shall not be affected by this amendment."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that substitute that it changes existing law, does not reduce expenditures, and is not germane.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the substitute which I have offered certainly would not change existing law any more than the section in the bill does.

The CHAIRMAN. No; but the House has already made the section in order by giving the Committee on Appropriations permission to insert it in the bill.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If that is so, then it must certainly be in order to amend the section. It is not yet the law, and if authority was given to insert it in this appropriation bill, that carries with it the right to propose amendments. Then, as to the other point, my amendment is certainly germane to this section.

Mr. PICKLER. Of course it is. This substitute is simply the proposition that is in the bill, except that it contains a provision to protect bona fide settlers. It is exactly the same, only that it saves to bona fide settlers the right to make contests, and it certainly is in order.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from Missouri will withhold his point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman from Nebraska wishes to be heard.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I am in full sympathy with section 8. Its purpose is to correct an evil which has grown up under our land laws, which have been so construed as to put a premium upon contests in land cases where those contests were not meritorious.

It is proposed by this amendment to break up that practice under which meritorious settlers have been blackmailed, and at the same time to allow settlers who in good faith and for the purpose of making their homes upon the land desire to institute contests to do so. Certainly, we do not propose by this legislation to inhibit contests which are founded in good faith and have a meritorious basis. We ought to protect meritorious contests and at the same time put down the practice of blackmailing which has grown up. Now, the amendment which I propose is to amend an old law giving the preference to such persons as have a meritorious case and as, on the hearing, prove that they institute the contest in good faith and for the purpose of making the land their home, in compliance with the homestead laws. Such an amendment is certainly meritorious, and its justice and desirability I am sure will commend themselves to Western Representatives here who are interested in perfecting our public-land laws.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 8 of the bill provides that section 2 of an act of Congress approved May 14, 1880, for the relief of settlers upon the public lands, shall be repealed, and a saving is then made in favor of contests already initiated. The amendment which is proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska does not repeal that section, but simply modifies it. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was read, as follows:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall prevent the sending of any contest to the board of equitable review for adjustment, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I accept the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska is to be adopted, this proviso should be added. I believe that section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880, has conducted to more blackmail, oppression, and fraud, and more annoyance to settlers than all other influences combined. Since the passage of that law all kinds of land contests in the local land offices, the General Land Office, and in the office of the Secretary of the Interior have been piling up, until to-day they stand as an obstruction in the way not only of the cases that are contested, but of other cases that ought to be settled and passed to patent. The settlers are harassed, and nobody benefited except the lawyers and land agents who hang around the local land offices and the Land Office here. Occasionally a contestant that prosecutes under that law does so in good faith and for the honest purpose of exposing a fraud and to honestly acquire a home, but such is not the rule by any means.

The most trivial technicalities are taken advantage of to disturb the peace and quiet of communities and to arrest the titles of honest settlers who have tried to comply with the law and earnestly desire to acquire homes under it. Unless some reasonable modification of the law can be made, I believe it ought to be repealed. If there be a class of people in the world for whom I have a supreme contempt, it is that class who go around and by reason of having access to the records of the land offices here or elsewhere find defects in the entries of poor illiterate settlers and then contest their claims, either for blackmailing purposes or even for the purpose of appropriating their homes which they have undertaken to acquire under the public-land laws. They breed discord and trouble in the settlement as well as injure good citizens. They are a meddlesome set that deserve and generally receive the contempt of all good citizens.

When this law was passed the preemption law and the timber-culture law were in force, and the commutation period under the homestead law was only six months. Under these laws many frauds were committed, and there was some excuse for giving this preferential right to contestants; but there is but little use for it now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McRAE. I should like to have a few moments more.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. If you will refer to the records of contests in Oklahoma, where the land is valuable, you will find that thousands and thousands of speculative contests have been instituted, and many honest men have been compelled to abandon their improved homes after being pauperized by contest after contest. Many of the claims are not worth what the contests have cost the parties. The same condition in less degree exists all over the public-land States where lands are valuable. Whatever step may be thought necessary in the future, the best thing for us now to do is to say to these despicable characters who hang around the land offices for the purpose of disturbing honest settlers under the law that there shall no longer be a premium upon such conduct. Let the Government make the examination. Why not? It has plenty of time. It has seven years in which to detect any fraud in homestead entries. Better by far that there should be some entries passed that may be erroneous or even fraudulent than to thus invite this wholesale litigation, with all the expense and evils that must necessarily follow it. I am not opposed to a fair modification, but I am not prepared to support this amendment without further consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] misapprehends the purpose of this amendment. It provides that the contestant shall in his affidavit of contest allege and on the hearing prove that he proposes to take the land as and for his home. It throws the burden upon him. The gentleman should not confound the blackmailing cases to which he has referred with the cases sought to be protected by this amendment. The amendment makes but a single exception in the general rule, and it looks to the protection of the settler.

Mr. PICKLER. This proposition is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Here is his letter recommending it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. As the gentleman from Nebraska will remember, I had a conference with him in regard to this amendment. I have thought over the matter since, and I want to ask him whether he thinks the requirement of an oath that the contest is made in good faith is going to be any obstacle in the way of a man who intends to blackmail the settler who has nothing but a mere technical defect in his title. Will not the contests be made just the same under this amendment as under the old law? You may require proof of bona fides and all that, but will not the blackmailing of every settler who has the least technical defect in his title go on just the same?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I think not, because the contestant must not only allege, but on the hearing prove that he intends to take the land as and for his home.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the title of the settler is put in jeopardy, and his money may be gone before that proof is required.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. No; the proof must be made on the hearing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the contest is going on when the hearing comes up.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. McRAE. The repeal of section 2 will still leave the right of contest. All that section does is to give a preference right of entry for thirty days to the successful contestant. If he be an honest man with an honest purpose to enable the Government to expose fraud, he will make his contest and take his chances with other men to enter the land if he be a qualified entryman, and if he is right he will get the land in nine out of ten cases.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. My friend is familiar with land-office practice. Does he not know that if we do away with all preference right whatever, hangers-on about the land offices, having the first opportunity to know that the contest has succeeded, will slip in and make their entries? So that by an absolute repeal of this section you offer a premium in another form to these blackmailers.

Mr. McRAE. I think not.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Certainly; they will have the first knowledge and the first opportunity.

Mr. McRAE. Not if the officers are honest. The board of equitable review, if the settler has substantially complied with the law, ought to have the right to approve his entry without regard to how much money the contestant may have spent. There should be no vested right to enter public land. If there should be as palpable fraud and the entry is canceled, nobody except a qualified entryman can enter and no other should be allowed any right by contest or otherwise. There should be no special advantage to anybody. No bonus or premium should be offered by the Government.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. But these hangers-on about the land offices will certainly have the first knowledge of the fact that the patent has been canceled.

Mr. McRAE. But if the land office is honestly administered, as it ought to be, and no preferences given, this information can not be had and there will be no hangers-on. Their avocation will be gone. But if this preference right be allowed, an official notice is given, as it now is, saying in substance to the contestant, "You have thirty days from this date to take this man's home and turn him, his wife, and children out upon the cold charities of the world," or if not qualified find some one who is, although the settler may have honestly endeavored to comply with the law, misled perhaps by some ill-informed lawyer or by some misconstruction of his own in regard to the statutes under which he sought to secure a home. I have in mind some cases that amount to nothing less than outrages.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I join most heartily with my friend from Arkansas in desiring to protect this class of citizens. I want to protect that class just as much as he does, and the amendment I have offered does it. But I want to go a little further and protect the meritorious contestant also who makes his contest honestly, and give him an opportunity of being protected from the sharks who lie around the land offices waiting a chance to slip in and make an entry and oust him of his rights. I want to protect the man who makes his contest in good faith, where the contest is sustained and the person desires to take up a homestead under our beneficial homestead laws.

Mr. McRAE. But it is so hard to separate the good from the bad, and the bad, it seems, predominates so largely in all of this matter, that I can not consent to see the law perpetuated unless substantially modified.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote. This has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, we are not ready to vote yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be first taken on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas and to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that this is a very important matter that you are undertaking to repeal here. We all agree as to the attack that has been made on the speculative contestant. I have no sympathy with that class of people myself. But here is the point that is not protected under your section and is protected by the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska: Suppose there is a speculative filing on a piece of land, and an honest homesteader comes and wants to contest it. No man, however honest he is, can make a contest at an expenditure of less than from $25 to $200—

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What does it cost to threaten?

Mr. PICKLER. If a man goes on in the utmost good faith and makes his contest and succeeds in putting off the filing; after he has gone to all of this expense and clears the way for a proper title he finds that somebody else lying around the office has found out when the entry is canceled and makes the filing in his stead. Now, it is to protect men who with an honest purpose make their entries that this amendment was drawn. It is a protection to the honest contestant.

Why will gentlemen not consent to this amendment? It covers all the fraudulent contests and protects as well the man who honestly makes his contest. Why, in my part of the country I believe that three-fourths of the lands now taken are taken up by men who came there and filed contests on abandoned lands, and thus put the contestant out of the way and filed their own claims.

Under this provision, if adopted, no man can do that with safety. The speculative filing will remain on the land, and no honest man will go to the expense of filing the contest and carrying it through when some one lying around the office can take advantage of it and make the filing as soon as the way is clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PICKLER. I have a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office here that is decidedly against your proposition in the bill and in favor of this amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am not surprised at that.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well, the Secretary of the Interior is with him on this.

Mr. DOCKERY. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that our friends from the West are found in opposition to the repeal of that section of the law. I have not seen many honest men running around through my part of the country at the beck of an attorney or anybody else a thousand miles away to make honest contests against the settlers.

My friend from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] kindly submitted his amendment to me before it was introduced, and spoke, I think, to most of the men who were interested in it from the West. Since that time I have thought of several instances which came under my own personal observation, and I do not believe, as suggested in my question a moment ago, that we are going to stop this blackmailing process by such an amendment as this. The gentleman from South Dakota has referred to the single case of the honest settler who makes his contest and has the preference right which is lost by somebody slipping in ahead of him. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows of a single case of an honest settler who ever won in a contest and had his preference right to the thirty days who would take away some other man's right by getting in ahead and making a filing? We do not do things that way in my part of the country. We are more liberal and generous.

Mr. PICKLER. Do you give him any chance to get his right?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not want to give any man the chance, under any specious plea, here or elsewhere, at the beck of any attorney, to send somebody else out there or hire somebody to make a contest against a settler on the public lands, on account of some mere technicality.

Mr. PICKLER. We all agree with this speech of the gentleman, but here is the point we are trying to save: The man who honestly contests a filing and wants to make it his home goes to the expense of making the contest. Under this provision another man can come in and file on the land, and the contestant will be out the amount of his expense, and will get no benefit.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What is the contestant doing while the other fellow is making the filing?

Mr. PICKLER. He can not lie around the land office as the land sharks do. You must protect him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know, and you know, and every man who is familiar with these cases has received letters showing that these things start by some one around the land office, who knows of some technicality, getting some one else to file a contest.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman know of any cases where entries have been made on land where no attempt has been made to reside on them or to improve them, or to comply with the law at all, and is there any way of clearing such entries other than by contest?

Mr. PICKLER. None.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. None, and it is the simplest thing in the world. I know, and you know, if you have been an attorney in land cases, that it is the commonest practice in the world if there is an abandoned location. There is nothing in the world to prevent an honest settler from taking it, under the repeal of this section. Of course there are cases where a man has to leave the country sometimes, to make enough money so that he can stay when he comes back. The neighbors recognize that, and in those cases there is no difficulty, but in the case of an absolute abandonment, where a man does not want the land, there is no difficulty in an honest settler getting it, and there will be none if this section is repealed.

Mr. PICKLER. There will be difficulty—

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. When the preference right is repealed, then the man with the first knowledge of the canceling of an entry will have the advantage.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The man who has the first knowledge is apt to be the man who wants to settle on the land.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no; it is the sharks around the land offices.

Mr. SIMPSON. The question in my mind is that if this section is repealed it may remove the fear of contest and there will be many more fraudulent entries than there now are.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have not the slightest fear in the world so far as my country is concerned; because in the settlement of public lands I have never seen a valid settlement beaten in such a contest, but I have seen men pay attorneys to make fraudulent contests, and the men whose entries have been contested could not bear the expense of making a proper defense of their rights. That has been the effect of this infamous act. It was not the purpose of the framers of the act, but in effect it has been nothing but a blackmailing business in that country.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I only want to occupy one minute, simply to say that I have had five or six contestants for land entries writing to me to go to the Land Office here, to the Interior Department, to represent their cases. In every instance it has been a person who has been lying around the land office, who, finding that the rightful claimant has been temporarily away from his claim for a short time during these hard times to earn something for his family, has filed a contest. They are all of that class. Not one of the cases to which I refer has been honest. I hope the committee will stand by this bill and repeal that infamous blackmailing section. That is all it is.

Mr. FLYNN. I dislike very much to disagree with my friends from the West on this proposition. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that one-half of the contest business in the Land Office to-day comes from my Territory, and three-fourths of the contests that have come from there have come by virtue of this outrageous section which has been heretofore the law.

It is said that a man must make affidavit of good faith and intent to prosecute his contest to the end. What is there to prevent his changing his mind within twenty-four hours after he makes the affidavit? That is the rule. A man files now on a piece of land, and if it is valuable it is immaterial whether he is a qualified entryman or not. Some shark hires somebody else to file a contest. The man is then notified that for $500 that contest will be relinquished. Perhaps he pays the amount rather than be kept out of his title for three years, rather than to take the long, tedious route through the Department, which means at least three years. As soon as that contest is relinquished and the $500 is paid the shark hunts up another man and another contest is filed, and perhaps another $500 is paid to have that contest relinquished. I hope that preference right will be repealed and then you will have an honest administration of justice in land litigation.

Mr. HUDSON. Is the gentleman in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER]?

Mr. FLYNN. I am not, for this reason, that I do not think it changes the existing law as a matter of fact.

Mr. PICKLER. How are you going to protect the honest man who files a contest and goes to the expense of making it for the purpose of canceling a fraudulent entry?

Mr. FLYNN. You can not protect him. He has got to take his chances just the same as any other American citizen. American citizens who want land in the West are able as a rule to protect themselves.

If this law had not been in existence our country would not have been torn up as it has, and contestants would not have been pauperized by leeches who, for blackmailing purposes, have contested their homes and held them up so that they could get some money out of them. If there ever was a just amendment proposed it is this which proposes to repeal that law and wipe it from the statute books. Honest men will never get the worst of it by repealing that act, but the leeches who hang around the land offices will. In my Territory I have known of one man contesting six claims, and he wanted to get money out of the different parties whose titles he was contesting. I hope this committee will sustain the Committee on Appropriations and vote with them to repeal this bill and let it in the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas to the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that this letter of the General Land Office be printed in the RECORD. I will not ask that it be read.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I have considered the draft of a bill entitled "A bill to improve the methods of the General Land Office, and for other purposes," which you handed me.

The first section provides "that section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1890, for the relief of settlers upon the public lands, is repealed. Contests and rights already initiated shall not be affected by this repeal."

The section proposed to be repealed reads as follows:

"In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancellation of any preemption, homestead, or timber-culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands: Provided, That said register shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for the giving of such notice, to be paid by the contestant and not to be reported."

It is to be remarked in connection therewith that the right to enter contests against entries of public lands does not depend upon or arise from the section proposed to be repealed. Applications to contest are in the nature of informations to the Government of proceedings set on foot against persons who attempt in fraud or evasion of the law to acquire title to any tract of public land, or to segregate it from the mass of the public lands, to the injury of the just rights of individuals or the public to protect which it is made by the law the duty of the Department.

Acting upon such information, the Department authorizes proceedings in the nature of an investigation to determine the facts of the case, the rights of the parties, preliminary to applying the proper remedy. These proceedings naturally take the form of a contest between the informants or others acting in the interest of the public on the one side and the party against whose efforts to improperly appropriate or segregate the land the information is directed on the other side.

There is also a class of contests which arise between adverse claimants of public land who assert a right under the statutes to appropriate the land in question against the claim of the other. Such claims it is the duty of the Department to adjudicate, which duty it can not properly discharge without first allowing the parties a hearing, at which testimony may be adduced with respect to controverted matters of fact and arguments heard and authorities cited with reference to any questions of law involved, with a view to rendering a decision thereon. This proceeding retains also necessarily the form of a contest. In such cases the right of one party or the other is asserted under the general laws; the preference right given in section 2 aforesaid is not necessary and the repeal proposed would not affect this class of cases.

The condition of affairs giving rise to contests necessarily results from the statutes by which the United States undertakes to dispose of its public lands, to the adverse claims and interests, and to persons seeking to avail themselves thereof. The section 2 proposed to be repealed does not cause these contests, but merely gives a preference right to the successful contestant in a certain class of contests to initiate a right to the land of which the title at the close of the contest is found to remain in the United States, and to be therefore subject to disposal under the statutes. Before that statute was enacted in 1880 contests were numerous, and the contestants when successful often sought to acquire title to the land by becoming the first legal applicant therefor after the close of the contest.

If it should be repealed it is not to be assumed that contests would cease as the result thereof. Before the passage of that statute it was a common thing for the parties desiring to acquire title to the land to employ attorneys who would attend at the Department, acquire the earliest information of its action when taken, and immediately communicate it by telegram or otherwise to the parties interested in making the earliest entry thereof. The section now proposed to be repealed rendered this unnecessary by allowing the contestants the preference right, and permitting the exercise thereof within thirty days from notice to be given by the register of the district land office of the decision of the case. It also operated to prevent the injustice of third parties coming in after the close of the contests and appropriating the land as the first legal applicant after the contestant had cleared the record of the invalid entry by an expensive contest.

I think that it is erroneous to conclude that the work in connection with contests in this office would be diminished to any great extent by the repeal of that statute, or to such an extent as to justify a material reduction of the force now employed therein.

Any increase that may be observed in the yearly average of contest cases or to appeals in such cases since the enactment of that statute should not, in my opinion, be regarded merely as the result of its operation. It may be attributed in a great measure to other causes. The exhaustion of the class of lands subject to appropriation at ordinary private entry and of scrip locatable upon lands not subject thereto free from the condition of residence and cultivation has, during the period referred to, enhanced the value of the homestead, which is almost the sole means of acquiring title to desirable tracts, and a corresponding increase in competition and consequent litigation by the homestead claimants has followed.

It is further to be considered that the preference right, created by said section 2 to the successful contestant, costs the Government nothing, while it constitutes a sufficient inducement to lead parties conversant therewith to furnish information of intended frauds and evasions of the law that can not otherwise be obtained even at a great outlay from the public Treasury.

The public lands are a great possession which the Government holds in trust for the purpose of affording homes for the people, and it should not neglect any available means of protecting them from misappropriation characterized by illegality and fraud. I am, therefore, of opinion that the offer of a preference right to the successful contestant as per said section 2 should be continued. It is particularly inopportune now that the appropriations for special agents to investigate fraudulent and illegal entries of the public lands are reduced to a small amount from considerations of economy, that this inexpensive means of attaining the same end should be thrown away.

I think, therefore, that it would be unwise to repeal said section 2.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10; yeas 98.

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out section 8 of this bill. Of course I regret very much that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] did not carry; but I think the case should not be left in the one-sided position in which we are now about to leave it. There are two sides to this question. Why, the impression left upon the House by this discussion would be that all contestants are dishonest and the contestees in these cases are all honest men. You might just as well go on and say that all the plaintiffs in all cases were honest and all the defendants were dishonest. There are two sides to the question. In speaking of this case of the contestants being dishonest and the contestees honest, gentlemen have spoken mostly as attorneys, looking at the question from the direction of land-office practice. Look at it through the other end of the telescope and you will get a different view.

The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands [Mr. McRAE] has well stated that section 2, or the part that is proposed to be repealed, provides a preference right for thirty days. But that is not all that section 2 does. Section 2 provides, first, that in case of cancellation of the claim that the register of the land office shall notify the contestants; and, second, that he shall have thirty days' preference right to make his filing. The latter clause of section 2 has been discussed, but not a word has been said about the first part of the section. When a contest has been initiated and the decision made at the land office by the register, then it becomes the duty of that register to mail to the contestant the ruling he has made, and then the contestant has thirty days to make his filing. Under the law, if passed, if we repeal that section, the "hangers-on" about the land office will get the first notice of the conclusion of that contest; and instead of being for the benefit of the honest settler, who has given much of his time, his work, and his money, it would not inure to his benefit at all. It will inure in almost every case to the benefit of the attorneys and the hangers-on around the local land office.

Now, in the neighborhood where I live, what is the situation? Ten or twelve years ago there was a great wave of immigration that swept over the country, during which many went into the pursuit of agriculture who were not competent to make good farmers, and who did not succeed, although they might be well qualified for other business. They were honest men who failed and went away. Many of them were men who were working on the railroads, and some were girls, who had no idea of farming, and simply wanted to acquire property and title to a piece of land. Now, the neighbors living around there have notice of the contests on these lands—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and in regard to it I want to call the attention of the committee to the language of section 8. The last section of section 2 provides "that contests and rights already initiated shall not be affected by this repeal."

For fifteen years it has been the policy as to land contests to give a preferential right to the man who instituted a contest to file an entry at any time within thirty days after its determination in his favor. That has been found to result in a large increase of litigation. The proposed repeal simply stops the business at this point, preserving the rights of parties who have heretofore filed contests.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. How does the gentleman know that that law has produced increased litigation? There may have been more contests since 1880 than before, but it does not follow that they have resulted from that law.

Mr. LACEY. We know it for this reason, that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, the result of a contest being the cancellation of an entry, it is followed either by the purchase of the right of the contesting party, a relinquishment from him, or by an entry and filing made by him. Now, parties having heretofore commenced contests and expended money and time, their rights ought to be preserved, and their rights are preserved by this proposed amendment; but hereafter this act will give notice to gentlemen filing contests that they must take their chances with the balance of mankind. The result of that will be that contests hereafter will be made by Government officers rather than by private individuals for their own special advantage, the number of contests will be greatly reduced, and at the same time the rights of men who have got their cases already pending in the courts or in the land offices will be preserved.

The motion to strike out section 8 was rejected.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 8.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That hereafter timber-culture claimants shall not be required, in making final proof, to be personally present at the land office to which such proof is to be presented, but the claimant may have his or her personal evidence taken at place of residence and transmitted to the proper land office under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to be heard on that, Mr. Chairman. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is the point of order usually made upon an appropriation bill. It is hardly necessary to elaborate it. When a point of order is made on an amendment to an appropriation bill the questions to be considered are, first, whether it is germane, and, second, whether it reduces expenditures, either as to the number of salaries or to the amount carried by the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, this section 8 which the gentleman has put into this appropriation bill relates to the public lands, and really has no business here. Nevertheless, it is in the bill, and it has now been passed upon by this Committee of the Whole. It relates to settlement on the public lands, to contests as to public lands; it relates altogether to the public lands. Now, I simply offer an amendment as to the making of proof of timber-culture entries, and that is in order without doubt. I repeat, this is a public-land section which the Committee on Appropriations have put in this bill. It ought not to be here, but they have brought it in here nevertheless, and my amendment is germane to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question. Does section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880, relate to timber-culture claimants and the manner in which they can make final proof?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; it relates to contests of all kinds, timber-culture contests as well as others.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is true, then the Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. PICKLER. This amendment which I have offered is a very harmless one, and I hope the point of order will be withdrawn and the amendment adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was intimating that in his opinion the point of order would not be well taken, provided section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880, relates to the manner in which timber-culture claimants shall make final proof, because the amendment deals with that identical question.

Mr. PICKLER. Section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880, deals with contests, including timber-culture contests.

The CHAIRMAN. In that case the Chair thinks the amendment would be in order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] on the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880, be read.

The section was read, as follows:

Sec. 2. In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancellation of any preemption, homestead, or timber-culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands: Provided, That said register shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for the giving of such notice, to be paid by the contestant, and not to be reported.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, that section does not relate to the method of making final proof of any kind. It relates alone to the preferential right given to contestants who are successful. They are generally assailing the final proof of somebody else, not making any proof for themselves. There are other provisions of law, relating to the manner of making proof, before whom it shall be taken, how it shall be transmitted, etc.; but there is nothing in the section just read which relates to the making of final proof of any character, and I hardly think the amendment in order.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, that section can not be narrowly construed. This is a general provision as to the land laws of the United States, relating to all kinds of contests, and homestead, preemption, and timber-culture contests all come under that section. Here is a provision in regard to proofs in timber-culture contests; but, sir, in every contest that comes up this question as to the manner of proof, what has been done by the settler and what is alleged by the contestant, arises. The construction contended for here would be a very narrow one, I think.

Mr. McRAE. I have not examined the amendment to determine its merits. I have been discussing the point of order. The amendment may be all right, and I think would be very desirable and convenient for timber-culture entrymen, but, in my judgment, it is not germane to this section. If it is in order I see no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the amendment to be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I believe that if the point of order be reserved so that this amendment can be properly explained it will be acceptable. What is its effect? The timber-culture law is now repealed, but a large number of timber-culture claims are yet to be proved up. Under the law the timber-culture entryman has not been required to be a resident of the State where the land is. Thus it has happened that men from Indiana, from New York, from Ohio, from Illinois, and other States have come West and made these timber-culture entries. When they come to make their proof how must that be done? They must present the evidence of two witnesses who reside in the vicinity of the land as to its condition and whether the requirements of law have been complied with. Now, to present his proof the claimant is required to travel, it may be, five hundred or a thousand miles from his home to where the land is situated. This is a great hardship. The amendment simply provides—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] that he inclines to agree with the gentleman on the point of order, and would prefer to hear from some gentleman on the other side.

Mr. PICKLER. I thought the point of order would be withdrawn. The amendment can do no harm to anyone. It will simply save expense to these claimants.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the Chair think the amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to overrule the point of order.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 31, noes 60.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask now that we return to page 31 of the bill in order to amend the amendment which was adopted relating to masters of vessels. I ask unanimous consent to strike out on line 29 of page 31 the word "April" and insert "July," so as to read "on and after July 1, 1895."

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask that the paragraph as amended be transferred to page 117 and appear as section 10 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask that section 10, on page 117, be numbered section 11.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask now that we return to page 14 to consider the amendment in regard to committee clerks.

Mr. HULL. I wish to modify the amendment I offered the other day so as to provide for 19 clerks instead of 23.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. HULL. The amendment as modified will simply make the number of committee clerks the same as at the present session of Congress while allowing the reduction to be made in the assistant clerkships.

Mr. DOCKERY. I agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment as modified will be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, in line 15, strike out "14" and insert "19;" so as to read, "for 19 clerks of committees," etc.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to amend the amendment so as to reduce the number of clerks one less than that embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, and also to add a proviso to it. If the amendment is carried it could not be stricken out and a less number inserted. So I will ask to offer an amendment to the amendment to strike out "19" and insert in lieu thereof "17."

Mr. HULL. What is the object?

Mr. SPRINGER. So that I can move the additional matter I propose in connection with this clerkship. I wish to take out one of the assistant clerks and make the clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency an annual clerk. It will be the same number, but one would be annual. I move to strike out the word "nineteen" from the amendment—

Mr. HULL. You can do that by adding to the number I propose.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I want to make one less of the session clerks and one more of the annual.

Mr. HULL. You must remember that my amendment is still dropping five from the present number, and you want to drop two more. Why do you drop two if you want simply to make an annual clerk for your committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. I only want to drop one.

Mr. HULL. Then one less would be 18, and not 17 in all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; that is correct; that should have been the amendment. My purpose was to strike out "19" and make it "18." It is intended in the 19 to include a session clerk for the Banking and Currency Committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to insert 18 instead of 19, and in addition to that what I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 14, line 15, by striking out the word "nineteen" and inserting in lieu thereof "eighteen," and by adding at the end of the paragraph, in line 17, the following:

"For clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency, $2,000, and the compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Banking and Currency shall begin from and after the passage of this act, and so much as may be necessary for the payment of such salary until the 1st day of July, 1895, is hereby appropriated and shall be immediately available."

Mr. BLACK. I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. I understand it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Now, I am opposed to any increase of the clerical force of the House to any of the committees. I have had the honor to serve somewhat on the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I see no use in perpetuating a clerkship for that committee during the recess of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman state that this will increase the number of the annual clerks?

Mr. BLACK. Well, it is not an annual clerkship now, but this makes it so. So it must be an increase.

The CHAIRMAN. But the number authorized by existing law may be larger than the number of clerks provided for in this amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I ask if this does not change existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair was asking the gentleman how it would affect the number of clerks.

Mr. BLACK. Well, the clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency is not an annual clerk and this makes him so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was whether there were more than 18 clerks authorized by existing law.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Because if so this does not increase expenditures.

Mr. BLACK. It increases expenditures as far as this committee is concerned. As to the other committees I am not informed.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is no statute authorizing an annual clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The words "existing law" in the rules of the House refer to permanent statutes, prescribing rules for the government of people, or the amount to be appropriated by each Congress for salaries. There is no law in existence with reference to clerks of committees; and it has been the practice in Congress for the House and Senate to fix the number of employees and their salaries, and prescribing their duties, in the appropriation bills; and the compensation is carried in the same bill. We have a right to determine the number of clerks and officers of the House that are necessary to transact the business. There is no existing law, I repeat, on the subject.

Mr. BLACK. What business is this clerk to perform?

Mr. SPRINGER. The public business.

Mr. BLACK. What public business is there for the Committee on Banking and Currency to perform in the recess?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not arguing the merits of the case now. I will come to that later. I am trying to argue on the point of order, and am speaking solely to that.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman tell me if this does not raise the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, there is no clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency established by any law of this House.

Mr. SIMPSON. You have a clerk now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to finish the sentence. The number of session clerks allowed in the House is fixed in the appropriation bill from session to session, and when the House meets a report comes in from the Committee on Accounts, distributing these clerks to certain committees, and as each House may determine. This session, I believe, we failed to distribute eight or ten of the clerks allowed. It is simply an allowance by law as to the number.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is there now a law fixing the compensation of these clerks?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a law fixing the compensation of clerks for the session.

Mr. SIMPSON. What do they get?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is fixed in the appropriation bill—$6 a day while Congress is in session—and this simply provides that this committee shall have an annual clerk. Now, if there were an existing law on this subject that so many committees should be entitled to clerks—but the last Congress dropped one of these committees that was entitled to an annual clerk, namely, the Committee on Arid Lands. That was in the list of committees having annual clerks.

Mr. SIMPSON. But, as I understand the gentleman's amendment, it changes existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no law on the subject.

Mr. SIMPSON. The present law appoints a clerk during the session, and your amendment makes him an annual clerk, and therefore it is a change of existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. The existing law is not that kind of existing law which the rules contemplate, because there is no general statute fixing the number, but it is an amount carried by each appropriation from year to year, and Congress fixes these amounts at each session. There is no law authorizing anybody to be employed after the 1st of July next.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then this House fixes it at every session?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; and therefore we have not regarded this as coming within the rule changing existing law at all, but it is for the discretion of the House at each session to determine.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for one question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The clerk of the Committee on Banking and Currency is a clerk who serves during the session. The proposition is to reduce the number of clerks. Now, if you reduce the number and increase the clerkship to an annual one, you simply reduce at one end and increase at the other. Now, the question is, what use have you for a clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency during the recess of Congress?

Mr. SIMPSON. Or at any other time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer that question by asking another pertinent question. What use is there for a clerk to the Committee on Accounts or to the Committee on Agriculture, or to the Committee on Claims, or to the Committee on the District of Columbia—

Mr. COX. I do not think there is any use at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Or to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or to the Committee on Indian Affairs, or to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, or to the Committee on Military Affairs, or to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, or to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or to the Committee on Public Lands, or to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or to the Committee on War Claims, and so forth? The answer to this is—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question. The Chair understands the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that the House regulates this matter at each session, as it were, but it is also done, as the Chair remembers, upon a report from the Committee on Accounts upon a matter which is referred to the Committee on Accounts, which gives that committee jurisdiction of the question. Now, the proposition here is to do this upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me call the attention of the Chair to one fact, the Committee on Accounts has jurisdiction over the contingent fund of this House, but has no jurisdiction over matters running beyond the session of this House, and could not therefore have jurisdiction of this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point the Chair was about to make is that the committee do have jurisdiction of the question at the time they present it. They make a report and it is competent for the House to increase the number of session clerks. It may make them all annual clerks if it sees fit to do so when reported upon by the Committee on Accounts, or any committee to whom the subject has been referred for that provision.

But here is a proposition to make a permanent clerk. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to call the attention of the Chair to this point, that the Committee on Accounts has made such a recommendation in regard to business that went on during the session; but this matter relates solely to a time over which the Committee on Accounts have no jurisdiction whatever. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. That changes the law. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 15, strike out the word "four" and insert "nine;" so as to read "nineteen clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $17,808."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to ask the gentleman who offered this amendment to give us some information upon this question. If I understand, the bill as reported provides for 14 of these permanent clerks, and the gentleman proposes to strike out 14 and make it 19.

Mr. HULL. My amendment only applies to session clerks—not to the annual clerks.

Mr. BLACK. What committees do you want these clerks for?

Mr. HULL. The committees that have these clerks now during this session. There are 23 of these clerks. The number of these clerks to committees is sought to be reduced. Four of them are assistant clerks. Now, we leave the four assistant clerks out of the bill entirely.

Mr. BLACK. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. That is the fault of the House more than mine.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that.

Mr. HULL. The Fifty-second Congress, as I understand it, had 34 clerks.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for order, Mr. Chairman, I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. This legislation is for the next Congress, and not for this Congress at all. This Congress has now 23 clerks. The proposition of this amendment is to start the next Congress with 14 clerks of committees. It is true that each Congress can settle for itself the number of clerks it desires after it gets together, and that is why I offer this amendment. In order to obtain the clerks it requires the bringing in of a resolution and having it adopted.

Mr. BLACK. I can not hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to assist the gentleman in getting order. Gentlemen will please cease conversation or retire to the cloakroom. The gentleman from Iowa will suspend until gentlemen resume their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. HULL. I do not know how much the gentleman from Georgia heard of my explanation.

Mr. BLACK. I did not hear; I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. Well, if I can have order, I think I can state the matter so that the gentleman can understand. As I was saying, this legislation applies to the Fifty-fourth Congress only; not to the Fifty-third Congress at all.

Mr. BLACK. Can not we leave that to the Fifty-fourth Congress?

Mr. HULL. I am proposing in my amendment to concede to this Congress the right to cut off 4 assistant clerks to committees; but my amendment starts the next Congress with its session clerks at 19, which is the same number that this Congress now has. It does not increase the number now on the roll. On the contrary, my amendment, if adopted, will reduce the number on the roll.

Mr. DOCKERY. If I understand the gentleman, you simply give to the next Congress exactly what this Congress has, so far as session clerks are concerned, striking out 4 assistant clerks, and leaving that Congress to determine the question whether it wishes to provide those assistant clerks.

Mr. HULL. That is right. It leaves simply the next Congress to determine what assistant clerks it may desire.

Mr. BLACK. They do not serve during the vacation.

Mr. HULL. They only serve during the session.

Mr. BLACK. It does not increase the number.

Mr. HULL. It decreases the number.

Mr. HUDSON. Do they draw their pay during the vacation?

Mr. HULL. They draw no pay except during the session, and after having been appointed by the chairmen of the committees.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment to give the Committee on Banking and Currency an annual clerk is right and proper. I was in hopes that this provision relating to clerks would apply to the committees of the present House. We need more brains in some of these committees, especially in the financial committee—the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Ways and Means. Those committees have utterly failed to meet the needs of the country and the Government. And I do not know of any way that we can get more brains into these committees except to hire brainy clerks. How does the case stand? The President of the United States has notified us that he has made a bargain by which the paper of this country is to be shaved over $16,000,000 on a loan of sixty-two and one-half millions. We find that the man with whom he made the bargain is his law partner, or his late law partner. No notice of the dissolution of the partnership has ever come to my attention.

By this bargain the President boldly puts gold at a premium of 25 per cent over coin, which is both gold and silver. I tell you the whole thing looks on its face suspicious. Money is low in the market. Call loans are only 1 to 1½ per cent. Three months' loans are only 2½ per cent, and much less for large sums. And yet the President borrows sixty-two and one-half millions at 3½ per cent, and the man who loans the money offers it at 3 per cent, if made payable in gold. It looks like a big steal. Truly we need more clerks in these finance committees. We want some more brains; somebody who can solve the financial problems that now vex us. And if the committees can not solve them let us get some brainy clerk who can. [Laughter.]

The transaction as it stands is a scandal and a disgrace.

The New York lawyer who has bought these sixty-two and one-half millions of bonds at 3½ per cent interest can place every one of them at 3 per cent and make a nice little profit of about $16,000,000 out of it. Let us give the committees more clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 89, yeas 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have passed over the provision for the Pension Office, on page 84.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read that part of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office: For the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000; first deputy commissioner, $3,000; second deputy commissioner, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,250; assistant chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $3,000; assistant medical referee, $2,250; two qualified surgeons, who shall be experts in their profession, at $2,900 each; thirty-eight medical examiners, who shall be surgeons of education, skill, and experience in their profession, at $1,800 each; ten chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,000; fifty-eight principal examiners, at $2,000 each; twenty assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; three stenographers, at $1,600 each; seventy clerks of class 4; eighty-five clerks of class 3; three hundred and fifty clerks of class 2; four hundred and thirty-eight clerks of class 1; two hundred and eighty-seven clerks, at $1,000 each; one superintendent of building, $1,400; two engineers, at $1,200 each; one hundred and seventy-five copyists; thirty-three messengers; twelve assistant messengers; twenty messenger boys, at $400 each; one painter, skilled in his trade, $800; one cabinetmaker, skilled in his trade, $800; one captain of the watch, $840; three sergeants of the watch, at $750 each; twenty watchmen; three firemen; twenty-five laborers; five female laborers, at $400 each; and fifteen charwomen; in all, $2,066,710.

For per diem, when absent from home and travelling on duty outside the District of Columbia, for special examiners or other persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said Bureau, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation and assistance and any other necessary expenses, including telegrams, $500,000: Provided, That two special examiners, or clerks, detailed and acting as chief and assistant chief of the division of special examiners, may be allowed, from this appropriation, in addition to their salaries and in lieu of per diem and all expenses for subsistence, a sum sufficient to make their annual compensation $2,000 and $1,800, respectively; and whenever it may be necessary for either of them to travel on official business outside the District of Columbia by special direction of the Commissioner, he shall receive the same allowance, in lieu of subsistence and for transportation, as is herein provided for special examiners and detailed clerks engaged in field service; and the Secretary of the Interior shall so apportion the sum herein appropriated as to prevent a deficiency therein.

For an additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners for one year, at a salary of $1,300 each, $195,000, and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman having the bill in charge to the fact that two or three gentlemen on this side desire to make some remarks upon this part of the bill, and I would like to come to an agreement as to the time.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much time is desired?

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] wants half an hour, and the gentleman from Iowa wishes to occupy some time. I suppose that on the part of those favoring the bill very little time will be wanted, and I would suggest that one hour be allowed for debate, fifty minutes of which shall be given to those who wish to criticize the bill and ten minutes to those who favor it as it stands.

Mr. DOCKERY. When general debate was closed the understanding was that when this part of the bill was reached such time should be allowed as might be desired. How much time is asked on that side?

Mr. PICKLER. I regret now, Mr. Chairman, that I consented to the passing over of this part of the bill, because I desired more time than I can well hope for now; but I understand that the gentleman desires to dispose of his bill and I will try to get through in a very short time.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the debate is going to occupy an hour we shall not get the bill through to-night.

Mr. DINGLEY. Perhaps gentlemen desiring to speak will consent to occupy so much less time, so that we may get through with the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, how much time is desired?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think one hour will be sufficient. There is no one but the gentleman from South Dakota, as I understand, who desires to occupy more than a few minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. I will try to get through in fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that all the paragraphs in the bill relating to the Pension Office have been reserved for consideration, so that questions of order may be raised and amendments may be submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on these paragraphs be limited to forty-five minutes for gentlemen opposing the provisions in the bill, and fifteen minutes for those in favor of the bill as it stands.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, before I can consent to that I want to know when this matter will come up for further consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will modify the proposition so as to ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraphs relating to the Pension Office be limited to forty-five minutes to be occupied by gentlemen opposed to the provisions of the bill, and thirty minutes to be occupied by those in favor of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before I consent to that proposition, Mr. Chairman, I want to know when further consideration of this bill is to be had.

Mr. DOCKERY. If this agreement can be made it is my purpose to move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that; but to-morrow is set apart for other business, so that I want to know when this bill is to come up again.

Mr. DOCKERY. We will try to arrange that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, let it be arranged now.

Mr. DOCKERY. It can not be arranged in committee. The committee has no power to arrange it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraphs relating to pensions be limited to an hour and a quarter, forty-five minutes to be occupied by gentlemen in opposition to the bill and thirty minutes by those in favor of it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is time enough, and I object.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York almost immediately withdrew his objection, unanimous consent was given, and the request was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that motion is put, Mr. Chairman, as I am called away in the morning, I would like to make a brief statement as to facts connected with the pension appropriations in this bill. I shall not occupy more than five or seven minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I withdraw the motion that the committee rise. As the gentleman from Maine has to leave the city to-morrow, he can occupy now a part of the forty-five minutes allotted to that side. I will state, however, that it is not my purpose to ask for a vote on any proposition this afternoon.

Mr. PICKLER. If the vote is not to be taken this afternoon we do not want to be limited to forty-five minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Missouri and the committee to agree that the time occupied by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] this afternoon shall not be taken out of the forty-five minutes allowed on that side for debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PICKLER. When the time was limited I understood that the vote was to be taken to-night.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, then, I shall insist on my thirty minutes to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement as to debate has already been made.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my proposition be put to the committee, that the time consumed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] this afternoon shall not be included in the forty-five minutes allowed for debate on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that the time which may be used by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] this afternoon be not included in the hour and a quarter which has just been allowed for debate on this portion of the bill. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire now to state that as soon as the gentleman from Maine concludes his remarks I shall move that the committee rise; and when we get back into the House I propose to try to make some arrangement by which we can get a final vote on this bill to-morrow.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy but a very few minutes for the purpose of presenting to the committee the changes which have been made in the appropriations for the Pension Office by the pending bill for the next fiscal year, and the reasons therefor.

First, there is the appropriation for special examiners in the field, per diem, etc., $500,000. In the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year the appropriation was only $250,000; but it will be remembered that when Congress reassembled in December last the Commissioner of Pensions asked for a deficiency appropriation of $250,000, which was granted by a vote of both Houses. So that the appropriation for the current year, covering the original appropriation and the deficiency appropriation, was $500,000, exactly what is covered by this bill for the next fiscal year. The same thing took place in the preceding fiscal year. So that for two years the expenditures for special examiners in the field has been $500,000 annually.

The Commissioner of Pensions came before the subcommittee that prepared this bill and informed us that it was necessary to have that full sum; that he had expended that amount during the last year and the previous year. When I inquired what the effect would be if an appropriation of only $250,000 should be made with a provision that the amount should be so distributed as not to create a deficiency, he said he would be obliged to call in one-half the special examiners in the field, and that he desired to know at the very beginning of the fiscal year whether that was to be the policy adopted by Congress. I then asked him what would be the effect upon the business of the Pension Office if that should be done. He replied that it must inevitably cause delay in the adjudication of pension cases because the office felt it its duty to refer to the examiners in the field a certain number of cases, and in order to keep up with the work as cases were thus referred, not less than $500,000 and the force that is now maintained in the field would be required.

When I inquired of him further as to what this special force in the field was doing, he replied that 80 per cent of this expenditure was being made directly to aid pensioners whose cases had not been satisfactorily made out, where the Pension Office desired further investigation, and therefore that in every respect it must be held to be in the interest of the pensioner. As to the other 20 per cent, he said that it was used in cases where fraud had been alleged or where suspicious circumstances had arisen, and that in every point of view the full appropriation which was asked by the Pension Office, and also asked by the Secretary of the Interior, was needed if pension adjudications are to go on at the rate at which they are now going on.

I concluded, therefore, that in view of the statements which had been made by the Commissioner of Pensions and by the Secretary of the Interior it was desirable that the full appropriation asked for should be given in the interest of the pensioner.

I may say in this connection that last year this amount was used, and the year before it was used; and while for three fiscal years preceding the amount used was not so large, yet prior to the enactment of the pension law of 1890 there was for two or three years substantially the same amount appropriated.

Mr. LACEY. Does the gentleman know the number of special examiners now in the field?

Mr. DINGLEY. Two hundred and sixty, or thereabouts, I think.

Mr. DOCKERY. Two hundred and sixty-two, I believe.

Mr. LACEY. You provide for 150 in addition.

Mr. DINGLEY. Those are included in the 262. Of this number 150 are appointed as special examiners and 112 are detailed from the Pension Office.

Mr. LACEY. One hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars is expressly set apart for the 150, besides the $500,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. One hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars is for salaries of the force of 150, and $500,000 for the compensation of the detailed force and for expenses.

Mr. LACEY. How many clerks will be dropped from the Pension Office if this bill as it stands should go into effect?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will come to that in a moment.

So much with reference to this appropriation for special examiners in the field. I now come to the reduction that has been made in the clerks of the Pension Office, and in order that the Committee of the Whole may act intelligently, I desire to present the substance of what was said to the subcommittee by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior recommend a reduction of 165 clerks on the rolls of the Pension Office, of which 51 have been for several years assigned to other bureaus in the Interior Department, making an actual reduction of 114 in the force of clerks in the Pension Office. When the fact was brought out that the reduction of the force in the Pension Office was to be net 114 I asked the Commissioner of Pensions whether such a reduction would not result in delay in the adjudication of cases. I also asked the same question of the Secretary of the Interior. Both replied that it would not. And when I inquired as to how this could be possible, their explanation was substantially this, that there are in the Pension Office a large number of clerks, some advanced in years, unable to perform their duties properly, and others who are inefficient; and that in some of the divisions there is an excess of force, and no room to expand; so that the work is not being done economically and efficiently; and in the judgment of these officers if this force should be reduced net 114 by the discharge of the inefficient as much work would be done as has been done in previous years.

In view of this statement, where the head of the Pension Office and the Secretary of the Interior have taken upon themselves the responsibility of officially informing the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and through the subcommittee and full committee of informing the House that the reduction of this force will tend to economy and to efficiency in that branch of the service, and that it will in no way result in retarding the adjudication of pension claims, I felt that the responsibility of the reduction must rest with the executive officers of the Government making such a recommendation.

It is but just to myself, however, that I should say, notwithstanding what the Commissioner of Pensions as well as the Secretary of the Interior says, that I can hardly conceive how it is possible that a reduction of 112 clerks in the Pension Office at this time will not result necessarily in increased delay in the adjudication of pension cases, although I bow to their judgment as responsible administrative officers, holding them responsible if the result shall be otherwise than what they affirm it will be. I felt it my duty to present to the committee the statements which were made to the subcommittee by the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. The proposed reduction of force meets the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; both the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine this question: Has not the Secretary of the Interior the power now under the law to remove any incompetent clerk without the action of Congress?

Mr. DINGLEY. Undoubtedly he has.

Mr. HAUGEN. Why, then, has he not exercised the power if he wishes to?

Mr. DINGLEY. If I understand his position, he takes the ground that if the appropriation by Congress for the old number of clerks is made he ought not to take the responsibility of reducing that number without some action on the part of Congress.

Mr. HULICK. Was it suggested that these clerks should be discharged for want of space or room in that building?

Mr. DINGLEY. That was suggested.

Mr. HULICK. I have seen it stated in the public prints that that was alleged as a reason.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was one of the reasons assigned. The Secretary and the Commissioner claimed that they were greatly crowded in the Pension Office at the present time. I may say that I called the attention of the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior to the fact that there are two rooms in the office now occupied by the Railroad Commission, who were placed in the Pension building by act of Congress, which might be utilized for the force of the Pension Bureau, and let the Commission go elsewhere.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask my colleague whether there are more clerks now in the office than there were two years ago?

Mr. DINGLEY. No more. Practically the same.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then how does it happen that it is more crowded now than it was two years ago?

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, that is a problem which gentlemen must solve for themselves.

Mr. PENCE. I suppose because a new Administration came in and spread itself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Was there any suggestion to the effect that the number of clerks might be reduced and finally we would be called upon for more clerks, filling up these places with somebody else?

Mr. HULICK. That is just the question I was about to ask the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. I asked the Commissioner if the reduction took place now, whether we might not be called upon at some time in the early future to supply their places? I inferred from his statements that, in his judgment, the force could be reduced year by year, as the business of the office had passed its highest point.

Mr. LACEY. Is not this the inauguration of a new policy on the part of Congress to indorse a discharge of over 100 clerks in the office adjudicating claims of pensioners and the employment of 150 new men to go out into the field to hunt up evidence against claimants? Is it not, I say, a Congressional indorsement of a policy which the House has heretofore condemned?

Mr. COOMBS. I do not think this symposium ought to go on, at least without some protest.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine if it is not true that we have reduced the number of clerks largely in the Record and Pension Division—

Mr. DINGLEY. We have reduced the force in the Record and Pension Division in the War Department.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Because the work has been accomplished?

Mr. DINGLEY. That is correct.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. And it is expected that some day or other the same will happen in the Pension Office proper, because the work will be done?

Mr. DINGLEY. In view of that inquiry it is proper to say that 300 clerks were dropped in the appropriations for the current year from the Record and Pension Division of the War Department in consequence of the near completion of the card system of noting the service of volunteers, and 50 more in the pending bill, making 350 in all. This extra force was authorized to complete the card system by the Fifty-first Congress, and its completion greatly aids in the adjudication of pension claims.

Mr. HUDSON. Is it not true that there are a number of old clerks in the Pension Bureau who have served faithfully a great many years, and that it ought to be the policy of the Government to maintain them there?

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no doubt that among the old clerks, who are perhaps not now fitted to do the usual amount of work, there are many who incurred disabilities in the war for the preservation of the Union.

Mr. HUDSON. And it would be neither patriotic nor just to turn them out at this time.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no doubt but that is the situation.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Is it not true that by reason of the fact that about 60 clerks have been taken out of the Pension Bureau and put into the field, the certificates which are being issued from time to time have been greatly reduced until now they average only about 200 per week, or about one-third as many as the roll is being reduced by reason of suspensions and deaths?

Mr. DINGLEY. Very likely that may be so, although the Commissioner claims that by sending these clerks into the field he is forwarding the work of the Pension Office more than would be possible if the clerks were in the office.

Mr. COOMBS. I would ask the gentleman from Maine whether it is not a fact that the easy cases which can be disposed of in the Pension Bureau having decreased in number and the difficult cases which require special investigation and help on the part of the examiners being in the majority at the present time—if it is not really facilitating the granting of pensions to send these special examiners into the field, in that way assisting the arrangement of complicated cases? That is the reason, I understand, why that is being done, and that involves a lowering of the force of the office.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no doubt that special examiners sent into the field for the purpose of aiding applicants for pensions who have not fully made out their cases, but who seem to be deserving and worthy, really tend to their benefit, if it is done in good faith.

Mr. COOMBS. Is not the gentleman from Maine really convinced that that is the case now?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think so at present, from the information I could obtain from the Commissioner of Pensions. I think at present 80 per cent of this force is being used to assist claimants believed to be deserving to make out their cases, and 20 per cent in the investigation of cases charged to be fraudulent or otherwise regarded as doubtful. At present about the same number of new cases are being sent to the field for examination as are investigated and reported by that force, and the work is about a year behind.

Mr. WALKER. When I made the remark a moment ago I did not understand the point. Do I understand that it is thought these 114 men will be efficient in the Interior Department proper, but because of their disabilities are not as efficient in this Department, and that for the purpose of keeping them on the roll for the service they have done in the Army and other meritorious service, this change is desired to be made? Is that the point?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, no! Fifty-one clerks were some time ago transferred to other bureaus or divisions in the Interior Department, and have since been continued on the Pension rolls.

Mr. WALKER. I am talking about the 114?

Mr. DINGLEY. Fifty-one clerks of the Pension Office have been in various other departments of the Interior Department for periods extending from one to five years. They have been carried on the Pension Office rolls, but are really doing work in other bureaus of the Interior Department. The pension fund is charged with them; but that is no new thing. That has been done for several years. But the other 114, whom the Commissioner proposes to drop, compose a part of the present force in the Pension Office. The 51 and the 114 make the 165 which are to be taken from the Pension rolls by this bill.

Mr. COOMBS. We are changing all that in the various departments.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. When the gentleman from Maine says that these clerks being authorized by law, neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Pensions felt like making the reduction except as authorized by Congress to do so, has not the committee reporting this bill run up against exactly the same condition existing in all the other Departments, when every Department finds itself compelled to carry, through influence of some kind or another, clerks who are not competent, who can only be gotten rid of by legislative enactment such as is proposed by this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. They can discharge them. There is nothing in the civil-service law that prevents the discharge of a clerk at any time. The civil-service law controls the method of appointment, not the method of discharge.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. They can, but they will not, and when they want to get rid of them they always come in and ask for such legislative enactment as this; not because they could not discharge them, but because they will not, as the pressure is so strong.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is true, in the Record and Pension Office that had in charge the preparation of the card of service of the volunteers, that the force was reduced by the appropriation bill of each year. There is no doubt about that at all.

Mr. PICKLER. The force in the Census Office was not discharged in that way.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Is it not true that a great many of these cases have been sent to these examiners and retained for a very long time, and so delayed the cases, while there was no necessity for sending them out at all?

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that these 51 clerks have been detailed to other departments of the Interior Department.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir. And the pending legislative bill places these 51 clerks on the rolls of the divisions where they are working, which should have been done before.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any question that these 51 clerks have been discharging their duty?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think not. That is, they have been discharging the duties of the divisions outside of the Pension Office to which they had been transferred, although they have been paid as a part of the Pension Office force.

Mr. PAYNE. How do they propose to supply the places where they are?

Mr. DINGLEY. They are to be kept where they now are.
Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. And their salaries carried on the rolls of the division in which they are working.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not take these 51 and have them fill, so far as they will, the places of the 114 clerks of the Pension Bureau? Why not call them back to the Pension Department and have them discharge their duties there?

Mr. DINGLEY. The reply of the Commissioner of Pensions would be that his office is now full and running over.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. In providing for these discharges is any discrimination made in favor of old veteran soldiers?

Mr. HUDSON. And their widows.

Mr. DINGLEY. As far as I could get any information from the cross-examination that I indulged in, I may say that the Commissioner of Pensions conveyed the impression that he intends to discharge men who are unable to do the work of the office without regard to the question of what their desert might be on other grounds. He claimed to put it on the ground of efficiency.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question? How will the Commissioner determine upon the clerks in his Department whom he will discharge, or is he to reduce the force hereafter at his own discretion? Has the committee any information as to that?

Mr. DINGLEY. We have no information as to that beyond what I have already stated.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. But the gentleman will recollect that this bill does not go into effect until the 1st of July.

Mr. DINGLEY. Inasmuch as this is an appropriation bill for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of July next, the Commissioner will not, I presume, drop clerks until then.

I desire to bring out these facts now, as I am to be absent from the city to-morrow and next day.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8767, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, after some consultation with the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I desire to ask unanimous consent that Wednesday be substituted for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, instead of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Wednesday be substituted for to-morrow for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Under the same conditions, Mr. Speaker, that we had with reference to Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. Under the same conditions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the hour of meeting to-morrow be half past 11 o'clock.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

COINAGE AT THE BRANCH MINT AT DENVER, COLO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the bill that was called up this morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1667) to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver, Colo.

The SPEAKER. This bill was read and considered this morning, and went over until this afternoon because the engrossed bill was not here. The question is upon the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurrent in and that a conference be requested.

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman make that motion as to all the amendments?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. As to all the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following conferees were appointed on the part of the House: Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky, Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, and Mr. HITT.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 8290) entitled "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan."

Mr. LACEY. I object to the recall of that bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Alabama has a conference report, and states that it will not take any time.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Have I not the right to offer this as a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will withhold that until the morning the Chair will look into it.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8165) authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through Indian reservations in the Indian Territory and the Territories of Oklahoma and New Mexico, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

LIFE-SAVING STATION NEAR CITY POINT, BOSTON HARBOR, MASS.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2595) to establish a life-saving station at or near City Point, Boston Harbor, Mass.; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8795) designating the officers before whom preliminary affidavits in entries of public lands may be executed; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported in lieu of the bill H. R. 8403 a bill (H. R. 8841) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

The bill H. R. 8403 was ordered to be laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 684) for the relief of the heirs of the late Mrs. Catherine P. Culver, disagreed to by the House, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PASCO, Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, and Mr. ALLEN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 261) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of the appropriations made in the river and harbor act of 1894 for St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2589) granting cannon to the Historical Museum, Des Moines, Iowa; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the Report on the Chicago Strike of June and July, 1904, of the United States Strike Commission, appointed by the President July 26, 1894, 10,500 extra copies, in paper covers, without appendixes, of which number 2,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the use of the Department of Labor; also 5,000 extra copies of said report with appendixes, in paper covers, of which number 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for the use of the Department of Labor.

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That during the last ten days of any session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by providing as provided for in the concurrent resolution adopted by the Fifty-third Congress, first session, November 1, 1893, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand when in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing it is deemed necessary.

SPECIAL RULES FOR NAVIGATION OF HARBORS, RIVERS, AND INLAND WATERS.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report.
The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, supplemental to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the word "eight" after the word "February," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title, and agree to the same.

GASTON A. ROBBINS,
J. P. PIGOTT,
W. J. WHITE,

Managers on the part of the House.

M. W. RANSOM,
STEPHEN M. WHITE,
WM. P. FRYE,

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The Senate has amended the title and added a section, section 4, providing that this bill shall not apply to the Great Lakes. These amendments were necessary, as the lake bill has become a law, and unless the Great Lakes are specially excluded from this bill, this bill might be construed to repeal the new lake act.

The Senate has added section 2 at the request of the maritime interests of New York and Philadelphia. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to define harbor limits, within which the local rules shall apply and outside of which the international rules shall apply.

Instead of reenacting all of section 4234, the Senate has reenacted part of it as section 3 of the bill. The part omitted is a requirement that a sailing vessel shall show a torch to an approaching steamer. Such torch should only be displayed from the stern when the steamer is overtaking the sailing vessel, as provided for in the international rules.

The Senate has stricken out on page 1, lines 7, 8, and 9, the provision that vessels coming from or departing for the high seas shall carry with them the international rules up to their wharves or from their wharves to sea. Maritime interests in New York, on consultation with Judge Addison Brown, an authority on collision cases, concluded that it is better to require seagoing vessels to change their rules and conform to the local regulations upon entering harbors, rather than to allow them, as first proposed, to come up to their wharves under the deep-sea rules, which would have involved two sets of rules in operation in the harbors.

The bill is not the best possible bill, but it is the best which can be done in the limited time of the session remaining, and it ought to pass as soon as possible, so that notice may be sent out by the Treasury to shipping interests as long before March 1 as possible.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move the adoption of the conference report.
The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. MARSHALL, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CABANISS, this week, on account of important business.

To Mr. WELLS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HOLMAN, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. TRACEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Daniel Leary, Fifty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Henry B. Wood, Fifty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII Mr. BELTZHOVER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported the bill (H. R. 8908) for the relief of Francis Kilburn, which, with the accompanying report (No. 1795), was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Also, a memorial of the joint assembly of the State of Minnesota, favoring the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people—to the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. KIEFER: A joint resolution by the legislature of the State of Minnesota, to prevent the passage of the railroad pooling bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a joint memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Minnesota, recommending the election of United States Senators by a popular vote—to the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. MOORE: A joint resolution of the legislature of Kansas, requesting Congress to cause a survey to be made to ascertain if it is possible to utilize the flood waters of the Missouri River to irrigate the Great Plains—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A memorial of the legislature of Minnesota, favoring the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people—to the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress.

Also, a joint resolution of the legislature of Minnesota protesting against the passage by Congress of the bill known as the Patterson bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TRACEY: A joint resolution of the New York legislature, urging the passage of the bills H. R. 56 and 6685—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota: A joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Minnesota, in favor of the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people—to the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELTZHOVER: A bill (H. R. 8844) for the relief of Cyrus Martin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 8845) granting a pension to George Machamer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEARD: A bill (H. R. 8846) to authorize the Postmaster-General to refund to Volley P. Hart, postmaster at Sedalia, Mo., moneys sent him by the Post-Office Department for disbursement and lost by the failure of the First National Bank of Sedalia—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STORER (by request): A bill (H. R. 8847) to appropriate $15,000 for the benefit of Eli Norris to enable him to construct certain steel-projectile guns—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WOLVERTON: A bill (H. R. 8848) to increase the pension of Harriet C. Gregg, widow of Col. John Irvin Gregg, from $30 to $50 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

Also, petition of 75 citizens of Forest, Ohio, praying for a constitutional amendment providing that neither Congress nor any State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana (by request): Petition of Hugh N. Clark and others, of Evansville, Ind., asking legislative amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Hugh N. Clark and others, of Evansville, Ind., asking legislation looking to change of the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of members of Archer Post, No. 28, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, asking an increase of pension for Samuel W. Scott, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, from $10 to $20 per month—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: Memorial of New York Chamber of Commerce in favor of an additional tug for the use of the supervisor of the harbor at New York and for more liberal appropriations for use of said supervisor—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, memorial of New York Chamber of Commerce in favor of the Morgan and Lodge bills for the reorganization of the consular and diplomatic service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 12, 1895.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCREARY, Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, and Mr. HITT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1667) to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver, Colo.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 814) for the relief of the representatives of Daniel C. Rodman, deceased, and others; and

A bill (H. R. 8165) authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through Indian reservations in the Indian Territory, and the Territories of Oklahoma and New Mexico, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the publication of 5,000 copies of the monthly synopsis of decisions of the Treasury Department and of the Board of General Appraisers at New York, under the customs and navigation laws, which are needed for the use of that Department and of the customs service throughout the United States and of other interested persons, and recommending that speedy action be taken on the joint resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, a report of the machinery and other materials used for experimenting in the manufacture of sugar in different parts of the country which have been furnished by the General Government, where such machinery and other materials have been used, where they are now, the cost of them, expense on that account, amounts sold, and the price of same; which, on the motion of Mr. PEPPER, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Charles M. Bruce, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the within copy is a true and complete transcript of the house memorial No. 1, of the eighteenth legislative assembly of Arizona, filed in this office the 5th day of February, A. D. 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix this 5th day of February, 1895.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES M. BRUCE,
Secretary of the Territory.

House memorial No. 1.—Protesting against the removal of troops from San Carlos, Ariz.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to represent to your honorable bodies—

That there are now about 4,000 Apache Indians located and near San Carlos, on the White Mountain Indian Reservation.

The effect upon these Indians by the abandonment of San Carlos as a military post is not realized by the War Department.

Heretofore the Indians have furnished nearly all of the fuel, wood, hay, and barley consumed by the military, besides finding a market for the various other products of their farms and articles of Indian manufacture.

These Indians have supplied the post of San Carlos yearly about—

1,300 cords of wood, at $6 a cord.....	$7,800
400 tons of hay, at $15 .....	6,000
400,000 pounds of barley, at $1.25 .....	5,000

18,800

And, besides, considerable additional revenues were derived from the sale and manufacture of Indian beadwork to the officers and soldiers, which was expended for the staple articles of food and clothing.

Nevertheless, with all of this revenue, these Indians have suffered for the necessities of life, and the majority have had to go hungry several days of each week.

When these Indians, who are only partly civilized and whose savage spirit is only subdued by the constant presence of the United States troops, will be without adequate food and clothing for their bodily sustenance and comfort, and by the withdrawal of the troops they will be driven to desperation by starvation and insufficiency of clothing and compelled to raid, plunder, and murder our citizens as in years past.

Now, therefore, we, your memorialists of the eighteenth legislative assembly, do earnestly assure your honorable bodies that the foregoing are facts readily proved, and in view of the alarming situation we earnestly protest against the removal of troops from San Carlos, and ask your honorable bodies to have the order rescinded.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Territory is hereby requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to our Delegate in Congress, and that our Delegate be, and is hereby, requested to use all honorable means to bring this matter to their earnest and favorable consideration.

J. H. CARPENTER, Speaker.
A. J. DORAN, President.

(Indorsed): I hereby certify that the within memorial originated in the house, and is known as house memorial No. 1.

CHAS. D. REPPY, Chief Clerk.

Filed in the office of the secretary of the Territory of Arizona this 5th day of February, A. D. 1895, at 10 a. m.

CHARLES M. BRUCE,
Secretary of Arizona.

By F. B. DEVEREUX, Asst.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Real Estate Exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation reorganizing the diplomatic and consular service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of Gloucester, Mass., praying for a more equitable arrangement of the salaries of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a letter from certain judges of the United States circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, stating the importance of passing a bill which shall give an additional circuit judge to that circuit and the circuit court of appeals. I move that the letter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I also present telegrams from the bars of Nashville, Memphis, and Knoxville, Tenn., recommending the creation of a third judge for the sixth judicial circuit. I move that the telegrams be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a petition signed by express companies of Chicago and by a large number of other citizens, including bankers, praying Congress to enact some legislation affording protection to life and property upon trains, especially with reference to the conduct of the mails and express packages and so on, for the prevention and punishment of train wrecking and robbery, including Federal offenses of all kinds. The petition is somewhat lengthy, and I shall not undertake to read it. I ask that it be referred to the proper committee. I am not sure but that the subject has been heretofore referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask the Senator from Connecticut if that is not the case.

Mr. PLATT. What is the subject?

Mr. CULLOM. It is in reference to legislation respecting train robbery, etc. Is that before your committee?

Mr. PLATT. I think not.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of Comstock Lodge No. 332, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of South Norwalk, Conn., praying for the passage of House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Cherokee Indian Citizenship Association of the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, praying for the enactment of legislation whereby the controversy now existing between members of that association and the Cherokee Nation may be adjusted, and the claimants have a right to participate in the lands and moneys secured by treaty stipulations to the whole Cherokee people, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUAY presented petitions of 240 citizens of Pittsburg; of 79 citizens of Cowansburg; of sundry citizens of Adamsburg; of 50 citizens of Hoboken; of 300 citizens of Philadelphia; of 70 citizens of Palo Alto; of 40 citizens of New Bethlehem; of 57 citizens of Rundell; of 159 citizens of New Castle; of 200 citizens of Bristol, and of 136 citizens of Bennett, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States," which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of 146 citizens of Pittsburg, of 70 citizens of Steelton, of 189 citizens of Harrisburg, of 130 citizens of Erie, of 50 citizens of Hoboken, of 45 citizens of Dempseytown, of 91 citizens of Bellevue, of 40 citizens of New Bethlehem, of 159 citizens of New Castle, of 136 citizens of Bennett, of 130 citizens of Montoursville, of 57 citizens of Rundell, and of 150 citizens of South Fork, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prevent the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, S. C., favoring the provisions contained in the recent message of the President, and praying for the enactment of legislation carrying out his views; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Associated Banks of Charleston, S. C., favoring the recommendation of the President for the issuance of 3 per cent bonds; which, with the accompanying letter from the chairman of the board, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of the Platner & Porter Paper Manufacturing Company and three other business firms of Unionville, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to secure the payment of the sugar bounty on the crops of 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of Iron Moulders' Union No. 183, of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Tupper Plain; of 60 citizens of Syracuse, and of 60 citizens of Brookville, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prevent the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 60 citizens of Brookville, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lafayette, Ind., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 2523, to regulate the salaries and mode of removal of postal employees; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of 40 citizens of Red Key, Ind., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prevent the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 40 citizens of Red Key, Ind., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLEN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against the issuance of interest-bearing bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BATE presented petitions of members of the bar of Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., praying for the appointment of a third circuit judge for the sixth judicial circuit; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of the Travelers' Protective Association of Atlanta, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation to permit the railroads of the United States to issue interchangeable mileage books and to give special privileges of free or excess baggage with such mileage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Central City Lodge, No. 8, of Macon, Ga., praying for the passage of House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which was ordered to lie on the table.

FINANCIAL STATEMENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present an abstract of reports made to the Comptroller of the Currency, showing the condition of the national banks in the United States at the close of business on Wednesday, the 19th day of December, 1894, the last report of the lawful money reserve of the national banks as shown by the reports of their condition at the close of business on December 19, 1894, and also a statement showing the paper currency of each denomination outstanding January 31, 1895. I move that the statements be printed as one document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 20) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States, to report it adversely, with leave to file a report at another time, and with leave to the minority of the committee to file their views.

Mr. TURPIE. I present the views of the minority of the committee in favor of the joint resolution just reported adversely. I ask that the same be filed, and that they be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Territories, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6852) for the relief of William E. Bond, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6417) to pension Mary E. Hamilton, widow of David Hamilton, soldier in Indian war of 1818, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1864) for the relief of George W. Harbaugh, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report in order to save all rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1027) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2377) for the relief of H. F. Menough, late postmaster at Rock Springs, Wyo., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER. For the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who, owing to indisposition, is not able to be in the Senate, I report back favorably from the Committee on Pensions, without amendment, the bill (S. 1229) granting a pension to Bridget Devine, and submit a report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2066) for the relief of Charles A. Edwards, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1980) authorizing the establishment of a free port at Fort Pond Bay or elsewhere in the waters of Long Island, in the State of New York, to report it back with amendments. I am instructed to state that all of the members of the committee do not consider themselves obligated to support the bill, but a majority thought that it ought to be reported for the consideration of the Senate. I ask that certain exhibits, which are marked, shall be printed, and that the bill go to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. BUTLER on this day, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2663) to provide for the erection of a public building in the cities of Winston-Salem, N. C., reported it with amendments.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8727) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2642) providing for the issue of bonds, the coinage of silver, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and amending the title so as to read: "A bill providing for the unrestricted coinage of silver, and for other purposes."

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendments be read.

Mr. HILL. I should like to have the bill read if it is in order. If not, I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the bill and amendments read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will state to Senators that it is the bill introduced by me some time ago with the proposition of the committee that all of the bill be stricken out except section 9, which is retained with certain amendments. I suggest that that section be read with the proposed amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. As this is a very important measure, I think the Senate and the country ought to understand exactly what is proposed, and therefore I ask that the bill may be read and that the amendments also may be read.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly the original bill need not be read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Rhode Island desire to have the whole bill read, including the part proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we ought to know exactly what is being done. Therefore I desire that the bill may be read and that the amendments of the committee may be read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. For a proper understanding of this matter, I should like to know whether the Secretary is reading the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance. Is it not the bill as introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] some time ago?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The bill as reported back simply proposes to strike out all of the bill except section 9. The Senator from Rhode Island asked for the reading of the entire bill, and after the bill is read I suppose the Secretary will announce that the proposition of the committee is to strike out what he is now reading and to pass only section 9, which provides for the unrestricted coinage of silver.

Mr. ALDRICH. My purpose in calling for the reading of the bill was to show that all those portions of the bill which have any merit from my standpoint have been stricken out by the committee and that one of the objectionable sections is reported by the committee favorably. I have no objection to withdrawing my request if the Senator from Arkansas desires that the whole bill shall not be read.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not object at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it had better be printed in the RECORD, and that the section which is reported favorably be read.

Mr. PLATT. Let the Secretary read the ninth section as reported by the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. For economy of time I hope that course will be taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the whole bill ought to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was my suggestion, that it all be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The bill as introduced by Mr. JONES of Arkansas January 23, 1895, and referred to the Committee on Finance, is as follows:

A bill (S. 2042) providing for the issue of bonds, the coinage of silver, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc. That authority is hereby given to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of the United States to the amount of $500,000,000, coupon or registered, at the option of the buyer, payable, principal and interest, in coin of the present standard value, and bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable quarterly, and not to be sold at less than par, the bonds to mature thirty years from date, and be redeemable at the option of the Government after twenty years; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to use the proceeds of the sale of said bonds to defray current expenses of the Government, and for the redemption of United States legal-tender notes and of Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, as hereinafter provided. That said bonds shall be of the denominations of $20 and $50, and multiples of said sums, respectively, at the option of the purchasers thereof, and shall be in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and said bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties to the United States, and from all taxation by or under State, municipal, or other local authority, and said bonds and coupons shall be made payable at the Treasury of the United States. Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall offer any of the bonds herein authorized for sale, he shall advertise the same and authorize subscriptions therefor to be made at the Treasury Department, and at any subtreasury, and any bank in which United States bonds are deposited, it being the intention of this act to give full and free opportunity for general subscription, and payment therefor may be made in gold coin, but the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, accept in payment therefor United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890.

SEC. 2. That national banking associations are hereby authorized and permitted to issue circulating notes to the par value of United States bonds deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury, and the tax on such circulation is hereby reduced to one-fourth of 1 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July of each year.

SEC. 3. That section 9 of the act approved July 13, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and hereafter no national banking association, continuing to transact business as such, shall retire the whole or any part of its circulation without written authority therefor from the Secretary of the Treasury; and so much of section 12 of the said act as authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurers of the United States and to issue certificates therefor, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, but this repeal shall not in any manner affect the validity or use of such certificates heretofore issued.

SEC. 4. That hereafter national banking associations desiring to retire the whole or any part of their circulating notes shall, if so required by the Secretary of the Treasury, deposit with the Treasurer of the United States gold coin equal to the amount of notes to be retired, and each of said banking associations shall at all times keep on deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, in gold coin, a sum equal to 5 per cent of its outstanding circulating notes, and the same sum shall be held and used for the redemption of such notes, and for no other purpose.

SEC. 5. That not exceeding one-half of the lawful reserves on account of deposits now required by law to be kept by national banking associations may consist of bonds of the United States issued under this act, the same to be estimated at their par value.

SEC. 6. That no national bank note shall be hereafter issued of a denomination less than $10, and all notes of such banks now outstanding of denominations less than that sum shall be, as rapidly as practicable, taken up, redeemed, and canceled and other notes of $10 and larger denominations shall be issued in their stead under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds as hereinbefore provided, to cancel and destroy all United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, of denominations less than $10, and to issue a like amount of silver certificates in denominations of $1, $2, and $5, which said certificates shall be payable to bearer in silver, it being the intention of this act that neither the Treasury Department nor national banks shall issue or keep in circulation any notes other than silver certificates of a less denomination than $10; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, at the request of any holder, to receive Treasury notes and United States legal-tender notes, and to issue in lieu thereof silver certificates in denominations less than $10, and he shall cancel and retire the legal-tender notes and Treasury notes so received.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, out of the proceeds arising from the sale of the bonds hereinbefore authorized, and from any surplus revenues, to redeem and cancel, and not reissue, said United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes whenever and as fast as the aggregate circulation of United States legal-tender notes, Treasury notes, silver certificates, and national bank notes shall be in excess of the aggregate amount of United States notes, Treasury notes, national bank notes, and silver certificates in circulation at the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 9. That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive at any United States mint, from any citizen of the United States, silver bullion of standard fineness, and coin the same into silver dollars of 412 grains each. The seigniorage on the said bullion shall belong to the United States, and shall be the difference between the coinage value thereof and the price of the bullion in London on the day the deposit is made, and all expenditures for coinage done under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of said seigniorage; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver to the depositors of such bullion standard silver dollars equal in amount to the price thereof as aforesaid; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the Treasury, certificates in denominations of less than $10 may be issued thereon, in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations, and employ such clerical and other force as may be necessary to carry this act into effect, and a sum sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Section 9 will be read as proposed to be amended by the committee.

Mr. HALE. I take it the Senator from Arkansas does not propose any action at this time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to have immediate action if there is no objection.

Mr. HALE. Of course if action is to be taken it ought to be read, but if no action is to be taken at this time it is just as well to have it printed in the RECORD and printed in regular form. Then we shall all have it before us without using up the time in the reading.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to have unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the section reported favorably be read and that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that the Secretary read the bill as reported.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Finance report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive at any United States mint, from any citizen of the United States, silver bullion of standard fineness, and coin the same into silver dollars of 412 grains each. The seigniorage on the said bullion shall belong to the United States, and shall be the difference between the coinage value thereof and the market price of the bullion in New York on the day the deposit is made, and all expenditures for coinage done under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of said seigniorage; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver to the depositors of such bullion standard silver dollars equal in amount to the price thereof as aforesaid; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the Treasury, certificates may be issued thereon, in the manner now provided by law.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill providing for the unrestricted coinage of silver, and for other purposes."

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say in justice to the minority of the committee that this bill is reported by a bare majority of 1 vote. In justice to the minority of the committee I should state that the opposition to the bill as reported was very decided, and that the majority was simply 1 vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It may be fair for me to state also that the advocacy of the bill as reported was very decided by a majority of 1 vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the Senator from Arkansas desires that the bill shall be taken up for immediate consideration. So far as I am concerned personally, and I am now speaking only for myself, I am quite willing that it shall by unanimous consent take the place of the bankruptcy bill as the unfinished business, to be taken up whenever—

Mr. GEORGE. I object to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. To be taken up for discussion whenever the appropriation bills are not before the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. To be taken up and voted on without debate.

Mr. CALL. I object to further discussion. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to further debate. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that if the bill can be passed now without debate I think the Senator from Florida will withdraw his objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hardly think that is possible this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator would object to that himself.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I should.

INCOME RETURNS FOR 1894.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894, to report it back with certain amendments and ask its immediate consideration by the Senate. It is a matter that must be determined at once if acted upon at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CALL. I ask leave to submit a resolution at this time, to be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida when the pending business is disposed of.

Mr. VEST. I think when the Senate hears the nature of the joint resolution they will agree that it ought to be acted upon now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendments reported by the committee may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution the following:

Be it further resolved, That in computing incomes under said act the amounts necessarily paid for fire insurance premiums and for ordinary repairs upon any real estate shall be deducted from the rents accrued or received from such real estate.

And also resolved, That in computing incomes under said act the amounts received as dividends upon the stock of any corporation, company, or association shall not be included, in case such dividends are also liable to the tax of 2 per cent upon the net profits of said corporation, company, or association, although such tax may not have been actually paid by said corporation, company, or association at the time of making returns by the person, corporation, or association receiving such dividends.

Be it further resolved, That no taxpayer shall be required in his, her, or its annual return under said act to answer any interrogatories except as specifically provided in said act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to see the joint resolution in print.

Mr. HILL and Mr. MORRILL. It is all right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It may be all right, but I should like to see it in print. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the consideration of the joint resolution, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] January 29, 1895, for the appointment of a commission of not less than three engineers of the United States Army to inquire and determine whether the bridge across the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania would be an unreasonable obstruction to the commerce of the river, to report in lieu thereof a joint resolution which I ask may be considered at this time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a commission of not less than three engineers, United States Army, which shall convene at Philadelphia and inquire and determine whether the bridge across the Delaware River as projected under Senate bill No. 1950, second session Fifty-third Congress, entitled "A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge, and to establish such bridge as a military and post road," approved June 14, 1894, would be an unreasonable obstruction to the commerce of the river, and shall report to him its findings; and that until the said commission has made its report the work of constructing said bridge shall not be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. ADY.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Joseph W. Ady, the contestant of the seat of JOHN MARTIN, a Senator from Kansas, the sum of $2,000, in full of expenses incurred by the said Joseph W. Ady in his said contest.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2747) defining the qualifications of chief inspector and deputy inspectors of plumbing in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2748) to authorize the Wisconsin and New Duluth Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the St. Louis River, between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PASCO submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing for survey and preparing of plans for improvement of Tampa Bay and preliminary examination; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CAREY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GORDON, it was Ordered, That the papers filed in the Fifty-second Congress relating to the claim of Mildred P. Poulain, widow of Dr. Thomas N. Poulain, for relief, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, under the rules thereof.

NEW YORK POST-OFFICES.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate information as to post-offices in the State of New York in the following particulars:

First. The number of Presidential post-offices.

Second. The number of other post-offices.

Third. The number of postmasters in Presidential offices who were appointed by President Harrison and who were permitted by President Cleveland to serve out their full terms, and the number removed for cause before the expiration of their terms.

Fourth. The number of postmasters in Presidential offices appointed by President Harrison whose terms have not yet expired, and the number whose terms have expired for which no nominations have been made.

Fifth. What policy has been adopted by the present Administration in reference to postmasters of offices (other than Presidential offices) who are appointed for no fixed term, whether they have been removed at pleasure or allowed as a general rule to serve a term of four years; the number of such postmasters appointed by the preceding Administration who are still in office, and the number who were permitted to serve out a full period of four years, but whose successors have been appointed, and the number who have served such period who are still in office.

REGULATIONS TO PREVENT COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to inform the Senate what foreign nations have adopted or refused to adopt the regulations for preventing collisions at sea which were directed to be followed by all public and private vessels of the United States upon the high seas and in all waters connected therewith navigable by seagoing vessels by act of Congress approved August 19, 1890, and proclaimed by the President on July 13, 1894; also that he transmit to the Senate all information he may have as to such matter, together with the correspondence had between the United States and other Governments in regard thereto.

CLAIM FOR SEIZURE OF COTTON.

Mr. McLaurin submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 2222, entitled "A bill for the relief of the owners of certain cotton shipped from Natchez, Miss., in August, 1863, on the steamer Gladiator be, and the same hereby is, referred to the Court of Claims for examination and report under the provisions of section 14 of the act approved March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.'"

PREVENTION OF COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. WHITE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert the word "eighth" after the word "February;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title, and agree to the same.

M. W. RANSOM,
STEPHEN M. WHITE,
WILLIAM P. FRYE,
GASTON A. ROBBINS,
J. P. PIGOTT,
W. J. WHITE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 11th instant approved and signed the act (S. 445) changing the name of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ISSUE AND SALE OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate forthwith, with its action thereon, Senate resolution (Miscellaneous Document No. 3) adopted on the 5th day of December, 1894, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire and report whether the acts of the Secretary of the Treasury, in issuing and selling United States bonds in the months of February and December, 1894, were authorized by any act or acts of Congress then in force.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think that the resolution I offered, and which was under discussion yesterday, has precedence in regular order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That resolution, I think, went to the Calendar under the action of the Senate yesterday morning.

Mr. CALL. There was no action of the Senate on the resolution yesterday; but I understood unanimous consent was given that it should not lose its place.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No. The resolution was not taken up yesterday in the morning hour, but the Post-Office appropriation bill was taken up on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions in the order in which they are reached, and the resolution of the Senator from Kansas was first upon the list, and was so laid before the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the resolution may be adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the resolution may be read, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. CALL. I submit that the resolution which I offered has precedence in time, if I am not mistaken, over the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is governed by the record as shown at the desk, and not by the recollection of Senators.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest to the Senator who has charge of the resolution, and to the Senate, that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is suffering with a heavy cold and is not able to be in his seat this morning. I therefore suggest that the resolution stand over until he shall come in. He should be present if the resolution is to be discussed.

Mr. PEPPER. I asked that the resolution might be adopted. I did not ask for its discussion.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator to let the resolution stand over on the ground that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is absent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GORMAN. Let us have the resolution read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER on the 9th instant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. The suggestion has been made that the resolution ought not to be considered this morning, because the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is not here. The resolution is, in a certain sense, a reflection upon the Judiciary Committee for not having reported the resolution formerly submitted by the Senator from Kansas, and certainly the chairman of the committee is the proper person to reply.

Mr. STEWART. Has the Senator any objection to my making a few remarks about the resolution before it passes away?

Mr. HOAR. I should like the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to hear the Senator's remarks.

Mr. STEWART. He can read them in the RECORD

Mr. PLATT. We are always glad to listen to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. Then I should like to make a few remarks.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not want the floor taken away from me just yet. I have no objection to the resolution going over, provided it does not lose its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STEWART and Mr. GORMAN. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. PEPPER. Then, Mr. President, I desire to be heard upon the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss this resolution, and I expect now to occupy but a very short time. I think I appreciate as highly as any member of the Senate the importance of promptness in our action during the remainder of the present session. We are very much pressed, but in view of the fact that, first, there seemed to be a disposition to discuss the resolution, and, second, objection to its going over and retaining its place, I feel it my duty to call attention to my reasons for offering the resolution, for, as was suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], it may seem to be a reflection on the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. President; I have charged upon this floor once before, and repeat the charge now—for that is the foundation of this proceeding—that the Treasury Department ever since 1878 has been deceiving the people, whether deliberately and intentionally or not I do not care to say. It began in the year 1878 and continued until the Administration of President Harrison, and in the first message of that distinguished man he called attention to the condition of our finances. Why did not the President begin in 1865, at the close of the great war? The policy adopted at that time has been followed until the present. During the administration of Mr. Secretary Foster a statement was sent out to the people apparently upon request—it was used as a campaign document—showing and intending to show that there never had been in circulation any paper money excepting the greenbacks and demand notes, throwing out of the calculation utterly all the compound-interest notes, all the 7-30 notes, and every other class of our paper currency excepting only the greenbacks. Our Treasury reports since 1878 have continually been made up upon that idea.

In addition to that, Mr. President, we find that now, in the reports which are being issued from day to day, in place of asserting that the silver bullion in the Treasury is worth its coin value, the Secretary of the Treasury conveys the idea that we purchased it at its market value, and that that is the only value which it can have in making up our accounts. There are about $134,000,000 of silver bullion in the Treasury, as the report shows, whereas in fact the coinage value of the bullion is perhaps 25 per cent more than that—yes, about 33 per cent more than that. So, if the actual coinage value of the silver bullion now in the Treasury were given it would be about $175,000,000 instead of $134,000,000.

I might go on and enumerate a large number of other instances, but I shall not take time now to do it, wherein, in my judgment, the Treasury Department has been deceiving the public concerning our finances. Last year, in January, the Secretary of the Treasury came to Congress, honest man that he was, and asked permission by statute authorizing him to purchase gold with bonds, but Congress denied him that privilege. Then, believing it was his duty, and acting under the advice of the President of the United States, to maintain the gold reserve, he assumed authority, and there were no objections raised in this body, and, so far as I know, none in the other body, excepting those which were raised by members of the party to which I belong. I called attention to the fact at that time, and so did my colleagues; and when the present Congress convened, upon the first day of the session I presented the following resolution to the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire and report whether the acts of the Secretary of the Treasury in issuing and selling United States bonds in the months of February and December, 1894, were authorized by any act or acts of Congress then in force.

That resolution was offered on the 3d day of December, 1894, more than two months ago. No report on it has yet been made by the committee. It is not my business nor is it my desire or intention to even intimate what reasons, if any, the committee have had for not acting upon the resolution, but their nonaction, or at least their neglect or failure to report the resolution, is in entire accord with the conduct and the management of the Treasury Department during the last eighteen years.

I assume, Mr. President, that the committee did not regard the subject-matter of the resolution as worth considering, and therefore it was not reported. Hence I do not intend any disrespect to the committee whatever, because that has been the custom and has been the practice of committees of this body as to all matters of this kind. I remember when I introduced a resolution during our long debate in 1893, asking the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate whether the national banks of the country were being conducted in violation of law or not, that Senators upon both sides of the Chamber arose and with some feeling asserted that it was an impertinence upon the part of the Senator from Kansas to ask a question of this kind; that during times of great stress and emergency public officers ought not to be expected to obey the law fully and in detail, and that there ought to be large discretion allowed.

So it is now. The Secretary of the Treasury and his chief are selling the public credit upon the open market. They have even gone so far, Mr. President, latterly, since this resolution was presented to the Senate, as to confer privately with foreigners, or with the agents of foreign banking institutions, trading the credit of the people of the United States to our ancient enemy at three-fourths of 1 per cent—yes, nearly 1 per cent—more than the last bonds were negotiated for, and at 1½ per cent more than the bonds of the city of New York are now carrying; and this, too, in the face of the fact that members of this body and members of the House of Representatives—if I am not out of order in referring to that—have been asserting from the beginning and are now asserting, that the sale of these bonds is without authority of law.

I spent some time in discussing this resolution the second day after it was introduced for the very purpose of showing, and I thought that I did show conclusively, that the President and his Secretary were acting outside of the law. I feel quite certain that the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] took the same view of the subject I did, at least measurably.

During the pendency of an appropriation bill at the last session of the Fifty-second Congress the Senator from Ohio proposed an amendment authorizing the Secretary to sell bonds of either of the classes provided for in the refunding act of 1870 or bonds bearing 3 per cent interest at his discretion. Evidently it was the belief of that distinguished Senator at the time that there was no authority upon the part of the Treasury Department, or at least that the people would question such authority, to issue bonds under existing circumstances without some fresh authority from the National Legislature. It was under those circumstances that I asked for the adoption of the resolution in the utmost good faith. I remember stating, while discussing the resolution, that if acts of this kind had been committed in the earlier years of the Republic the guilty officers would have been impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors. I believe so now. We are drifting along from day to day and month to month and year to year, allowing the officers in charge of great public affairs to use their own judgment and override the law and the Constitution, and it is time the brakes were put on.

Senators—and though there are different grades of Senators, the same as there are of common people, yet a Senator is presumed to be a man of some responsibility—and Members of the House of Representatives charge that these acts are done without authority of law. Now I come into the Senate as a Senator, upon my responsibility as a Senator, and I ask our Judiciary Committee to give us their opinion as to whether these acts are in accordance with the law or, to put it in a more genteel form perhaps, whether there was any statute existing at the time authorizing these acts upon the part of the officers.

The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate of the United States is composed of distinguished men, men of rare learning in law, of judicial training, and great ability, standing high not only as lawyers and jurists, but as statesmen. Their opinion would be worth a great deal to the people of the country. It would be very satisfying to the public mind if that committee should come in and by a large majority or unanimously say that in their opinion the President and Secretary of the Treasury were justified not only by the exigencies, but by the letter of the law in issuing bonds. I confess that it would go a great way toward satisfying my mind—a great way, indeed—for I should feel it my duty to yield to their superior judgment upon a matter of this kind. The resolution of itself was very important, sufficiently so to justify its existence, and that is the reason why it was offered.

Now I ask that the committee report the resolution. If they are not going to take any action upon it, let them say so and let them say why they will not take any action, if they wish to. All that the resolution before the Senate asks is that the committee shall report to the Senate the result of their action upon it. It is no reflection. It was not in my mind at all to reflect upon the honor, the integrity, or the industry of the committee.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Undoubtedly before the Judiciary Committee would act upon the resolution they would desire the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States. I am not now called upon, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, to explain the precise reason why a report has not yet been made, but I think I can say that undoubtedly the committee would be disposed to ask the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire by what authority the committee would ask the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. HILL. Any committee of the House of Representatives or the Senate can ask the opinion of a law officer of the Government. He can give it or not as he pleases. Undoubtedly, sir, he would give it. I simply suggest to the Senator from Kansas whether all practical purposes would not be served by an amendment of the resolution, requesting the Attorney-General to give to the Senate his opinion.

Mr. PEPPER. No; I do not want the opinion of the Attorney-General. I regard my own opinion upon this point as good as that of the Attorney-General.

Mr. HILL. I have nothing whatever to say after that statement.

Mr. PEPPER. I have no doubt, sir, that I have given the subject more attention than either the Attorney-General or the Senator from New York. I have no doubt that I have given it not only more careful consideration, but more intelligent consideration.

Mr. President, I wish the opinion of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. I will state for the information of the Senator from New York that I was caught in that trap once before with respect to the resolution to which I referred a few minutes ago, asking the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate whether the business of the national banks was being conducted in violation of law. The resolution was referred to the Finance Committee over my objection, and it was done, as I afterwards learned, for the very purpose of submitting it not to the Secretary of the Treasury, but to the Comptroller of the Currency, a gentleman who, in connection with his official duties, has an attachment that suggests to him the propriety of going to banquets and meetings of bankers for the purpose of praising and lauding the national-banking system of the country and suggesting that the national banks ought to be continued for the purpose of regulating the speculative tendencies of the common people of the country. In that case the resolution was referred to the Comptroller of the Currency, and finally a statement came in here that he had no official information that there had been any violations of law in the matter referred to.

We all understood that very well. We knew that the Comptroller had no official information. We knew that he did not want any official information. We knew that the Secretary of the Treasury had no official information. We believed that he did not want any. We knew that the Senate of the United States had no official information upon that point. It was very evident from what occurred upon this floor that the Senate did not want any official information upon that particular point. So the resolution was side tracked in that manner.

Now, the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] suggests that it would be good policy and he has no doubt the committee would be anxious to refer the matter to the Attorney-General. The statutes are plain. The statutes were made by the Congress of the United States, and this body, if any body in the world, ought to understand their meaning. This much in reference to the object of offering the resolution in the first place and of offering this one.

I have prepared a good deal of matter by way of discussing this question further and bringing out points that I did not bring out in the argument before, but I shall not take up the time of the Senate to do so. As I said in the beginning, had it not been for objections upon one side or another I should not have said a word upon the resolution at all. That is all I care to say just now.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5740) incorporating the Society of American Florists.

The message also announced that the House has disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6595) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOSES, Mr. STALLINGS, and Mr. LOUDENSLAGER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, and agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. BAILEY, and Mr. RAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in the State of Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 113) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the flags of certain regiments of Michigan volunteer infantry.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing that the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions, as provided for in the concurrent resolution adopted by the Fifty-third Congress, first session, November 1, 1893, be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions be written by hand when, in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing, it is deemed necessary, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 7839) to bridge the Newark Bay; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 261) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of the appropriation made in the river and harbor act of 1894 for St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor.

The message further requested the Senate to return to the House the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan, the same having been adversely reported by the Committee of the Whole and by error passed by the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 6244) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jacob Eckert;

A bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1890; and

A bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the postal service for the next fiscal year.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8273) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Nebraska give way to me for a few moments?

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield for a few moments.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the message of the President of date February 8, 1895.

To my mind it is a very extraordinary document, issued as it seems to me upon the face of it, without a due examination of the law of Congress. It is stated in the message among other things as follows:

As a precaution, therefore, against the failure of timely legislative aid through Congressional action, cautious preparations have been pending to employ to the best possible advantage, in default of better means, such executive authority as may, without additional legislation, be exercised for the purpose of reinforcing and maintaining in our Treasury an adequate and safe gold reserve.

I submit that the President has no authority of law to take any measure whatever to obtain or keep a gold reserve. He further states:

Therefore, in pursuance of section 3700 of the Revised Statutes, the details of an arrangement have this day been concluded with parties abundantly able to fulfill their undertaking, whereby bonds of the United States, authorized under the act of July 14, 1875, payable in coin thirty years after their date, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to the amount of a little less than $62,400,000, are to be issued for the purchase of gold coin amounting to a sum slightly in excess of $65,000,000, to be delivered to the Treasury of the United States, which sum, added to the gold now held in our reserve, will so restore such reserve as to make it amount to something more than $100,000,000.

Such a premium is to be allowed to the Government upon the bonds as to fix the rate of interest upon the amount of gold realized at 3½ per cent per annum. At least one-half of the gold to be obtained is to be supplied from abroad, which is a very important and favorable feature of the transaction.

The privilege is especially reserved to the Government to substitute at par within ten days from this date, in lieu of the 4 per cent coin bonds, other bonds in terms payable in gold and bearing only 3 per cent interest, if the issue of the same should in the meantime be authorized by the Congress.

The arrangement thus completed, which, after careful inquiry, appears in present circumstances and considering all the objects desired to be the best attainable, develops such a difference in the estimation of investors between bonds made payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold in favor of the latter, as is represented by three-fourths of a cent in annual interest. In the agreement just concluded the annual saving in interest to the Government, if 3 per cent gold bonds should be substituted for 4 per cent coin bonds under the privilege reserved, would be $330,150, amounting in thirty years, or at the maturity of the coin bonds, to $16,174,770.

Before I discuss this question further I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a clerical error in the President's message. He refers in the clause I have just read to the act of July 14, 1875. I telephoned to Mr. Thurber, the President's private secretary, stating that there was no such act, that Congress was not in session at that time, and that the President must refer to the refunding act of July 14, 1870, or resumption act of January 14, 1875, and asked him for an explanation. I received in reply from Mr. Thurber the following:

Clerical error; should read "January 14, 1875."

That would be the resumption act.

Now, the President says, in the paragraph I have read, that this action is taken in pursuance of section 3700 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

Sec. 3700. The Secretary of the Treasury may purchase coin with any of the bonds or notes of the United States, authorized by law, at such rates and upon such terms as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest.

It will be observed that he can only sell bonds which are authorized by law. There are no bonds authorized by law except under the act of January 14, 1875. The refunding act of July 14, 1870, contains this provision:

But nothing in this act or in any other law now in force shall be construed to authorize any increase whatever of the bonded debt of the United States.

So the act of July 14, 1870, prohibited the sale of bonds which would increase the public debt. That act was executed. The public debt was funded without any increase or decrease nominally. So that all laws which existed previous to that time, authorizing the issuance of bonds which would increase the public debt, were by that act repealed. The reference to that section now can have no bearing upon the power of the President, and he must fall back upon whatever authority may be found in the resumption act.

I can hardly conceive why or for what purpose any reference should be made to section 3700 of the Revised Statutes. So far as that had any power at all in connection with this matter it has been repealed.

I shall again call the attention of the Senate to the language of the resumption act, which is the only act under which there can be any possible claim for the authority to issue bonds. That portion of the act relating to this particular matter reads as follows:

And on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin—the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding, on their presentation for redemption at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50. And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues, from time to time, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid.

Mark the language, "coin"—

Then the resumption act authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell bonds of the description contained in the act of July 14, 1870, to the extent necessary to obtain coin to provide for the redemption of the greenbacks which were outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1879. That is the full extent of the authority. Those bonds are, by the refunding act of July 14, 1870, made payable in coin of the then standard value, which consisted of gold dollars of 25½ grains and of silver dollars of 412½ grains of standard silver.

So the bonds issued under the resumption act were payable, the same as all other bonds, in silver as well as gold. That question has been before Congress, as I showed a few days ago, and has repeatedly been brought to the attention of the Senate; and a resolution was passed by more than a two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress, declaring that all the bonds issued by the United States are payable in silver coin as well as gold coin. There can be no question as to that.

The President further says:

Of course there never should be a doubt in any quarter as to the redemption in gold of the bonds of the Government which are made payable in coin. Therefore the discrimination in the judgment of investors between our bond obligations payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold is very significant. It is hardly necessary to suggest that whatever may be our views on the subject, the sentiments of preferences of those with whom we must negotiate in disposing of our bonds for gold are not subject to our dictation.

I have only to add that in my opinion the transaction herein detailed for the information of the Congress promises better results than the efforts previously made in the direction of effectively adding to our gold reserve through the sale of bonds; and I believe it will tend, as far as such action can, in present circumstances, to meet the determination expressed in the law repealing the silver-purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, and that, in the language of such repealing act, the arrangement made will aid our efforts to "insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts."

The quotation contained in the last paragraph from the act extorted from Congress in the extra session to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act is unfortunate. The phrase "insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts" is wrenched from the context and its meaning distorted. The paragraph of the law in which that phrase is found reads as follows:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money of equal extrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts.

What is there in this law to authorize the President of the United States to refuse to use silver coin as standard money in payment of Government obligations expressly made payable in coin of either gold or silver? On the contrary, it is expressly declared in the very sentence from which the quotation is taken to be "the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money." By what authority does the President discontinue such use, and why does he say—

Of course there never should be a doubt in any quarter as to the redemption in gold of the bonds of the Government which are made payable in coin?

Why is it a matter of course that the laws of the United States and the resolutions of the two Houses of Congress should be disregarded?

Again, I call the attention of the President to the concurrent resolution of the two Houses which passed the Senate on the 25th day of January, 1878, and the House on the 28th day of the same month. The preamble and resolution are as follows:

Whereas, by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved July 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment according to their nominal value for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds issued by the United States, issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 7, part 1, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 564.

Two votes were taken in the Senate on the passage of the foregoing resolution; the first on the resolution and the second on the preamble. The vote on the resolution was as follows:

NAYS—Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Eaton, Edmunds, Hamlin, Kernan, Lamar, McPherson, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Randolph, Rollins, Sargent, Wadleigh, Windom—22.

ABSENT—Butler, Cockrell, Garland, Harris, Hill, Hoar, Ingalls, Kellogg, Patterson, Sharon, Whyte—11.

The vote on the preamble was as follows:

YEAS—Allison, Armstrong, Bailey, Beck, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Coke, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Dorsey, Eustis, Ferry, Gordon, Grover, Hereford, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Matthews, Maxey, Merrimon, Morgan, Oglesby, Plumb, Ransom, Saulsbury, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace—42.

NAYS—Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Eaton, Edmunds, Hamlin, Kernan, Lamar, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Rollins, Sargent, Wadleigh, Windom—20.

As will be observed, among those recorded in the affirmative on the passage of the resolution will be found the name of my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on both votes; also the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], and that of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] were present in favor of the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was adopted in the Senate, as I have stated, on the 25th day of January, 1878. In the House of Representatives the resolution was concurred in as a whole, the preamble and the resolution being voted upon at the same time, by one vote, and the resolution and preamble were concurred in by the House of Representatives by a vote of 189 to 79. Among those voting for that resolution I find the names of John G. Carlisle, the present Secretary of the Treasury; William McKinley, ROGER Q. MILLS, WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, and ex-Secretary of the Treasury Charles Foster, of Ohio. There we have the present Secretary and the ex-Secretary of the Treasury declaring that the obligations of the United States were payable in silver coin.

Did the President know of this resolution and of the overwhelming vote by which it was passed when he said:

Of course there never should be any doubt as to the redemption in gold of the bonds of the United States which are made payable in coin?

But we need not go to that act for construction. We need not argue the correctness of the construction given by Congress on the plain language of the law. The President and the syndicate with which he is dealing have given it a construction. They have construed the bonds that are about to be issued as silver bonds.

There can be no question about that, for the President tells us so. He tells us, in the passage I have read, that he can sell gold bonds for 3 per cent, whereas he can sell no bonds which he can issue under existing laws for less than 8½ per cent. The difference in per cent is equal to 15 per cent premium. The President is offering 15 per cent premium now for gold. It is proposed to sell the bonds of the United States and buy gold at 15 per cent premium. That will be on the basis of 3 per cent; but if the credit of the Government had not been impaired by the alarm raised by the Treasury Department and the banks, if this question had not been raised at all, our bonds would sell at par, drawing only 2½ per cent.

A few years ago about $50,000,000 of our bonds fell due, and the Secretary of the Treasury was enabled to obtain an extension at 2 per cent. In 1879, or about that date, when the fours had from seventeen to eighteen years to run, they sold in the market at 27 per cent premium. If they had had the full time to run they would have sold for over 30 per cent premium, and really the President is paying more than 30 per cent premium for gold today. That is the real fact, and the country may as well understand that we are paying to-day, on the proposition submitted by the President, more than 30 per cent premium above what we would be required to pay if this question had not been raised by the banks, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the President.

On the 5th of November, 1892, no longer ago than that, the market price of the bonds of the United States reduced the interest to 2½ per cent. Now, we must pay 3½ per cent on bonds running thirty years, which would have realized November, 1892, at least 30 per cent premium. But the President says he is selling these bonds to buy gold—not coin, but to buy gold—to maintain a gold reserve, not a coin reserve, a thing unknown to the law.

Will the President contend that the bonds he is selling must be paid in gold? The premium he is paying treats them as bonds payable in silver. The President says under the contract which he has made that if they were gold bonds he could sell them at par, drawing only 3 per cent interest, but they not being gold bonds he is obliged to pay 15 per cent premium. If the bonds he is now selling are silver bonds and not gold bonds, why does he assume that the bonds heretofore issued are gold bonds? All the outstanding bonds of the United States are of the same description and subject to the same decisions, and are issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1870.

The amount that we would lose by these transactions would not be so grievous, the country could bear it, if it did not entail other consequences almost too alarming to describe. It is done for the purpose of maintaining the gold standard. We have come to the point where we must pay a large premium on gold to maintain the gold standard. Will that premium ever be less? On the contrary, will it not increase as the credit of the Government becomes weaker and weaker under these operations?

How are we situated to maintain the gold standard? We have gold obligations which require an annual payment of at least $500,000,000. I will give the estimates. It is estimated that from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000 annually is paid for carrying our commerce on the ocean in foreign bottoms. It is estimated that $250,000,000 is annually paid for interest and dividends on foreign investments. Some place the amount much higher. It would undoubtedly be greater than that if we did not continue to borrow, if we sent it all abroad. It is estimated that $100,000,000 is carried out by travelers in foreign lands, making in round numbers at least $500,000,000 in gold that we must pay to Europe to keep what gold we have. We have not been able to do it, and we are now borrowing money and paying a premium on gold for that purpose.

See how we are situated with regard to foreign countries who are our creditors. The gold on the continent of Europe is beyond our reach. Russia holds her $550,000,000 or more in her war chest, and hoards it. Austria holds her $200,000,000, the most of which she got from us, in her treasury to meet the interest on her gold obligations.

It will be remembered that her debt of twenty-four hundred million dollars drawing 5 per cent and payable in silver was converted for the benefit of the Rothschild syndicate into $2,800,000,000 of 4 per cent perpetual gold bonds. The $200,000,000 that she has in her treasury must be held for that purpose, and it is proposed to buy from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 more in the near future. France with her $900,000,000 of gold and $700,000,000 of silver and some $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 of paper is able to keep her gold.

In the first place she has an ample circulating medium, which keeps the people at work and enables her to maintain the balance of trade in her favor. In the next place, when gold is demanded for export she pays silver and keeps her gold. Germany, also a creditor nation, guards her gold by her silver. She has the same option that France and the United States have to pay in either gold or silver. She has about $150,000,000 of silver left, and when gold is demanded for export she pays silver. Consequently the gold on the Continent is practically beyond our reach.

How is it with the gold in Great Britain? The amount of gold in Great Britain is estimated at $450,000,000 or $500,000,000. How does she keep it? According to Mr. Gladstone the outside world owes her $10,000,000,000; according to other estimates the amount is much larger, bringing in annually from $500,000,000 to $600,000,000 from foreign countries. Besides, she does the carrying trade of the world, which amounts to an enormous sum, estimated as high as $300,000,000. She with $800,000,000 annually to the good and we with $500,000,000 annually to the bad, the contest is unequal.

How are we to pay the $500,000,000 of gold that is necessary in order to keep the gold we have for circulation? We have only two ways to obtain it. One is by selling our products in foreign markets; and we have had some experience in that. Every time we bid for gold and every time any other country bids for gold the price of gold goes up, and the gold price of commodities goes down, until we have been unable to sell enough products to retain our gold; and the gap between our ability to pay and our obligations will increase as years go on. For every dollar the people of the United States or the Government of the United States borrows to pay interest on borrowed money adds to the fixed obligations and requires a larger payment the succeeding year.

The conversion of the obligations of the United States which were payable in lawful money into obligations payable in coin was a gratuity to the bondholders which they failed to appreciate. The conversion of coin obligations into gold obligations by the Administration without authority of law is ruining the credit of the Government and destroying the prosperity of the country. The administration of no other civilized nation in the world would dare assume such responsibility. The obligations of France, the same as those of the United States, are by law payable in gold or silver coin.

The administration of the Republic of France has uniformly denied the right of the holders of Government paper to dictate in what kind of coin they should be paid, but on the contrary has exercised the option conferred by law to pay in silver whenever it was most convenient, and by that means retains $900,000,000 of gold in the country. The law of Germany makes the obligations of that country payable in either gold or silver, and the imperial power of the Emperor respects that law and pays silver and refuses to pay gold whenever it is more convenient for the Government to pay in the white metal.

Before the Emperor of Austria undertook to convert $2,400,000,000 of 5 per cent silver bonds into $2,800,000,000 of 4 per cent gold bonds, he was forced to obtain legislative sanction therefor. But in the Republic of America, where the Constitution and the laws of Congress passed in pursuance thereof are the paramount law of the land, all the obligations of the Government, which are, by law, payable in either gold or silver, have been converted by the executive department into obligations payable in gold alone.

We have passed the point when there can be any question with regard to our ability to buy gold with our commodities. We have not the ability. That is demonstrated beyond peradventure; and failing in that ability the President of the United States has assumed the responsibility of selling bonds, payable in coin, either gold or silver, to buy gold; and he has now offered a premium of 15 per cent according to his own showing.

The fact is it is a much larger per cent, because a 3 per cent bond ought to be at a premium of 15 or 20 per cent. He is really paying a premium of over 30 per cent to get gold; and with this premium going on you pile up the debt year after year. But in the meantime people will be without money; falling prices and hard times will continue.

It is said that we must restore confidence. How can confidence be restored when the fact is demonstrated that it is impossible for us to maintain a gold standard without borrowing? How can confidence be restored with $1,100,000,000, in round numbers, of paper and silver, all of which, on the theory of the Department, must be redeemed in gold, and with no means of obtaining gold to redeem it except by borrowing it and paying a premium on it? That is the reason why business men dare not move. They see this vast volume of currency to be redeemed in gold with no gold for redemption. Prices will go down. Confidence will not be restored while we are engaged in this vain effort to obtain gold by borrowing.

To me this is the darkest period of our history. It seems to me to be the turning point, for if we go on borrowing money the time is not far distant when there must be a crash such as the world has never seen. In the meantime, if this process can be sufficiently prolonged and property be put down lower and lower, as it must be, and times grow harder and harder, as they must under this process, the time is not far distant when there will be great discontent. There will be uprisings of the people, and the military will be called upon, as it was last summer, to enforce the laws.

Order must be preserved; the peace of society must not be disturbed. We all agree that we can not endure the upturning of society. Consequently the military arm will be used, and when the military arm is used on a large scale, as it is bound to be in the near future to suppress discontent, you will have a military dictator. We are moving on in that direction with such speed as no other country ever did. We are moving on to destruction. On a gold basis without gold, which is our situation, unless we pay a premium on it, and a large one, when our ability to pay a premium ceases, when our credit is destroyed, moving on in that way gives no hope to any patriotic man.

It must be remembered that it has been well said that starving men will not maintain a republic. This Republic rests upon a free and independent people. Individual prosperity is at the bottom. Take away individual prosperity, destroy opportunities for enterprise, as you are now doing, and the time is not far distant when your Republic must cease. No liberal government of any kind has ever been able to withstand the condition to which we are approaching. A few rich and the masses impoverished is a condition which marks the end of republican institutions. Liberties of every kind have fallen before such conditions. They have arisen in every liberal government. In every government where the people have once had freedom similar conditions to those which confront us preceded their downfall. The few became very rich, the masses very poor, and despotism became the rule.

Now, independent of the disobedience of law, independent of the fact that Congress has never sanctioned the conduct of the Treasury Department as it is now conducted, the fact remains that the Congress of the United States is responsible to see to it that we do not move further in this direction. You may talk of trusts of various kinds. While this grand trust, which is the money of the world, controls, you have a trust that is greater than the Government, a trust that is greater than all trusts, a trust that absorbs all trusts. Other trusts must act in conformity to it. The railroads are at the mercy of the money-lending classes. They are bonded for an enormous amount and they must do as their creditor dictates. The debtor is emphatically in the case of the railroads the slave of the creditor.

Take any other of the corporations against which the people murmur and if you will look far enough you will see that the corporations are helpless; that they are depending upon the ability of the people of the United States to obtain gold which is exhausted, except by the use of our credit, and our credit will soon be exhausted. See the premium we are now paying for gold and imagine what must come next; and then do you say that we shall go on in this course? They ask what will be your remedy.

I say that the remedy is easy. We must have an independent financial policy for the United States. We must furnish the people of the United States with a sufficient circulating medium so that business can be prosecuted, so that individual prosperity may come again, so that your factories and your mines will be opened, so that your fields will furnish a return for the labor of the farmer. This must be done if our Republic is to be saved. There is no halfway work about it. We must meet the situation as it is.

The issuance of bonds without authority of law to buy gold for a reserve is not what the statute says. It says you may buy coin to redeem the greenbacks which were outstanding on the 1st of January, 1879—not gold, but coin; and there is no authority to buy either gold or silver while there is a sufficient amount of silver available for that purpose, for power to sell bonds is only to be exercised to the extent necessary to buy coin to redeem the greenbacks; and while there is silver in the Treasury which can be made available there is no excuse for buying either gold or silver. There is no law for it.

How then with regard to silver? I do not know exactly how much silver is in the Treasury which is not pledged for the redemption of the silver certificates. It is $20,000,000 or more. I believe there were $30,000,000 of silver coin there on the 1st of the present month. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to coin all the silver that he has on hand to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890. Congress passed a bill requiring it to be coined and authorizing the issue of silver certificates on the seigniorage in the Treasury, some fifty-odd million ounces, making some $30,000,000, and it was vetoed by the President.

The Department has in every way refused to use silver to carry into effect the laws which would give an abundance of silver with which to redeem the Treasury notes and all other obligations.

Now, the President says that we must have gold in the Treasury; and if the President can not have legislation he will contract with foreign syndicates and pay a premium for gold without the sanction of Congress.

It seems to me that it is time the Senate should face this question squarely. Shall this process go on; shall this usurpation go on; shall this refusal to comply with the laws of Congress and use the silver available go on? Both the Democratic party and the Republican party in their platforms solemnly pledged themselves to use silver as standard money.

Mr. President, the remark has been made that it was unfortunate that the President did not offer these bonds to the people. It was certainly unusual. The contract for the bonds before they were issued to a foreign syndicate was a remarkable transaction. It was said the other day by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the people would readily take these bonds; that they have in the savings banks $1,600,000,000 of gold and want the bonds. I think it would have been better to give the people an opportunity to take the bonds, but I deny that the depositors in savings banks have there any $1,600,000,000 of gold or any $1,600,000,000 of money.

It is true the savings banks owe their depositors that amount, or about that amount, but I question the ability of the banks to return it under the gold standard. It is impossible. Your savings banks and your trust companies can not endure the gold standard and exist. The securities in the savings banks and trust companies upon which they pay their depositors interest are perishing. They are not worth to-day 50 cents on the dollar in gold of their original cost. The failure of railroads and the failure of corporations, the shrinkage of securities, will sap the foundation of all your savings banks and trust companies, and again the people must suffer.

It may be that the precaution was taken to deal with a foreign syndicate for fear that the depositors in savings banks and trust companies would desire to invest in the bonds, and in that event the inability of the banks to respond would be developed. It might be dangerous to give the people anything that would be safe investment, for they might be inclined to draw their money out of the savings banks and trust companies, and the securities those companies hold might be thrown upon the market.

I should like to know where the stocks of the railroad companies are. I understand that they have gone out of the market to the extent of nearly a million shares—$100,000,000. Where are they? Are they in the banks? If they are those who hold such securities had better take warning because on a gold basis they must continue to depreciate. If they depend upon the ability of the United States to buy gold and pay a premium on it (and that is the only way we can get gold) the stocks of railroads and of all corporations of every description, including their bonds, must shrink and continue to shrink, and depreciate in the market.

The time is coming when this process of contraction will shake the foundation of all the institutions in the land. It was a dangerous experiment to depreciate the value of commodities in this country, your wheat and cotton. To compel them to be sold for gold, thus enhancing the value of gold to the disuse of silver was a dangerous experiment. Those who undertook that experiment did not realize that they were destroying the foundation of the prosperity of the country and destroying the security which they held.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). The Senator from Nevada will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside so that the Senate may continue the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senate of the United States to view this question squarely, and to consider how it is possible to obtain gold to maintain the gold standard. I want the Senate to consider how we are to pay our fixed charges to foreign countries, now amounting annually to at least $500,000,000, and increasing daily, and I want the Senate to consider the perilous road we are traveling when we have commenced to pay a premium on gold for the purpose of keeping it here, and when we know that nothing but an unlimited debt can keep it here, nor can even that keep it here longer than our credit remains good.

In the mean time the people must suffer, and the people are suffering. I wish that the Senate of the United States and those in authority would consider the suffering of 70,000,000 people, whose enterprises have been destroyed and who are without hope. All chance for the independence of individual men is removed and opportunity is removed from them, and yet we are told that we must wait for better times. When and how can better times come under this process of borrowing gold at a premium, when we are without the ability to sell our products for a sufficient price to keep our gold at home?

In all the history of this country there has never been a more gloomy spectacle presented than now, and there never has been as much suffering in the United States at any period during the existence of the Government as there is to-day. Never has there been as much despair; never has there been as much anxiety; never has there been so much poverty and distress; never have there been so many men out of employment; never has there been such a disastrous condition presented to the people. Shall we persist in aggravating it by borrowing more money, and particularly borrowing it without authority of law? Will not Congress stop this disastrous and ruinous policy? If not, the people must continue to suffer the consequences.

Until this all-important question is settled no other question ought to be considered by any party of men who claim to be patriotic and who love their country. We ought to stop here and now and liberate the people from the oppression of the gold corner, which is sapping the foundations of our institutions and precipitating us into revolution and anarchy, which, if continued, will finally result in despotism.

I read in a Philadelphia paper the other day that all the conditions were present in this country which preceded the French Revolution. The article went on column after column enumerating the conditions then in France and now in the United States, showing that the existing conditions parallel those which existed in France at the time of their revolution. Like conditions will produce like results.

The conditions are such now that the money of the world is mostly pooled in Europe, and can only be obtained at such prices as avarice dictates, while our industries for want of money are prostrated, while our people are out of employment, and while suffering prevails everywhere. What can you expect from such conditions but a recurrence similar to the French Revolution?

I am not an alarmist, but, Mr. President, the condition of the country warrants all I say, and I warn Senators here to-day that if this policy is pursued much longer consequences will occur which will shock civilization itself.

HEIRS OF D. FULFORD—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate bill No. 143, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of D. Fulford."

This bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury "to redeem, in favor of the heirs at law of D. Fulford, four bonds of the United States, consols of 1867, of the denomination of $500, $100, $50, and $50, and known as five-twenties, said bonds having been destroyed by fire the 9th day of July, 1872, and to pay to the heirs at law of said D. Fulford the amount of said bonds, together with accrued interest from July 1, 1872, to the date of the maturity of said bonds."

The bill further provides that the heirs to whom the payment is to be made shall execute and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond "conditioned to save harmless the United States from loss or liability on account of said bonds or the interest accrued thereon, and to contain such words as to cover any liability resulting from any mistake in the designation or description of the bonds, so that in no event shall the United States be called upon by a rightful claimant for a second payment thereof."

The proposition is that the Government shall pay bonds alleged to have been destroyed by fire nearly twenty-three years ago.

The Secretary of the Treasury states that an application for the payment of these bonds, made by Mr. Fulford himself, was rejected by the Department because he was unable to describe the bonds in such a way as to permit their identification and because the evidence of their destruction by fire was inconclusive.

The Senate Committee on Claims, however, in their report on the bill under consideration, state that they are entirely satisfied that Mr. Fulford was the owner of four Government bonds, one for $500, one for $100, and two for $50, and that they were burned with his residence, which was destroyed by fire on the 9th day of July, 1872, and that while he could not furnish the numbers or descriptions of said bonds, he understood all these bonds were of the class known as consols of 1867, and that he had collected the coupons thereon for the interest due July 1, 1872.

The particular class of bonds mentioned were dated July 1, 1867, and were payable or redeemable not less than five nor more than twenty years from their date. The short period expired, therefore, on the 1st day of July, 1872. That was the date when the last coupons on Mr. Fulford's bonds, which it is alleged were detached and collected, became due, and only nine days before the supposed destruction of the bonds by fire.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated July 20, 1892, attached to the report of the Senate Committee made upon a bill similar to this, which was pending at that time, discloses the fact that among the consols of 1867 then outstanding there were 107 of the denomination of $500, 107 of the denomination of $100, and 35 of the denomination of $50. This statement merely shows that there were numerous bonds precisely similar to those described as belonging to Mr. Fulford, which had not, in July, 1892, been redeemed, though the extreme limit of their maturity expired on the 1st day of July, 1897. The letter of the Secretary further discloses, however, that there were two of these outstanding bonds of the denomination of $500, and two of the denomination of $100, upon which coupons of interest had not been paid since July 1, 1872. Of course, this lends plausibility to the suggestion that two of these four bonds, one of each denomination, were those destroyed when Mr. Fulford's house was burned in July, 1872, but this suggestion loses its force under the additional statement in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury that in July, 1892, there were no consols of 1867 of the denomination of $50 whose last coupon was paid July 1, 1872. This shows conclusively that no $50 bonds of this class were destroyed by fire in Mr. Fulford's house and casts great uncertainty upon the description of the other bonds inasmuch as the theory of the claimants seems to be that all the bonds destroyed belonged to the same class.

In 1893, upon an examination of the records of the Treasury Department, it was found that the two unpaid bonds for $500, reported in 1892 as outstanding, from which no coupons had been paid since July 1, 1872, still remained unredeemed, but that one of the two one-hundred-dollar bonds which were in that condition in 1892 had been since that time paid and canceled. I think it must be conceded that this late redemption of this bond greatly weakens any presumption that the other three will not be presented for payment.

It is perfectly clear that so far as this bill directs the payment to the persons therein named of two consols of 1867 of the denomination of $50 each, on the ground that such bonds were destroyed by fire in July, 1872, it requires the payment of money to those not entitled to it, since it is shown that these consols could not have been destroyed at the time stated, because coupons due on all consols of that denomination unredeemed have been paid since that date.

While the objections to the payment of the amount of the other two bonds mentioned in the bill are less conclusive, there seems to be so much doubt and uncertainty concerning their description and character, and their identification as unredeemed consols of 1867 is so unsatisfactory that in my opinion it is not safe to assume, as is done in this bill, that they are represented among those bonds of that class recorded as still outstanding, whose coupons for some reason have not been presented for payment since July 1, 1872.

I do not believe that an indemnity bond could be drawn which, as against the strict rights of sureties, would protect the Government against double liability in case all the payments directed by this bill were made. Even if the payments were confined to the two larger consols described there would be great difficulty in framing a bond which would surely indemnify the Government.

There should always be a willingness to save the holders of Government securities from damage through their loss or destruction; but in my judgment a bad precedent would be established by paying obligations whose destruction and identification are not more satisfactorily established than in this case.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 12, 1895.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move that the message of the President be printed and, with the bill, referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, a communication from the Secretary of State, covering the report of the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics for the year 1894.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 12, 1895.

RED CLIFF INDIAN RESERVATION, WIS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that House joint resolution No. 140 be taken up at this time. It is a joint resolution which is local in its nature. It has the sanction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, has received a favorable report in the House of Representatives, and also in the Senate by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] who is now absent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 140) to confirm the enlargement of the Red Cliff Indian Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, made in 1863, and for the allotment of same.

Mr. PLATT. What committee reported that joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I will say to the Senator that there is a lengthy report accompanying the joint resolution.

Mr. PLATT. By whom was it reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. It was reported by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

Mr. ALLEN resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken for five minutes—

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, Mr. President, that this very important matter of the overthrow of the constitutional powers which the majority of the people in a free State have erected ought to be discussed when the Senate is full.

Mr. ALLEN. I am unable to hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I addressed the Chair, suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will withdraw that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Bate,	George,	McMillan,	Quay,
Berry,	Gordon,	Manderson,	Hansom,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Roach,
Butler,	Gray,	Mills,	Sherman,
Caffery,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Turpie,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Camden,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Pasco,	Washburn,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Peffer,	White,
Clark,	Huntton,	Perkins,	Wolcott,
Cockrell,	Jones of Ark.	Platt,
Coke,	Kyle,	Power,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, when I ceased my remarks yesterday I was discussing the question whether the functions to be performed by an election board in the State of Alabama, composed of the probate judge, the sheriff, and the circuit clerk, were of a judicial or a ministerial character. I will resume the discussion at that point.

Suppose the appointing power had refused to appoint any inspectors at all, could not a mandamus issue and compel it to do this act? Undoubtedly, because to hold otherwise would place elections at the caprice of the power vested with the authority to appoint inspectors. The duty to appoint an inspector from an opposing political party is imperative, and if this duty is not performed, but the inspector is appointed and not from an opposing political party, that is practically, so far as the observance of this right is concerned, the same as if no appointment at all had been made.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Supposing there is a nominal fulfillment of the law, but a man is appointed to represent the minority party who is devoid of the ability to read or write, a man who is utterly incapable of performing the functions of an election officer, I ask the Senator whether he thinks that in that event there is a compliance with the law.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not think there is a compliance with the law in that event, and I think that at this time I will state some authority upon that point. In answer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] I will call his attention to the case of The United States vs. Caruthers, from Mississippi, reported in 15 Federal Reporter, page 309, in which this language is used by the court:

It is an impossibility for a person who can neither read nor write to properly discharge the duties of an inspector of such elections. It is their duty to determine what votes are proper to be received and counted and those properly to be rejected, to ascertain the whole number cast for each candidate, and to make and sign the proper returns.

Although a statute providing for the appointment of persons to fill vacancies or assist as inspectors of elections does not use the words "competent and suitable person," these qualifications are necessarily implied, as the vacancy would not be properly filled unless by one having the same qualifications possessed by the person for whom he is substituted.

I take it that, in the absence of any authority to the contrary, a person who is appointed an inspector of election must be reasonably well qualified to perform the duties imposed upon him. The statute makes it the imperative duty of the official named to appoint inspectors from opposing political parties. The right and the duty are each clearly defined by the statute.

This duty does not arise if there is no opposing political party.

This is the meaning of the words of the statute "if practicable," and it can not be claimed that the right can be defeated by bare opinion or caprice that the contingency has not occurred, or does not exist, upon which the right is brought into operation. Error of judgment, caprice, political bias in weighing facts can not defeat rights clearly secured by statute.

The distinction between the right, and the existence of the contingency upon which the enjoyment of the right is predicated, must not be overlooked. The right expressly created and conferred upon opposing political parties is to have a representative at each polling place, called an inspector. Such inspector must be appointed by the officials named in the statute.

This is the mandate of the statute or legal authority, and obedience to it does not involve judicial discretion or knowledge. There are no adverse or antagonistic rights involved in the matter, no opposing or contesting litigation, but the performance of a public duty in securing and enforcing rights conferred for the public good. Private rights, as such, are not involved. There is no weighing of adverse claims.

The appointing power in this case does not determine what the law is. That is fixed by statute, and it acts under the superior power and authority of the statute which has already determined what the rights are. The ex parte duty of the appointing power is to ascertain that there is an opposing political party, but this does not make its act in this respect judicial.

I think it must be conceded by those who investigate this question with any degree of care and fairness that the duties imposed upon this board, composed of the probate judge, the sheriff, and the clerk of the circuit court, are purely ministerial. Not a duty imposed upon them by statute has the least judicial caste or character.

Under this construction of the supreme court of Alabama in the last case to which I have referred, and which reversed the first case, the election board, if I may call these officials such, have the entire authority to determine who shall be inspectors of elections. They have the entire and unrestrained authority to determine whether the appointment of a person representing a different political faith is "practicable" or not. One might have the education of a college professor, live in the neighborhood, and be entirely competent to discharge the duties imposed upon him by the statute, and yet if this board, exercising ministerial functions, sees fit to declare that there is no person in the precinct having the requisite qualifications their action in that respect would be conclusive.

I submit that the rule in this country, with possibly some few exceptions, has been that these officers discharge purely ministerial duties, that they are subject to the judicial tribunals in the discharge of their duties, and can be reached by the process of mandamus or other proper legal process.

It is not necessary for me to argue for any length of time as to the opportunity afforded by the other construction to deprive an opposite political party of their proper representation upon an election board, and of the opportunity afforded to the party in possession of the election board to commit frauds, and by that means practically to disfranchise a great portion of the people of a State.

I have here a newspaper report which I think is quite authentic—at least it is presented to me as authentic—of an attempt upon the part of the Populists, the Jeffersonian Democrats, and the Republicans of Alabama, to obtain redress at the hands of the courts in that State, and I will read from it briefly:

Before Judge Tyson, in the circuit court, the petition of Thomas McCullough and B. K. Ponder, praying for a writ of mandamus, addressed to the judge of probate, Hon. F. C. Randolph, of this county, to compel him to give them a certified copy of the original registration list of beat 12, was heard. Colonel Troy represented the relators, and Capt. John G. Winter, George M. Marks, esq., and Capt. E. A. Graham were retained for the respondent.

This account goes on at some length to give the arguments of counsel, respectively, in behalf of the writ of mandamus and against it, and concludes with this statement:

The court granted the motion to quash and dismiss, and also sustained the demurrer. The reasons assigned were that this was not such a record as the law required a certified copy thereof to be furnished; that the relators showed no such interest as the law required, admitting that they could in any event make a legal demand for a certified copy.

I understand this to be the rule in that State. If I am wrong the distinguished Senators here can correct me. Two propositions are laid down by this court which can not be sustained in the State of Alabama or any other State of this Union, or wherever English jurisprudence is administered. The first is this:

That this was not such a record as the law required a certified copy thereof to be furnished.

Every public record in this country, whether it belong to the Government of the United States or a State, with the possible exception of diplomatic correspondence or matters of that character (such as would injuriously affect the Government by inspection), which furnishes competent evidence for me to prove some right I possess, I have a right either to inspect or to obtain a certified copy of and use it in evidence. It can not be possible that the rule is to prevail in the State of Alabama that the list of registered voters, which is required to be kept in some particular place, can be secreted at all times and under all circumstances from the voters of the precinct, and they can be prohibited from an examination of it for the purpose of determining whether it is genuine or fraudulent, or whether there has been a complete registration. Nor can any judge who understands the duties imposed on him and who is true to the maintenance of the laws of his country hold that an elector of that precinct is not entitled to a certified copy or to an inspection of registration lists of that kind.

Then the court held that the relators showed "no such interest" as would entitle them to a certified copy or an inspection. Mr. President, a legal voter of the precinct in which you live is charged with the duty of seeing that the ballot cast there is a pure and honest ballot; can some custodian of the registered list of voters in your precinct say with impunity that neither you nor any other competent person shall examine it or have a certified copy of it, and will courts of your State step in and deny this privilege? A court in Alabama has denied these persons the privilege of examining the registration list. Was it essential to know the list of voters? The law requires a registration of the voters of every polling precinct in the State. A man must be registered between the 1st and the 18th of May, and no person after that time is for any reason permitted to register, except those who have reached years of maturity between the day of registration and the day of election.

Is it not an essential safeguard to an election in the State of Alabama that some person shall have a right to see the number of persons who are registered; that someone shall have a right to see the registration list itself, and to know whether it is genuine or whether it is fabricated? Will an honest court in this country at any time deny a respectable citizen, a voter of a particular voting precinct, the privilege that should be properly accorded to him? I mention this as one of the circumstances that have taken place in that State, showing that the Populists, Jeffersonian Democrats, and Republicans have alike been denied their rights, and to show the influence that this denial has had upon the election in that State.

Some peculiar decisions have been made in the State of Alabama with reference to elections. The supreme court of that State has decided, as I understand it—and I shall not read the decision at length—that where the statute creates a board before whom a contest for an elective position may be made the common-law writ of quo warranto will not lie. In my judgment the rule is not sustained by the common law. It is not sustained by any statute law, for I believe the rule to be, without an exception in this country, that where a statute confers a new right that did not exist at common law and creates a tribunal before whom that right can be determined, there the remedy prescribed by the statute is exclusive. But where the statute simply recognizes or enlarges a right which existed at common law and creates a tribunal before whom that right can be determined, the remedy is not an exclusive remedy, but is a cumulative remedy.

The party whose rights are affected may, under such circumstances, appeal to the statutory tribunal or resort to the courts of record of his county and State; but the supreme court of Alabama has held to the contrary, so that if any contests are to be made with reference to local officers, and, I understand, with reference to State officers, there is no provision whatever for any contest. If any contest is made with reference to an elective office, it must be made, not before a court charged with the solemn duty of adjudicating fairly upon the rights of citizens, but before some local tribunal, created for the express purpose of determining the rights of the contestant—a partisan tribunal, a tribunal under no particular responsibility to anyone, and who, if they see fit, can carry into execution a purpose to disfranchise the people of their locality.

I shall not dwell upon this point. I shall content myself with declaring to any fair-minded lawyer or judge in this country that that Alabama decision overrules the universal decisions of the American courts, the rule being always that where the individual has a common-law right and there is a common-law remedy he may resort to either the new tribunal or to the old tribunal, as he sees fit.

It may be said that at common law an individual could not contest for an office through the process known as information in the nature of quo warranto. That was true early in the history of the common law, but when this country was established the English individual had a right to inform in his own behalf, and the same judgment that ousted the contestee placed the contestant in possession of the office. It came to us as a part of our inheritance from the mother country and is the settled law of this country to-day.

Now, I wish to show for a moment the operations of the election law in Alabama, as prepared by a distinguished lawyer of that State whose name I do not give. He says:

The provisions of the Sayre election law in regard to registration are unfair and capable of being used to practice fraud in the following ways: The governor appoints all the county registrars. Of course he selects only the most partisan and those readiest to aid in frauds. He gives no bond and receives no pay. His only duty is to select and qualify beat registrars. This "qualification" consists in administering an oath not prescribed by the statute nor specifically defined. It might be in this form, and was, no doubt, in some instances: "You solemnly swear that you will register the voters of your beat and manage the affairs of your office to the best interests of the Democratic party, so help you God."

These beat registrars are not required to open the books at any time or place and it would require very little adroitness to evade opposition voters and render it so inconvenient and troublesome that they would fail to register. The Democratic voters of the beat could be notified when and where he could be found and all register. Those of the opposition could not know, and if the beat registrar so desired they never could find him and his books at the same time. The presence of the books is as necessary as the registrar, as the law provides how each voter must register on the books.

The probate judge has superintendence of the registration; that is, to provide the books and certificates, and keep the books when they shall be filed. If in collusion with the beat registrar he can aid in false registration by preventing an inspection of the books. In Montgomery County the effort to mandamus the probate judge was unsuccessfully made, so that the registration books might be purged. The circuit court decided not to grant mandamus, and dismissed the proceedings. The courts can always be depended upon to rule on the side of the fraud manipulators.

By defeating the efforts of 20 per cent of the opposition to Democracy in the counties in which the opposition has a majority and adding an average of 20 per cent where the Democrats have the probate judge makes a difference sufficient to defeat almost any party.

The law in regard to appointment of inspectors requires that three shall be appointed, not more than two of whom shall belong to the same party. Although there was no Republican ticket in the field, in nearly every instance possible, where the Democrats had the probate judge, clerk, and sheriff, or any two of them, two Democrats and an illiterate Republican were appointed. The inspectors and returning officer go into the poll, which must be protected for 50 feet in every direction, so that no one can observe, see, or hear what transpires. If the inspectors are willing to perjure themselves they are not sworn. If not, there is no way to ascertain the fact; and if it was ascertained and reported to the board of supervisors they could not reject the returns, provided they should be regular on their face.

There is no opportunity or means provided by which an illegal voter can be challenged.

There is no way by which fraud can be detected, except for one or more to stand outside the inclosure and count those who shall go into the poll, and that would only be efficacious in preventing more votes being counted than were cast.

The "fixer," or "fixers," all of whom may be of the dominant party, is wholly without responsibility. He is not sworn.

The person generally selected by the opposition is an unscrupulous and shrewd man who can deceive the illiterate voter. The illiterate voter is required to swear that he can not read or write before he can secure the aid of the fixer. He is therefore completely at the mercy of the fixer.

At nearly every poll in the black belt all the inspectors were Democrats and all the fixers of the same party. It was the exception when they were sworn except to take the following oath: "You do solemnly swear that you will conduct this election to the best interests of the Democratic party, so help you God."

With two Democratic and one opposition inspector the following tricks are played:

Modus operandi.—The table is so arranged that one Democrat sits on the end to receive the votes. The opposition inspector is behind him, or partially so. As the voter gives the Democrat his ticket, the act is done immediately in front of him so that the opposition inspector does not see it. When handed to him, the voter passes out. The Democratic inspector exchanges another made-out ticket, properly certified on the back, passes it to the opposition inspector to put in the box. In order to do this the inspector acts so fairly and seems so anxious to do right that suspicion is disarmed and watchfulness ceases when the work is done.

Another plan is to have a conspiracy to exchange boxes. The election is honestly conducted. When the polls are about to close the fixer on the outside is told how many votes have been polled. He has a box fixed so that exactly that number can be put in another similar box, and does it. When the polls are closed one of the Democrats proposes to go to another room to some adjacent building to supper, or some other plan is adopted by which the boxes are exchanged.

Another way is to call out the Democratic candidates from a ticket when the opposition candidates are marked upon it.

Another is for the two Democratic clerks to use the "foot patting" dodge, which consists in marking the Democratic candidates on the tally sheet as the opposition candidates are called out to be noted on the tally sheets. In order to make the tally sheets correspond, the leading clerk pats the foot of the other clerk whenever he shall make a false entry on the tally sheet. In this way every other vote of the opposition can be falsely tallied, and, of course, falsely counted, as the summary is made on the tally sheet.

If the opposition inspector watches the inspector calling the ticket the clerks can cheat him of half of the votes to which his ticket is entitled. If the opposition inspector watches the clerks keep tally the inspector who calls the names can cheat him of half by falsely calling the names.

If the opposition inspector keeps tally and watches every ticket the calling inspector will slip Democratic tickets in the box and steal as many of those in it out.

If the "slipping act" will not work, after calling a few minutes and perceiving that the opposition inspector keeps tally and inspects every ticket, the "knock off" job is put up, which consists in accidentally knocking the box off the end of the table, and, while stooping down to pick it up, stick a handful of the box tickets in the left coat pocket and put a handful of Democratic tickets in the box from the right pocket. When this feat is successfully accomplished, the opposition is called around to see that no tickets are left on the floor and that the box is undisturbed, except the shaking up it got in the fall. If the tickets in the box should not tally in number with those on the poll list, the crowd turns upon the opposition inspector with great surprise that he could not and had not put the tickets handed to him in the box or put more than was handed to him, as the number of tickets are less or greater than the poll list shows. While conscious of innocence, the opposition inspector is so embarrassed that he readily accepts any solution offered.

The bulldozing act is another way to fix the opposition inspector so that he will either not be so watchful or not kick. This is done by one of the inspectors becoming very angry at the first intimation or insinuation of unfairness. With two inspectors, two clerks, and a returning officer on the other side, the last named being a deputy sheriff to enforce order by stopping any difficulty from being raised by the opposition inspector's fault-finding or captious objections, the chances are always good for the "razzle-dazzle" act to work nicely, unless the opposition inspector has plenty of nerve and a good pistol, with the reputation of using it on very slight provocation.

During the twenty years which fraud has been practiced at elections in this State, no one has been indicted, prosecuted, or convicted for the commission of any crime against the elective franchise.

2. During the twenty years of election frauds in Alabama, the black-belt counties have controlled the offices and public affairs of Alabama, and when a black-belt leader has moved to other sections of the State he has been promoted and elected to office and given control in public affairs.

3. The Congressional districts have been so gerrymandered that all but one are so formed as to have one or more negro counties in each of them, and they are dominated by the influence of the black-belt oligarchy.

I have here and desire to introduce in this connection a map showing the black-belt district of the State of Alabama. [See next page for map.] I do not know that I can exhibit it properly, but every district in that State, with the exception of the Seventh and Eighth, has a portion of the black belt attached to it. The Sixth district, for instance, has Greene and Sumter counties; the Ninth has Hale and Perry; the First has Marengo, Clarke, and Monroe; the Second has Wilcox and Montgomery; the Third, Bullock, Russell, and Barbour; the Fifth Lowndes and Autauga; the Fourth has Dallas. The Fourth is a very irregularly shaped district, as Senators will see by examining the map [exhibiting the map], starting at the west side of the State and running down to the southeast, almost across the entire State. The effect of this districting—

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does he understand that the original design in making the districts in this way was that the white portions of the districts would control the black portions? Was it the original design in carefully putting on every district a certain portion of the territory thickly populated with colored people that the white sections of the districts might overcome the black sections? Was that the idea, or what was the idea in carefully shaping the districts in the way the Senator describes?

Mr. ALLEN. I would not like to express an opinion on that question. I do not know what the design was. I can see, however, what could be accomplished by that. I can see that if it was the design that the white element of the districts should dominate that could easily be accomplished, because they evidently have a majority in these districts. But in my judgment the districting of the State has amounted to a boomerang. The white people in the districts have been overcome by six or seven thousand majority by the counting of votes in the black belt that in fact never were cast.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the result is, as I understand it—and the Senator will pardon me for alluding to it—that whereas the original design was that the white portion of the districts should overcome the black portion, now fraudulent majorities certified up from the black portion overcome the division that has taken place among the whites in the white sections.

Mr. ALLEN. The latter statement of the Senator from New Hampshire is true. As to the other I know nothing.

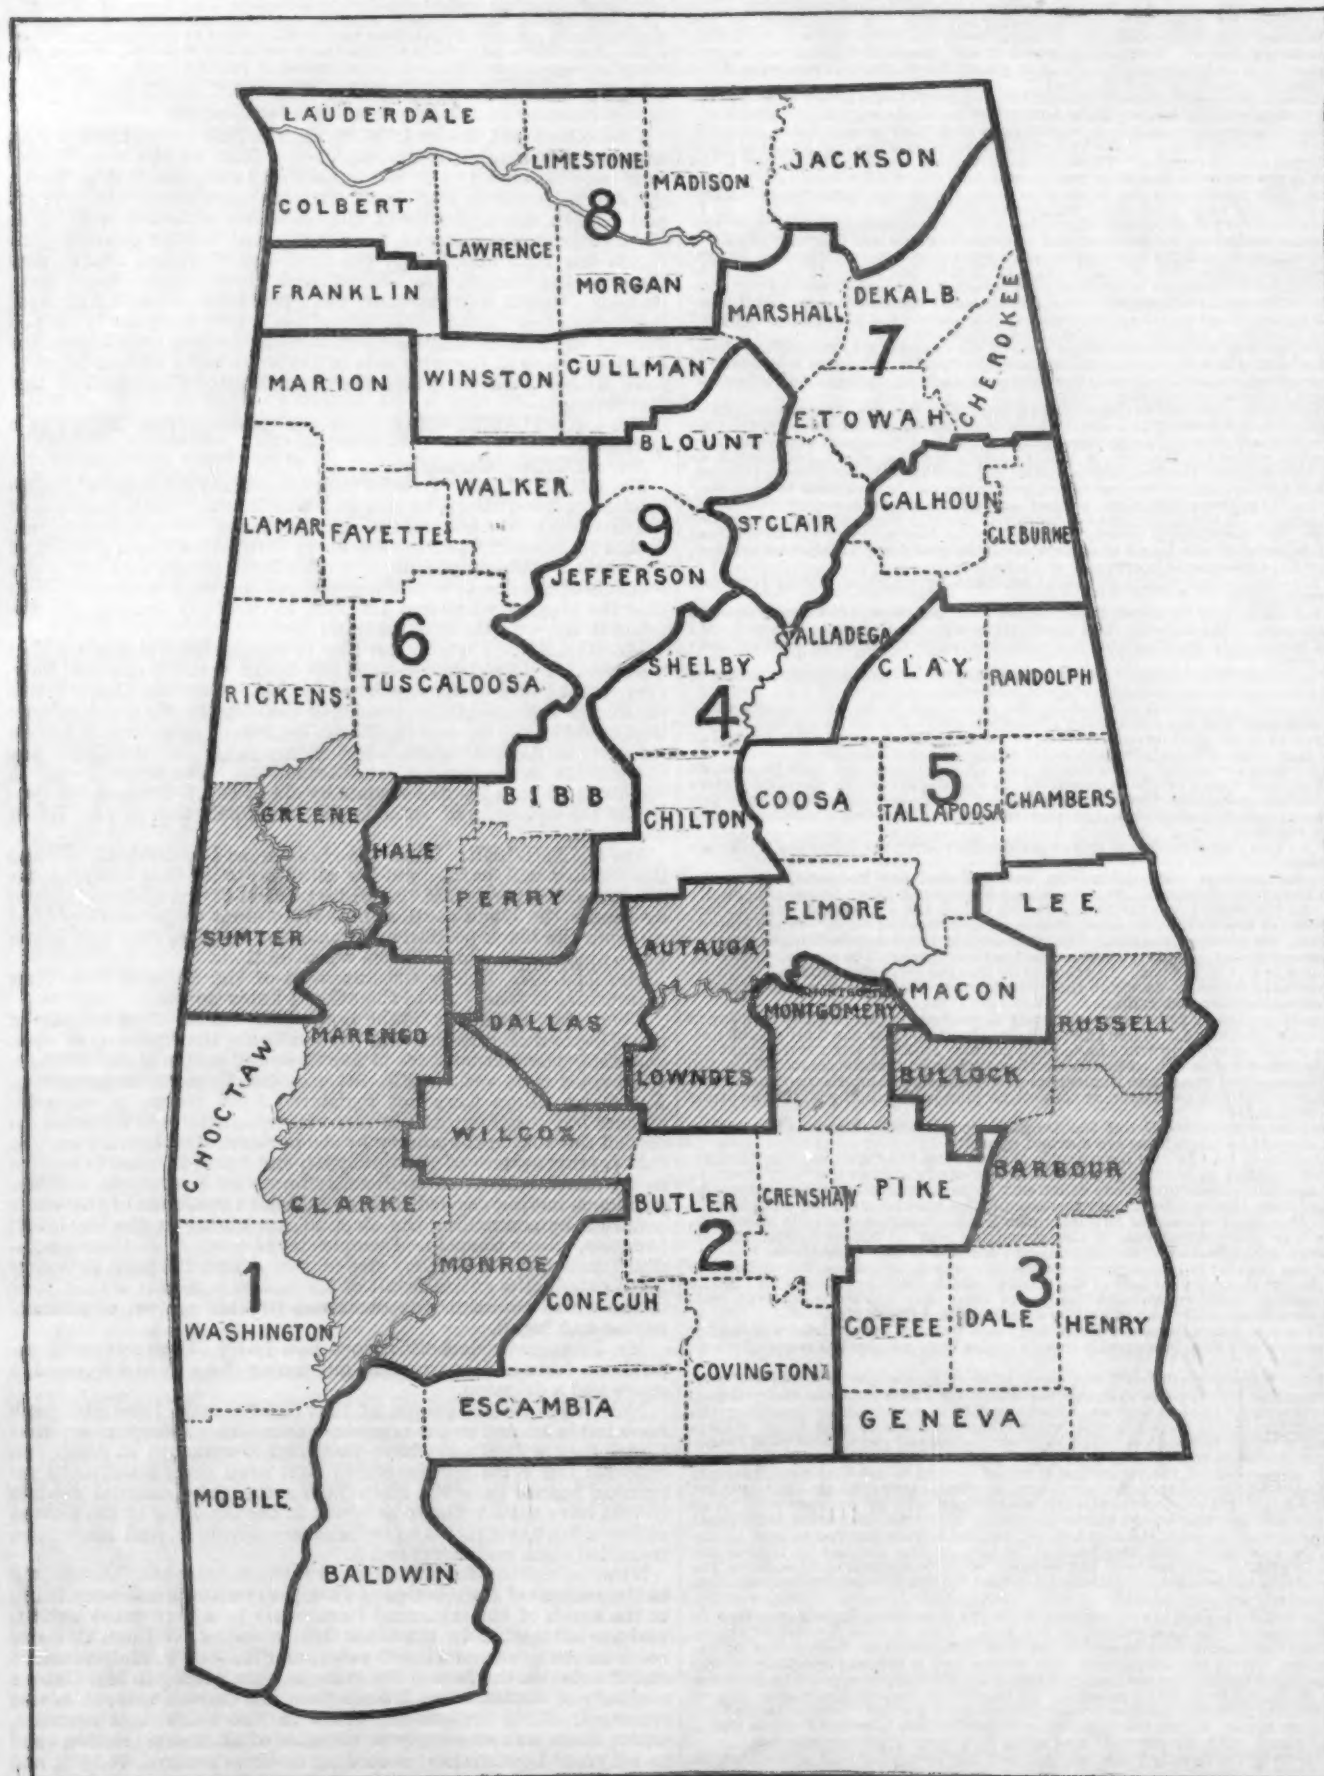

There, Mr. President, is the seat of the fraud. It is capable of proof beyond all question and beyond doubt that in many of these counties, where from three to five thousand and in some instances 6,000 votes were returned in favor of the Democratic candidate, Mr. Oates, there were not registered 1,000 voters; in some instances but very few; and in many instances the vote returned exceeded the vote in the county by 200 per cent, or relatively so. So that by this system of manipulation and fraud in what is known as the black belt, the Populists, Jeffersonian Democrats, and Republicans having carried, I think, almost two-thirds of the white counties, by controlling the election machinery in the black-belt counties, where the colored people stayed away from the registration board and where they stayed away from the polls to a very great extent, the entire result of the honest vote cast in that State in the white counties was overcome by this system of political rapine and fraud.

Mr. President, what effect does this have? It overturns a republican form of Government, and makes it a hiss and byword, a snare and a delusion.

Now, what do the people of that State want? I can not speak for what is known as the organized Democracy, except to say that I hope they will always have their rights regarded as American citizens; but certainly the 83,283 that even these fraudulent returning boards gave Mr. Kolb during the gubernatorial contest in 1894 have some right to be heard in the Congress of the United States when their rights as citizens are involved, and have been trampled upon and disregarded.

Now, let us look for a moment at the consequences. According to the returns of the election of 1894, the election machinery being in the hands of the organized Democracy to a very great extent, perhaps altogether in the black belt counties, William C. Oates received for governor 110,865 votes, and Reuben F. Kolb received 83,283 votes on the face of the returns, thus giving to Mr. Oates a majority of 27,582. But deduct from Mr. Oates's vote, as it was returned, 37,765 fraudulent votes in the black belt counties, where there was seemingly no pretense of an honest election (and he only had legitimately, according to these returns, 76,100), and

MAP OF THE STATE OF ALABAMA SHOWING CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

Kolb was elected by a majority of 7,183, to say nothing of the evidence that I have put in the record here, and that these people will be able to produce on a hearing, showing that in very many instances where Mr. Kolb received a large number of votes they were, to a great extent, and in some instances absolutely, taken away from him and added to the Oates column. So I have no hesitation in saying that Reuben F. Kolb, according to all American law if it is executed, and according to the honest vote of the State of Alabama cast at the August election of 1894, is to-day its de jure governor by fully 20,000 votes.

What remedy is there for these people? It is not pleasant for me to say anything about the State of Alabama or about any other State, and what I do say is with a good deal of reluctance, but I realize the fact that Alabama is represented in this Chamber by two of our most distinguished and able members, men of national reputation and high character. But what is to become of American institutions if the honest expression of the people at the ballot is to be wiped out by ballot-box stuffing and by fraudulent returns?

I want to say to you, Mr. President, that, so far as I am concerned, I want the same rule applied to the Republican and Democratic parties that I ask to be applied to the Populist party. I want to see the time speedily come when, under the fair skies of America, every man, wherever he may be, who is an honest and legal voter, can cast his vote in absolute security and have that vote counted, I care not to what political party he belongs. As an American citizen he is entitled to this, and it is our duty to assist him in obtaining his rights.

I hold in my hand the Montgomery Journal of February 8, 1895, a Democratic daily paper published at the capital of the State. I ask the Secretary to read the article I have marked in the copy that I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

ALARMING ARE THE POLITICAL AND THE FINANCIAL CONDITIONS, SAYS HON. W. H. SKAGGS, A LEADING POPULIST—A GLOOMY PICTURE OF THE UNREST OF THE PEOPLE—HE THINKS KOLB COULD PRECIPITATE CIVIL WAR IN THIS STATE—INTIMATES KOLB MAY CAUSE TROUBLE IF THE LEGISLATURE FAILS TO ACT.

Hon. W. H. Skaggs, late chairman of the Jeffersonian campaign committee, is in this city, and in an interview with a Journal reporter to-day said:

"Since the latter part of November, I have been traveling principally in what is known as the 'black belt' section. In the absence of any legal process of investigation evidence obtained is, of course, ex parte, but affidavits have been taken only from those with whom I have personal acquaintance, or whose good standing and reputation for veracity and good character has been ascertained by careful investigation. In many instances negroes who are reputed to be reliable have been in a position to give evidence, but I have invariably declined to take any information from negroes. Of the many affidavits obtained at least 85 per cent of the affiants are ex-Confederate soldiers. It was generally charged in the last campaign that the supporters of Captain Kolb, Populists and Jeffersonians, were men without education and men who did not enjoy the confidence and respect of their fellow citizens; in short, they were called the 'rag-tag' element. I find that this 'rag-tag' element is made up of ex-Confederate soldiers. In many precincts I observed that every ex-Confederate soldier supported the ticket headed by Captain Kolb. This is particularly true in Wilcox and Dallas counties, where the greatest frauds were perpetrated.

"In Dallas County a fraudulent majority of over 5,000 was returned for Colonel Oates. The total vote, as I now recall, was 6,607. I have affidavits to show a steal of over 5,000 votes in that county. Take, for instance, Brown's beat. The fraudulent returns show 317 for Oates and 17 for Kolb. Two reputable citizens (one of whom has been a citizen of Dallas County for thirty-five years, and whose character I am told by Populists and organized Democrats is above reproach) swear that they were in a position to see every man who entered the polling place, and did see every man who entered the polling place from the time the polls opened until they closed; that there were only 17 men, including the election managers and clerks who entered said polling place. Several citizens in this precinct swear that there are only 20 white voters in Brown's beat. This is one of many instances of the frauds perpetrated in Dallas County.

"In Wilcox County the frauds were no less barefaced, notorious, and shameful. There were not exceeding 1,031 votes actually cast in Wilcox County, yet a majority of about 6,000 is returned for Colonel Oates from that county. In one precinct in Bullock County three reputable citizens swear that they saw every man who entered the polling place. I have in my possession a list in detail giving the name of every man who entered the polling place. There were 104 men, and no more, who entered, and yet a fraudulent vote of 343 was returned. Of this number, I don't recall just now how many were given to Oates, but I think it was over 300. Dallas and Wilcox are the banner counties for rascality, but Bullock, Barbour, Henry, Marengo, Clark, and, in fact, all the black belt counties and a number of the white counties, claimed for Oates, showed shameful records of lawlessness and corruption. I have obtained certified reports showing that registrars in some instances collected in the full amount of their fees for false entries on the registration lists. Jeffersonians and Populists in all the black belt counties that I have visited claim that it is impossible to obtain an indictment against men who practice this lawlessness, for the reason that in almost every instance the supporters of Kolb are excluded from the grand jury.

"The feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction prevailing in this State is alarming in the highest degree. That which Mr. Carlyle speaks of as a condition of passive inertia immediately preceding the French revolution is the correct picture of existing conditions in Alabama, and the history of the times preceding that outbreak impresses me as a story of our own times. The people have so long been robbed of their votes, insult has been added to injury, and the insolence of this lawless element and their beneficiaries has become so burdensome to the great majority of the people that they openly threaten violent steps.

"I regard the position of Captain Kolb as unique in the history of our State and decidedly interesting. Prior to my personal investigation of existing conditions, I held to the opinion that the spirit of conservatism perhaps predominated among his supporters; but I am now fully persuaded that if he should but speak the word there would be a revolutionary outbreak in many parts of the State, that could not be suppressed short of much bloodshed. A condition of poverty and abject want exists to a degree that I had not anticipated. It may be justly claimed that in many parts of Alabama the farmers have been reduced to the lowest state of animal existence. Many of them are now in that condition, and others are rapidly approaching a condition of hunger, and they will be as dangerous as other hungry animals.

"Colonel Reese has copies of affidavits obtained by me prior to his departure. A great deal of additional information has been obtained, however, since he left the State, and I am still engaged in the work.

"I earnestly hope that the legislature will not adjourn without enacting a contest law and making such amendments to our election laws as will secure honest elections. A failure to do this will only aggravate existing conditions and strengthen the intensity of feeling that now prevails. If the conditions were fully understood and properly appreciated I believe that a majority of the general assembly, without regard to party affiliation, would support the proper and necessary measures to establish quiet and restore normal conditions in this State."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it seems to me that these facts, as I have adduced them and placed them in the RECORD, irregular as my method has been in doing so, fully warrant a Congressional investigation of the political conditions of the State of Alabama.

Now, the question comes to my mind as a Senator of the United States, what is the duty, what is the power of the Government with reference to the State of Alabama or any other State under like circumstances? Certainly we can not suffer any portion of the people of the United States to be deprived of their constitutional right to enjoy the benefits of a republican form of government. The duty is imposed upon the National Government to guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government. That was an obligation that we assumed when the Constitution was formed and when it was adopted. It was as apparent at that time as it is now, and even more so, that this country was in danger not only from foes without, but from foes within. The struggle of our ancestors to establish this Government was a marvelous one, and stands out in history without a parallel. Our colonies had been under the domination of Great Britain; commercial union after commercial union had been formed between the colonies, and the relations broken off. There was great danger of an attempt upon the part of some of the colonies to set up for themselves a monarchical form of government. There was not only danger from that source, but there was danger of invasion from without as well as invasion of one colony by others.

There must of necessity be a central power which can control the affairs of the nation. For instance, if New York should undertake to invade Rhode Island, there must be somewhere in this nation a power that could check the great State of New York from invading and wiping from the political map a State of the size of Rhode Island. The power could not reside with the States themselves, for it was a power which, in the nature of things, must be exercised by a general and central Government; and for that purpose, in my judgment, section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution was framed:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government—and shall protect each of them against invasion—

That is the first proposition—

That is the second proposition—and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

That is the third proposition of this section.

I do not propose to consume the time of the Senate in discussing what constitutes a republican form of government. I take it that the language should be given its popular signification, and that a republican form of government consists in a government by the people through representatives chosen by themselves. It must follow, as a necessary consequence, that if the good people of Alabama, or any great portion of them, are deprived of their constitutional right to choose representatives and officers for the control and management of their own affairs, for the selection of local officers and members of Congress, they are deprived of the right of republican form of government.

I do not attach any special significance to the word "form" as used here. I understand quite well that governments may differ substantially and yet be in form the same kind. A government can be very tyrannical and yet be republican in form; but I believe that it was the design and purpose of the framers of the Constitution to lodge the power in Congress to guarantee to every State in the Union a government republican not only in form, but republican in substance as well.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to say right upon that point, that the original proposition of this clause in the convention which framed the Constitution did not use the word "form." The original proposition was that the United States should guarantee to each State a republican government, and when the language was finally settled, although the word "form" came in, the meaning unquestionably was exactly as the Senator now construes it, that the United States should guarantee to every State a republican government. The word "form" had no special significance attached to it. The Senator will notice that if he will review the history of the debates in connection with the formation of the Constitution.

Mr. ALLEN. I think at this point I shall turn back to the history of this provision.

Among the defects in the Articles of Confederation—which were severely felt, was the want of uniformity in cases requiring it, as laws of naturalization and bankruptcy and coercive authority to act on individuals, and the guarantee of the internal tranquility of the States. The Federal authority had ceased to be respected abroad, and dispositions were shown there to take advantage of its imbecility and to speculate on its approaching downfall. At home it had lost all confidence and credit; the unstable and unjust career of the States had also forfeited the respect and confidence essential to order and good government, involving a general decay of confidence and credit between man and man. It was also known that there were individuals who had betrayed a bias toward monarchy, and there had always been some not unfavorable to a partition of the Union into several confederacies, either from a better chance of figuring on a sectional theater or that the sections would require stronger governments, or, by their hostile conflicts, lead to a monarchical consolidation. The idea of dismemberment had recently made its appearance in the newspapers.

It is said—

When the convention which framed the Federal Constitution had convened, Mr. Randolph introduced, May 29, 1787, a series of resolutions, the eleventh of which is in the following language. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to this:

Resolved, That a republican government, and the territory of each State, except in the instance of a voluntary junction of government and territory, ought to be guaranteed by the United States to each State.

June 5, 1787, the question of guaranteeing to the States a republican form of government again came up, and, on the motion of Mr. Patterson, was postponed until the question of representation should be decided.

June 11, 1787, we are informed by the official history of the convention, the question was again presented, alterations having been made in the resolution, making it read: "That a republican constitution and its existing laws ought to be guaranteed to each State by the United States," and it was agreed to without debate.

June 13, 1787, Mr. Gorham reported on behalf of the committee, among other things, the following resolution:

Resolved, That a republican constitution and its existing laws ought to be guaranteed to each State by the United States.

July 18, 1787, this question was again before the convention, Mr. Wilson calling up the resolution I have just quoted. Mr. Morris "thought the resolution objectionable, as he would be very unwilling," so he said, "that such laws as then existed in Rhode Island should be guaranteed."

The discussion of this provision in Elliot's Debates is very meager. It was claimed on the one hand, and denied on the other, that Congress should guarantee the laws then in existence in the Colonies as well as those made in the future.

Mr. Wilson said the object "is merely to secure the States against dangerous commotions, insurrections, and rebellions." Colonel Mason observed, "If the General Government should have no right to suppress rebellions against particular States, it will be in a bad situation indeed. As rebellions against itself originate in and against undivided States, it must remain a passive spectator of its own subversion."

Mr. President, I think in that language is embraced the idea that actuated the framers of the Constitution, that the General Government should have power not only to protect the nation as a nation, but to protect every State as an integral portion of the nation.

The debate ran on from day to day during the existence of the constitutional convention, and in the draft presented to the convention on August 6, 1787, the following language occurs:

The United States shall guarantee to each State a republican form of government, and shall protect each State against foreign invasion, and on the application of its legislature, against domestic violence.

This was again changed, as I recollect it, into the form in which I find it in our Constitution now. The debates show that the word "form" was not discussed. It seems to be assumed that the chief purpose in framing this section of the Constitution was to give a central or national power by which the nation might protect itself against foreign invasion, and might protect every State as an essential part of its own existence against foreign invasion and domestic violence; and not only this, but that it should guarantee to every State—and I do not believe that it meant a State in its technical sense—a republican form of government. I think the guaranty must be construed to go further; in the nature of things, it must go to the extent of guaranteeing to every citizen of a State his right to participate in the affairs of that State and the affairs of the nation. It will not do to say, if a mere handful of men obtain possession of the official machinery of a State, and by force, fraud, violence, or intimidation overawe and overcome a majority of the people of a State, that that State is enjoying a republican form of government. The framers of this great charter of our liberties were not foolish enough to reason thus.

It is essential, in order that an individual may enjoy perfect health, that every portion of his body must be healthy; it makes no difference where disease starts, it will, unless checked, culminate in death; and the guaranty to the nation as a nation, and to each State as an important part of the nation, can never be fulfilled until this Government takes hold of every individual throughout the length and breadth of the land and effectually guarantees to him the full measure of his liberties under the Constitution. To suffer an individual to be deprived of his rights would be like the starting of a disease of the body; unless checked it would culminate in the death of the State and the nation.

Mr. President, this guaranty was not left here. Subsequent provisions of the Constitution have placed the right of the individual citizen beyond all question, and I refer simply and briefly to the language of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. The fourteenth amendment provides:

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 1 of the fifteenth amendment is as follows:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I read this for the purpose of showing that the doctrine believed in by some persons in this country that the citizen must obtain his rights exclusively through the State organization is not true. I do not believe that it was ever contemplated that my rights as a citizen of the United States should be at the mercy of the particular State in which I happen to reside. It may seem presumptuous in me to give expression to it, but I never believed in the doctrine that a man's right to vote in a republican government was a privilege conferred upon him by that government, or that it was essential to confer it by the fundamental law.

When a man is born under the flag of a republic he becomes a citizen of that republic, and when born elsewhere and he takes the oath of allegiance he becomes a citizen of that republic; and in a republic that rests upon popular sovereignty as its foundation, that man carries with him by birth or by naturalization the inalienable right to participate in the affairs of the government and to cast his vote, if that be the method adopted for the choice of officers and the policy it is to pursue. I understand that in saying this I am opposed by a long line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; I am not in ignorance of the fact that possibly I stand alone in this belief; but I can not conceive of the existence of an American citizen or a citizen of a republican government without at the same time considering his right to participate in that government as natural and as inalienable as is the arm or any other member of the human body. It is impossible for me to conceive of a man residing in a country, and who is said to be a citizen of that country, whose institutions are based upon popular sovereignty, who, under proper regulations, does not possess the right to participate in its affairs.

I admit, Mr. President, that as a matter of safeguard, and for the purposes of protecting the Government, we have a right to place certain restrictions upon the exercise of this right of the elective franchise; but when proper safeguards have been created a man must possess the right to participate in the affairs of the Government under whose flag he lives and to whose institutions he owes allegiance, else he is not a citizen of that country, or the form of the Government is not republican.

I do not desire to be understood as saying that the States have no rights as States. Our Government is a government of enumerated powers. If a power is not expressed in the Constitution or is not necessarily implied to carry out some granted power, it does not exist, and can not be exercised. Nor am I a believer, upon the other hand, in the doctrine that any State in the Union can say that the General Government can not pass its lines and protect its citizens. When this country guaranteed to every State in the Union a republican form of government, it carried with it the power, and the duty as well, to pass the lines of the State that might deny to a citizen any of the privileges or immunities of citizenship, and to protect him in their enjoyment.

What are the people of Alabama to do? Are they to be deprived for all time of the right to participate in the affairs of this Government in its elections, or must they resort to revolution? This can not be tolerated for a moment. Sir, are we powerless to reach out the strong arm of the nation and protect these people who are thus suffering and who have been imposed upon? Should we not exercise this constitutional power, and inquire into the condition of the people of that State as to whether they are enjoying a republican form of government, and, if we ascertain that their rights have been taken away from them, frame such legislation as will guarantee to them, in common with the people of the Union, a republican form of government? This Government can not endure when it is unjust to its people, when it fails to protect every man, woman, and child beneath the Stars and Stripes. The protection must run to every State and Territory in the Union. It must be a full realization of the guaranties and rights of the Constitution.

Having said this much, Mr. President, I beg to express the hope that, without unnecessary delay, this resolution will be adopted, a committee appointed, and an investigation made.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to the House the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan, the bill having been adversely reported by the Committee of the Whole and by error passed the House; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with and the bill returned to the House of Representatives.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. HALE were appointed.

ENGROSSMENT AND ENROLLMENT OF BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing that during the last ten days of any session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided for in the concurrent resolution adopted by the Fifty-third Congress, first session, November 1, 1893, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand when, in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing, it is deemed necessary.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 1, to strike out "ten" and insert "six," before "days;" so as to read: "during the last six days of any session."

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. PALMER. Unless there be some reason why my application shall be denied, I ask that the pending appropriation bill be laid aside informally, and that the Senate give a half hour to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. At this time?

Mr. PALMER. At any time most convenient to the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust that that will not be done now. All of yesterday and all of to-day have been utilized for some purpose other than the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, and I do hope that now we may be able to get the Senate to agree to go on with that bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to submit a few observations to the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I recognize the paramount necessity of disposing of the appropriation bills. If the Senator from Kentucky will indicate when in his judgment I may properly make the application which I made a moment ago for the consideration of the pension bills I will defer to him.

Mr. BLACKBURN. How long will it probably require?

Mr. PALMER. Not over a half hour, if the Senate is as kind to these bills as it usually is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will ask the Senator from Illinois if it would not be agreeable to him to take up those bills, say, at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. PALMER. It would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust that may be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ELECTIONS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, my colleague and I consider that it is our duty to place upon the records of the Senate a protest which I will now proceed to read.

The undersigned Senators, accredited to this body by the State of Alabama, respectfully and earnestly protest against the proceeding in the Senate on the part of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], which has occupied the attention of the Senate for near two days, in clear abuse of the parliamentary law, in disregard of the urgent necessities of the public business, and a gratuitous assault upon the rights of Alabama as a State of the Union and upon the character of her government and people.

The bill pending before the Senate when the Senator from Ne braska was recognized by the Chair as being entitled to the floor on yesterday was the regular appropriation bill for the support of the Post-Office Department. Nothing contained in that bill related to the government of the State of Alabama, or to its election laws, or to any proceedings under such laws in the election of a governor or the members of the legislature or the members of the House of Representatives in Congress, or to the election of a Senator of the United States for Alabama. These subjects were not in the remotest degree relevant, pertinent, or germane to any point of the measure that was before the Senate.

It was impossible, in any parliamentary sense, for the Senate to vote upon any of these subjects while considering that appropriation bill, or upon any motion to expel Alabama from the Union or her Senators from this Chamber, or to institute an investigation as to the regularity, justice, honesty, or constitutionality of her government touching those elections.

It is equally impossible for her Senators, with decent respect for the Senate and a proper regard for the public business, now to reply to the charges of gross fraud and injustice in some eight or nine of the 66 counties in the State upon which the Senator from Nebraska, through an unjustifiable abuse of the privileges of debate, has taken occasion to arraign the State of Alabama at the bar of the Senate as a common culprit. Due respect and deference for the sovereign State they together represent forbid the Senators from Alabama from acknowledging the right of the Senate or from admitting its jurisdiction to hear and determine a question relating to her rights as one of the sovereign States of the American Union.

Whatever attitude Congress may have the power to impose upon a State of the Union, it can not be asserted that either House of Congress, acting alone, can decree that a State is in the Union or out of it, according to its pleasure, nor can an investigation be lawfully made which has for its object such a determination as to the rights of a State, except under a law of Congress duly enacted and approved.

There is no motion pending in the Senate to expel Alabama from the Union, or her Senators from this Chamber, and the attack of the Senator from Nebraska upon that State is, therefore, a merely gratuitous assault.

That it has been made by one who is a stranger to our government, our laws, and our people, who knows nothing about them except upon information derived from others, as he has confessed in his remarks in the Senate, relieves that Senator from the category of being a witness against us, and places him in the more difficult one of becoming our accuser, upon hearsay, or the ex parte statements of interested and embittered politicians, and of adding the weight of his Senatorial position and the solemnity of a hearing before the Senate and the world on the floor of this Chamber to those statements.

The Senators from Alabama consider the form and the time and place selected for this assault upon their State as a serious abuse of the privileges of Senators and of the dignity of the body.

His remarks in the Senate yesterday and to-day were directed (so far as they were pointed to any legislative or other result) to the election of a governor of Alabama, to the election of members of the legislature who had the duty of electing a Senator of the United States, and to the election of members of the House of Representatives in Congress.

He says these seats in the House are being contested. That fact should prevent the Senate from any interference in that matter, under the commonest instincts of propriety. The election of a governor in Alabama is not a matter that, on any occasion, can fall within the jurisdiction of the Senate of the United States to decide. The election of members of the legislature that elect Senators of the United States is a subject that is closed to investigation in this Chamber by many decisions of this body.

The laws of Alabama provide for contests of seats in both branches of the general assembly, but they require the contestant to give security for costs in such cases.

In the present legislature, consisting, in both houses, of 133 members, no seat has been contested, notwithstanding the Senator claims that his party has 9 representatives in the Senate and 36 in the house. That burden is assumed by the Senator from Nebraska, without cost or security for costs, upon information derived from those who hope to gain some reward of office or of allowances for making a contest in the way now attempted.

They supply him with affidavits, letters, and notes, and he launches them upon the Senate and the world through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the expense of the Government.

The Senator makes no statement in his place, vouched for upon his responsibility as a Senator, of any fact that is derogatory to the State government. But, without having submitted these ex parte statements to anyone who is concerned for the honor or rights of that State, he sends them out as proofs of our guilt upon charges that are not even formulated and in the absence of any specifications.

Broadside assertions are made and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is made the vehicle, at public expense, of advertising the personal and political assertions and complainings of men who evade justice at home and under State laws, and before home judges and juries, and come to the Senate for a hearing which it has no jurisdiction to conduct. This is not the proper forum, nor is it the proper occasion, nor the proper manner for arraigning a sovereign State at the bar of the Senate.

We, as her representatives, decline, on our part, to bring Alabama before the Senate upon such accusations, or to make any answer to them in the form or manner in which they are presented, and we ask to spread this our solemn protest against this unprecedented wrong and indignity upon the records of the Senate.

Respectfully,

JOHN T. MORGAN.
JAMES L. PUGH.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] makes the point of order against the pending amendment to the bill. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations in order?

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. VEST. Let it be read.

Mr. HOAR. And then let the point of order be stated.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

THE SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 16, page 4, the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] makes the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I merely desire to say one word before the vote is taken.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations is one intended to reduce the expenditures of the Government. It is intended to be a limitation, notwithstanding the criticisms of the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and others who have addressed the Senate upon this question. The Postmaster-General comes here in his report to Congress and states what is true, that the expenditures of that great Department of the Government exceed the receipts by more than $5,000,000. He has made sundry suggestions to bring the expenditures within the amount of the receipts, and one of the propositions presented to Congress is to reduce the payments on account of the chartering or hiring of the cars known as postal cars. On that item over $3,000,000 is expended per annum, and the statement of the Department is that the amount paid every sixteen months for the use of the cars, the rate being fixed arbitrarily by law over which the Department has no control whatever, will pay the total cost of the cars.

When Congress fixed the rate to be allowed to the railroad companies for these cars it was probably within bounds, it was probably not too great, but like everything else in the transportation of all the products of the world the cost has been reduced. Everything has been reduced except this one single item.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator from Maryland to state at this point what is the compensation allowed by Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. I have not the act before me, but I will give the Senator the information in a few moments.

Mr. President, there has been no reduction, because the law fixes the compensation; but it is admitted on all sides that it is too great. The Postmaster-General and, I think, the Post-Office Committee, at all events the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], in their anxiety to get this expenditure within a reasonable amount have brought in any number of propositions, among them one that the Government should purchase the cars and own, operate, maintain, and repair them. That proposition, it strikes me, would be extraordinary, one not economical, and one which, in my judgment, the Government should not enter upon. I have no desire to reduce the compensation of the railroad companies beyond a fair and reasonable amount, but there is no business man in the country who does not understand perfectly that the arbitrary rate fixed by the act of 1873 is too great and ought to be reduced.

Now, the Appropriations Committee have brought in an amendment putting the full sum of $3,205,000 in the hands of the Postmaster-General to be used at his discretion to enable him to reduce the rate. Senators on the other side of the Chamber have suggested that that is too great a power to place in the hands of the Postmaster-General; and that under the provision as it has been drawn by the Committee on Appropriations possibly he might buy cars. The Senator in charge of the bill has suggested an amendment which will prohibit that idea.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me I will hand him the act of 1873.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator kindly read just what the rates are?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the Senator from Kansas I will read the paragraph in the act of March 3, 1873, that he wants to hear:

For increase of compensation for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the condition and at the rate hereinafter mentioned, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned, to wit: That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed; that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails; and that the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

This that I have read from that act is the contract per hundred-weight that the Post-Office Department agrees to pay for the transportation of the mails per mile; and it will be noticed that the lighting, heating, furnishing, equipping, and maintaining of the cars for the use of the postal clerks is conditioned for in the contract. Now, then, comes the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $5 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length; and $30 per annum for 45 feet cars; and $40 per mile per annum for 50 feet cars; and $50 per mile per annum for 55 to 60 feet cars.

Mr. CULLOM. All that is now discretionary with the Postmaster-General.

Mr. PASCO. I ask if those are the maximum rates?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Those are the maximum rates. I will repeat what I said to the Senate yesterday, that, as the Senator from Maryland remembers, the Postmaster-General assures us that those maximum rates have always been paid and always will be paid unless—

Mr. GORMAN. They are in fact the minimum rates.

Mr. BLACKBURN. They are in fact the minimum rates in point of practice and always will be until by positive legislative enactment they shall be repealed or modified.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire whether those rates have not been reduced by law?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Twice.

Mr. PLATT. Once 10 per cent and once 5 per cent?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true; they have been reduced 5 and 10 per cent.

Mr. PASCO. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. What existing law will it be necessary to repeal in order to carry out the views of the committee?

Mr. GORMAN. The provision the Senator from Kentucky has read.

Mr. PASCO. It does not seem to me that that law needs to be repealed.

Mr. GORMAN. Now, if the Senator will permit me a moment, I can understand perfectly the objection of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, but I have in mind for the moment only Senators on the other side of the Chamber that in an expenditure of this kind and to this amount it would probably be unwise for Congress to put the entire matter in the hands of the Postmaster-General. I think the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] raised the point that it is too great a power to put in the hands of a Postmaster-General. There is force in that suggestion. I am perfectly well aware that Postmasters-General during my time have been unable to cope with these great railroad corporations and keep the expenditures on account of the ordinary carriage of the mails with the postal-car facilities down to a reasonable amount. It is a great power for any man to meet. They have the most intelligent corps of attorneys that there are employed in the United States. It is safe to say that the services of a very large per cent of all the great men of the country are engaged by one or the other line of transportation, and I do not know that in my time I have seen a Postmaster-General strong enough to cope with them and to keep the expenditures of those accounts within proper limits.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator let me ask him a question right there?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to see whether I have not in mind the substance of the amendment. Because no Postmaster-General has been found with courage enough to reduce the maximum rates, therefore we must remove the maximum and give him power to increase the rates. Is not that the precise proposition of the committee?

Mr. GORMAN. It is true that the only reductions which have been made in this expenditure have been made by Congress and not by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, let me ask the Senator how it helps the matter to remove the maximum and give the Postmaster-General power to pay more?

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will give me only a moment, I think I recognize the force of that objection. I recognize what the Senator from New Hampshire and others have said, that they do not want to place this power in the hands of the Postmaster-General, first, because it is wrong in principle; and second, because they fear he will not exercise the power if granted to him. I confess as I find human nature and the present organization and the past organization of the Post-Office Department the latter suggestion strikes me with great force.

I believe it is a fact that the great power we now have to contend with in the management and control of the transportation of our mails is a power greater in this country than any other single organization. It almost dictates the policy of Congress as well as of the Departments. I myself, upon reflection, since the amendment has been brought in here, have taken the same view. I rather think myself, after what has been said and knowing to some extent the capacity and the surroundings of this case, that probably it would be well for Congress again to make a specific reduction of 10 per cent.

It would not be too great; and I shall ask the Senator in charge of the pending bill when we reach the proper point for an amendment to gratify the critics of the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and let us put in the amount of 10 per cent reduction, and then have no question as to the weakness or the strength of the Postmaster-General. I think probably that would be the better way to meet it. But on the direct question presented to the Senate, I should like the Senate to understand that whether the amendment is in order or not, it is an amendment that is perfectly just and fair in itself; that it is in the interest of the people, and does no injustice to the railroads. It is an amendment intended to reduce this appropriation; and that has been done over and over again in every appropriation bill that has ever come into Congress. There never has been a serious question as to the propriety of considering any amendment that restricts or reduces an expenditure.

I submit to the Senate that the bare question which we are to vote upon in a few moments is that and nothing else. When we come to the question of what the compensation ought to be, that is a matter for each Senator to determine for himself; but at the proper time, if the amendment is voted in order, I shall request the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill to put on the following proviso in lieu of the one that is now pending:

That the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to reduce by 10 per cent for the fiscal year 1896 the rates paid for the fiscal year 1895 for all railroad postal-car service.

That will bring up the direct question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would not the same end be better reached to let the amendment read something after the fashion I will suggest? Let it read, after the word "dollars," in line 16:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and a reduction of not less than 10 per cent upon existing rates shall be made.

Mr. GORMAN. That would cover the point.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Leaving out the rest of the italicized amendment proposed by the committee looking to the repeal of existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator how we know that 10 per cent will be the right reduction to make.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not say it is; I say, "not less than 10 per cent." I would leave it in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, provided he reduced it more than 10 per cent; but I would make it compulsory upon the Department to reduce it that much. Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly; but I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the committee has such evidence before it as will justify it in making this reduction.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Most certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Does the Senator know whether the fast mails can be continued across this continent if there is a reduction of 10 per cent?

Mr. BLACKBURN. We have the authority of the Post-Office Department for saying that this reduction will in no wise affect the schedules upon which mails are now being delivered. When the Senator talks about fast mails he is likely either to get confused himself or to confuse somebody else. This provision has nothing to do with the special-facilities fund for fast-mail service. That is another part of the bill altogether.

Mr. CAREY. What I want to say to the Senator—

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming appeals to me, I will yield to him. I have the floor, I think.

Mr. CAREY. I beg pardon; I did not know that the Senator had the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not claiming the floor; I have it not.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. CAREY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that I do not know of any investigation which the Committee on Appropriations has made justifying it in coming to a conclusion that any abatement or reduction of rates or increase of rates is proper now. A certain fixed law of the land declares what shall be the rates until that law is changed under due form and order. If I have ever seen any amendment that barely and boldly in terms declared itself to be general legislation this is one, for it says that appropriating, as the other House has appropriated, the general fund under existing law the "said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General," which is a change of law. But that there might be no question that it was a change of law and general legislation it goes on and says, "any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it has been suggested that that portion of the amendment shall be dropped and left out of consideration.

Mr. HALE. The question of order is upon the amendment as it is submitted now to the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I intend to ask permission to modify the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Then, taking the hint the Senator has made, that he abandons the declarative part of the amendment which in terms announces that it is change of existing law, I would simply say that if you leave off that declarative part the amendment is just the same a change of existing law, and it is general legislation.

Senators ought not to be confused by the term "general legislation," because if legislation affecting one of the great Departments of the Government, whether it be the Post-Office, the Treasury, the Navy, or the War Department, in its operations is not general legislation, then there is hardly any general legislation on the statute book. General legislation, as I understand it, as used in the clause of the rules that is invoked here, means legislation that is not private legislation. We have the body of general legislation every year, the legislation that is enacted at a session of Congress, approved by the President, and thereby becoming a law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the definition he is now giving of general legislation, is he not somewhat revising the opinion he expressed by his vote here recently on the amendment to the diplomatic and consular bill proposing to appropriate $500,000 for a cable?

Mr. HALE. Not in the slightest.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was not general legislation?

Mr. HALE. That was entirely different from this provision.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; it was for a cable.

Mr. HALE. I did not express myself on the subject whether it was general legislation or not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought the Senator voted that it was not general legislation.

Mr. HALE. I voted that it was in order because it was announced by everybody; and there are, I may say here—and I should like the attention of the Chair, though what I am going to say may not be worth listening to—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is listening to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. There are very few questions that in the previous history of the Senate points of order being made have been submitted to the Senate. I listened with some dissatisfaction the other day to the broad statements made by two or three Senators that the rules of this body amount to nothing and are only made to be broken. I deny that such is the fact. The great body of the rules of the Senate are clearly drawn, easily comprehended, and are followed by the Senate in doing its business. The Senate is an orderly body. It is emphatically an orderly body. It proceeds in order, and when the rules are invoked and points of order are made in the previous history of the Senate they have in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred been observed.

There are rare cases where great questions arise, and having been submitted upon points of order to the Senate, the Senate has voted upon the merits of the proposition and not upon the merit of the point of order. But those questions have been rare in my experience. I have never known in the consideration of an appropriation bill where points of order are made, sometimes a hundred on an appropriation bill, that more than one or two in a session would be submitted to the body to decide, but the Chair, whoever may be in the chair (and we have been fortunate and are now in having good parliamentarians in the chair), has decided the question. It is a rare case that any appeal is taken. The rule is invoked, it is read, or is already familiar in the mind of the Presiding Officer, the decision is made, and the Senate bows to it.

I have never known in my experience a half dozen cases of appeal from the decision of the Chair upon points of order. The rules are not to be broken as a general thing, but are made to be kept. The only way the Senate will ever proceed in an orderly manner, or in manner of dispatch, to do the business of the Senate, is that points of order, unless they are these rare, great questions, shall be decided promptly by the Chair without debate, and then let any Senator who chooses take an appeal.

That is my observation, and I think that it is necessary for the conduct of business. I do not believe in any other way, with the great appropriation bills yet to be reached, that we can get through the business of the Senate, saying nothing of any measures outside of the appropriation bills, between now and the 4th day of March next. The only way will be to execute what has been heretofore the rule, the practice of the Senate, that the Chair shall decide points of order and then whoever chooses to appeal may take an appeal. But no appeals are taken, practically.

Now, as to the question of general legislation. When I was diverted by the question of the Senator from Kentucky I was trying to come to the point of what is general legislation. Some Senators seem to have an idea that any legislation which does not apply to the solar system or the inhabitants of the earth or the people of the United States is not general. I do not so understand general legislation. I understand that our frame of statutes, which comes to us every year, is made up of general legislation and private legislation, comprehending two classes. When we legislate for a great Department of the Government, when we declare what shall be the operation of the Post-Office Department, which is one of the general Departments of the Government, it is general legislation; it is legislation such as it is provided in our rules is not in order upon an appropriation bill to be so changed. If there is any argument that can be made it is that way. Otherwise, as I have said, you will get nothing construed as general legislation unless it treats upon the whole subject of the United States and all the people therein.

Therefore, Mr. President, to me it is as plain as day that the amendment is itself in form general legislation, declared to be general legislation, and that it is none the less general legislation because the declarative part is struck off at the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky. The body of laws under which the Post-Office Department lives and operates and has its being and its efficiency declares that these rates shall be fixed by the law at certain amounts for each rate. That is the general provision applied to all this service, and whenever we undertake to change it upon an appropriation bill, we are doing it out of order. So, upon the rules of the Senate, which I still adhere to and believe should be adhered to, I have no hesitation in voting that this proposition, however much you may divide it and leave off the declarative part, still means a change in existing law and is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now propose what I send to the desk, in lieu of the amendment printed in italics on page 4, and we will see whether any objections which have been stated to the proposed amendment can be applied to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to insert, after the word "dollars," in line 16, page 4:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General: Provided, That a reduction of not less than 10 per cent shall be made upon the present rates of compensation: And provided also, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator under the rules of the Senate get any additional jurisdiction against the point of order by declaring that the amendment shall reduce expenditures? The other House has that rule. He and I have had service together there and years ago became familiar with that rule; but that rule has never been adopted in the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean to say that when Congress on two occasions heretofore has reduced the rate of compensation on the postal cars it was not in order on an appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. It clearly would not have been in order if the point of order had been made. I do not object—

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator means to make a point of order upon the amendment, I certainly am ready to meet it. If it has come to that, I should like to have the Senator from Maine point me to a rule that strips Congress of the power to reduce the rates of compensation that it is now paying on these contracts for the transmission of the mails.

Mr. HALE. It is for the Senator to point out to me a rule under which he can do it. If a provision were brought in here in an appropriation bill that the salaries of members of the Senate and the other House should be $4,000, although that is a reduction, I do not suppose that there would be any question but that it would be subject to a point of order that it changed existing law. The reduction of a rate fixed by law is no more in order than the increase of a rate fixed by law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The rate, the sum that is being paid to these railroad companies has no fixed term of years to run.

Mr. HALE. I do not speak about funds; but the Senator has just read the classification fixed by law which is upon the statute books, as to how this shall be done. I do not know whether it is right or wrong. I have not looked into that question. I know that we are undertaking here to change that general law, and that generally that is not a good thing for us to undertake. Whether it will be good in this case I do not know. I have not investigated it; I have had no time to investigate it.

I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that he is very thorough in his preparation about bills he has charge of and bills in which he is interested, and he has not had time to look into this whole question to see whether these rates ought to be reduced 10 per cent. I do not believe—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I have looked into it very thoroughly.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator has he must have sat up nights, because he has been very busy here and in the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Maine is not a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is just the same, I think, subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. Then, Mr. President, I understand the Senator at last, and his proposition now, translated into English, means this, and nothing else: That the railroad companies hold vested rights at the figures fixed in the act of March 3, 1873, and that it is not within the power of an American Congress, either now or in the remainder of time or in the stretch of eternity, ever to reduce their compensation one penny. He has not asserted the right of eminent domain as involved here, but he has asserted in plain English that the railroad companies hold vested rights at present rates of compensation, and that the Congress of the United States has no power now, and never can have any, even under an amendment to the Constitution, to reduce the rates of compensation paid to these railroad companies.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, he knows I have made no such statement as that. I have simply said that in this narrow, selected arena of an appropriation bill we can not do it where the point of order is invoked.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to let the Senate pass upon that.

Mr. HALE. I have not said that. On a bill properly brought in here, which had been investigated by the appropriate committee, of course Congress could do it. I made no such suggestion as the Senator has stated, but I said we could not do it here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. We are doing it in a dozen instances in this very bill.

Mr. HALE. I think probably we are.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On last Saturday the Senator from Maine saw no objection, although a point of order was strenuously urged, to doing that same thing on another appropriation bill, where there was an opportunity to expend some millions of money in building a cable across the Pacific Ocean.

I am perfectly willing to submit this question to the Senate and let the Senate determine on the modified amendment whether it is possible for the Congress of the United States ever to lay its sacrilegious hand upon one penny of the fixed, exorbitant, robber rates of compensation which are now being paid to these railroad companies for the use of the postal cars outside of any contract, in fulfillment of no obligation, in redemption of no promise or pledge ever given, and in discharge of no obligation that exists either in any court of equity, law, or conscience on this earth.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator before he sits down kindly state to the Senate whether this new amendment is from the Committee on Appropriations or does he offer it individually?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I claim that I have the right to offer it. I am in charge of this bill; I have consulted with the other members of the Committee on Appropriations to whom I have had access; I am offering it with their approval; and I think the Senator from Nebraska will bear me out in the statement that, so far as my observation or experience goes in the Senate Chamber, I never heard the right of a Senator in charge of a bill questioned when he undertook to modify an amendment that was pending.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not understand that this was a modification, but that it was the entire abandonment of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By no means. If the Senator will take the trouble to read the proposed amendment I do not think he will need an argument to convince him that it is anything more than a modification.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is a total change of the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not a total change.

Mr. MANDERSON. A substitute.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not. It is a modification of the amendment printed in italics, as the Senator may inform himself by having it read at the desk.

Mr. MANDERSON. I tried to inform myself on that subject. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said the Senator could inform himself by having it read at the desk.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask, then, that the proposition reported by the Committee on Appropriations be read, and after it the substitute or amendment or modification proposed by the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which was, on page 4, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed.

Mr. MANDERSON. Now, kindly read the substitute.

The SECRETARY. The substitute reads as follows:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General: Provided, That a reduction of not less than 10 per cent shall be made upon present rates of compensation; And provided also, That no part of the said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars.

Mr. MANDERSON. I now submit to the Senator whether that is not substantially a new proposition, involving, as it does, a provision for the reduction of the rates of compensation and excluding any expenditure for the purchase of postal cars.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think not; but if it will save time I will just accept the situation as this, that the Senator from Nebraska challenges my right—

Mr. MANDERSON. No, I do not do that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To offer anything in lieu of the amendment submitted by the committee. I will accept that as the situation; I will disclaim any authority or right to do that; and in my own individual right as a Senator I now submit that as an amendment to the pending amendment. I certainly have that right.

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit that if that is the position taken by the Senator from Kentucky, and if he offers this proposition in his individual capacity as a Senator, not as representing the committee, it is subject to the point of order that it has not received the sanction of the favorable report of a standing or select committee of this body one day before the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean to say that any Senator, the humblest one on this floor, has not a right to offer any amendment he pleases to any amendment that may be proposed to this bill?

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit this is not an amendment to the committee's amendment, but a substitute offered by the Senator in his individual capacity.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He has no right when I offer an amendment to an amendment to insist upon its being a substitute. The Senator who moves it moves it as a substitute or an amendment, as he pleases. I am astounded that a member of the Committee on Rules, so well versed in parliamentary law as the Senator from Nebraska, should intimate that any particular Senator in this Chamber has not an unquestionable right to offer any amendment he pleases to any and every amendment that is proposed to this bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. But here is the astonishing proposition, as it seems to me, that, the committee amendment being pending, the point of order was made upon it and is pending and not disposed of.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; it has been pending for two days.

Mr. MANDERSON. Pending that, the Senator in his individual capacity submits an amendment which, it seems to me, is a very different proposition from that proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendment is intended to be different.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is offered by an individual Senator, and I invoke the rule that he must have the sanction of the report of a standing or select committee of this body to make such an amendment in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All I have to say is that this is the first time—and I repeat it—that I ever knew a Senator to challenge the right of another Senator in charge of a bill to modify an amendment which he had submitted.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But as the Senator from Nebraska did challenge that right in my case, in order to save time, if it be possible to do that, I yield, and I assert no right except the right that every member of this body holds in his own individual capacity to offer an amendment to an amendment pending. I offer that now.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator claim that when an amendment is moved by a committee and a point of order is taken to it that any individual Senator can move an amendment to that amendment until the point of order is decided?

Mr. BLACKBURN. We can not have it decided until the time the point of order is disposed of.

I stated to the Senate, in the plainest language of which I am master, that I proposed to submit a modification of the committee's amendment, hoping that it would meet the views of the objector and do away with the necessity of passing upon that point of order. If that is not the result, and if the point of order is insisted upon, then I want that point of order decided; and, no matter what may be the decision of the Chair or of the Senate, I shall then move the modified amendment which I have had read at the desk of the Secretary.

Mr. MANDERSON. As I understand it, then, it is simply a notice of an amendment that is to come.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I had asked that it might be accepted, and I heard no objection from any Senator.

Mr. MANDERSON. What I feared was that the Senator in steering his parliamentary ship so that it might avoid Scylla has lost it on Charybdis. I want to avoid that shipwreck.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust the Senator will allow me the privilege of selecting my own pilot. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the modification of the original amendment as proposed by the committee?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly there is, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. He said, in reply to my former question, that I was referring to another provision of the bill. I want to know whether this bill purposes to pay for fast mails except under this special provision.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will show the Senator that it does not pay for them anywhere and does not propose to. As the bill came from the House of Representatives that paragraph began with line 25, at the foot of page 4, and ran down to and including line 7, on page 5. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended that that whole paragraph be stricken out.

Mr. CAREY. I have made no allusion whatever to that paragraph.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understood the Senator did.

Mr. CAREY. I ask the Senator this question: If the Committee on Appropriations has investigated this question, and if the reduction is made in the price allowed to these postal cars and the transportation of mails, whether the fast mail across the continent will be maintained in that connection?

Mr. BLACKBURN. What does the Senator mean by "fast mail?"

Mr. CAREY. There is a fast mail leaving the city of Chicago at 3 o'clock in the morning, reaching Omaha in the afternoon at 5, and then proceeding across the continent. As I understand, the way we obtain that mail service is not by a subsidy, but by the Postmaster-General diverting the mails from parallel lines to that road on condition that the road will run that fast mail.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This provision does not interfere with that in the slightest; and so says the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CAREY. It will interfere with it if it interferes with the compensation which is allowed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the pending amendment be agreed to, it does not interfere in any way whatever with the transportation of the mails about which the Senator inquires; and so states the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CAREY. It undoubtedly will interfere with that service, because it is carried on under this very clause of this bill.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator another question, if he will kindly answer it, which is, whether it is in the discretion of the Postmaster-General as to what compensation shall be allowed?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would say no, and that for twenty-two years it never has been.

Mr. CAREY. That certainly does not alter the law. It fixes the maximum rate he may allow, and he is not compelled to allow any compensation for the fast mail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Is the proposed amendment in order?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I have been waiting to say a few words on this important subject. I have not been disposed to discuss the point of order, although I agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that, this being general legislation upon an appropriation bill which changes materially existing law, it is subject to the point of order.

Upon the merits of the question I desire to extend my thanks to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], representing the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, who have proposed this amendment for relieving me from a very great apprehension that I felt on yesterday, and down to a recent period to-day, with reference to the amendment. I had supposed that the amendment was designed to give unlimited power to the Postmaster-General to increase the compensation of the railroad companies for postal-car service to just such an extent as he might choose to go.

I had read the provisions of the statute which provide that the compensation for the mail-car service should not exceed certain sums, and I had felt that there was safety in those provisions, that the Postmaster-General had ample power to reduce the payments below the sums fixed by the statute, but had no power to exceed the maximum fixed by the statute, and here was a provision reported by the committee deliberately, presumably after having had full consideration in the committee room, which proposed to strike down the maximum sum fixed by the statute and to repeal all restrictions upon the Postmaster-General, and to allow him to take the $3,505,000 and apply it to the railway post-office car service, paying exactly such rates as he chose to pay.

Mr. President, that was the proposed amendment as I read it yesterday and as I read it now in the printed bill before me, and I felt that that was not only obnoxious to the point of order, but was a most unwise provision of law.

It is the policy of the Government to make specific appropriations in all cases where specific appropriations can be made. No one knows any better than the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that that is the policy of the Committee on Appropriations, which they have aided during this Congress in conducting so well in this body; and here they come in and produce a most extensive possible provision, which strikes down at one blow every provision of existing law which is to guide the Postmaster-General in the expenditure of this large sum of $3,505,000, and says to him: "Spend that money exactly as you please; give it to what railroad companies you please to give it; take it away from what railroad companies you choose to take it away from; and when you pay it to any railroad company for postal-car service, pay for that postal-car service exactly the prices that you choose to pay."

That was the amendment of the committee; that was the amendment that was debated yesterday and the amendment that was debated to-day until a few moments ago, when the Senator from Kentucky, upon his responsibility as an individual Senator, proposed to amend the amendment of the committee and make it, as he now proclaims and as the Senator from Maryland proclaims, an economical provision designed for the purpose of reducing Government expenditures.

Mr. President, I know the Senator from Maryland has been promising us all this session some measure of economy. The Senator promised it to us upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and we succeeded in getting a little economy, but very little, upon that bill. The Senator from Maryland has taken the floor to-day, and now it appears that here is one of the Senator's measures of economy; but when you examine the Senator's measure of economy exactly as it comes through the Committee on Appropriations, lo and behold, it is a provision intended to become a part of a statute which takes away every existing limitation and restriction upon the Postmaster-General in the expenditure of this large sum of money, and says to him, "Expend it exactly as you please, do with it just what you choose, and you shall be justified in doing this, any provision of existing law to the contrary notwithstanding." That is the measure of economy proposed by the Committee on Appropriations!

Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Maryland in framing this provision of the bill in committee, if he had really intended it to be what he now says it is to be, a measure of economy and reduction, had not made the fact that this was economy and reduction to stand right out upon the face of this proposition itself, so that we might understand in the beginning that it was economy and reform which the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maryland were after, and not, as we read it then and as we must read it now, a measure to remove every restriction from the Postmaster-General, to put this enormous sum of money wholly at his discretion and within his power to do with it exactly what he pleases.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure that it is the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire to be entirely fair, and he will not forget that the RECORD shows that I stated yesterday morning that the committee would be under obligations to any Senator who would suggest any modification of the language of the proposed amendment that would better accomplish the purpose of the committee, which I avowed then and there, and that was to reduce the present existing rates of compensation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do wish to be entirely fair to the Senator, but the Senator is aware that everything that is said in the debate is not listened to by the 88 Senators who are now entitled to seats upon this floor. The Senator did make an opening statement; but if it was intended when this provision was drawn up to make it a measure of economy and reduction, I did not know it until after there had been opposition made to the clause and quite a debate had taken place upon it.

Mr. President, I am not impugning the good faith of the Senator from Kentucky nor the good faith of the Senator from Maryland; I accept their statements that the object of the original provision was to reduce the compensation for the postal-car service; but this I am afraid of, that the amendment was drawn for the committee by somebody else, prepared perhaps at the Post-Office Department, and that it was brought to the two Senators who now take an interest in it and conduct the advocacy of it, and they were told that it was designed for the purpose of enabling the Postmaster-General to cut down these rates, and as those Senators are very busy and entirely innocent, they were induced to take a clause which, on the face of it, as it seems to me, is very objectionable to any economist or reformer in this body.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure the Senator wants to be corrected when he is in error.

Mr. CHANDLER. Always.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In this case he is a poor guesser, for the amendment as italicized in the bill as reported by the committee was drafted and redrafted more than a half dozen times by the committee, and never was furnished by anybody.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, Mr. President, I wish the committee had put me out of my misery when the report came in—

Mr. BLACKBURN. You would not be happy then. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Instead of holding me here a day and a half under the impression that here was a very dangerous power to be sought for by the Postmaster-General, one that is not in accordance with the existing practices and policy of the Committee on Appropriations, and which was intended to give a dangerous power to the Postmaster-General in the expenditure of this money.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. How does the Senator understand the existing law to be in regard to the control of the Postmaster-General over this appropriation without the committee's amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is perfectly clear how it is. The Postmaster-General can pay for the postal-car service according to certain schedules, not exceeding so much money for each postal car that is used. The provision has been read over and over again, but it is an important part of the discussion of this subject, and therefore I shall read it again:

SEC. 4004. Additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length; and $30 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars; and $40 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars; and $50 per mile per annum for 55 to 60 foot cars.

And, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] showed yesterday, there have been two reductions in the maximum rate.

Mr. President, here is an existing system which has grown up after many years' practice, a system of postal-car service. It has become a part of the statute law, and it has become a part of the methods of conducting the Post-Office Department. This appropriation, as it has been made hitherto, has been made with reference to the existing law and with reference to the existing customs of the Post-Office Department, and there has not been the slightest difficulty under that law in having any Postmaster-General cut down the rates if he thought they were exorbitant.

I never dreamed when I saw this provision and compared it with the statute that the object was to reduce expenditures, to reduce the price to be paid for the postal-car service. I never dreamed that was the result, because the moment I looked at this provision of the Revised Statutes I saw that a maximum was fixed, and that any Postmaster-General who had courage to do it could cut the rate down 10 per cent, 20 per cent, 30 per cent, or could cut it down to any per cent he pleased, and there would be no appeal from his decision except to come to Congress and have the Postmaster-General overruled in his projects of reform by an affirmative statute the other way.

Mr. GRAY. Now, will the Senator as satisfactorily explain how the committee's amendment will alter and change that method of control?

Mr. CHANDLER. The committee's amendment strikes down the limitations upon the prices to be paid, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] showed yesterday, and here is a provision that the Postmaster-General shall pay not exceeding certain rates, and the committee bring in a provision which says:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed.

Now, I ask the Senator from Delaware whether if that provision—

Mr. GRAY. I am asking for information.

Mr. CHANDLER. If that provision were to pass exactly as it was reported by the committee, whether the Postmaster-General could not raise rates and pay any price he pleased?

Mr. GRAY. I think he could. I wanted that to be made plain.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, I ask the Senator whether that was not a suspicious amendment to bring in here, and whether anyone would have supposed that that amendment was a measure of economy and reform up to the time the Senator from Maryland rose a little while ago and said the object of it was to cut down expenditures? I do not suppose the Senator from Maryland intended to lead the Senate to believe that the Senator from Kentucky was any less disposed to be economical in this body than he. But the Senator from Maryland seems to have thought that there was some doubt in the minds of the Senate as to what this amendment was intended for. So the Senator arose and said the object of it was to cut down expenditures. I say, Mr. President, in all good faith, that until the Senator arose and said that, I believed the object of this clause, as it was put in the bill, was to secure power to the present Postmaster-General to increase the rates of payment for postal-car service.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator makes a very broad statement now, and not such a one as he ordinarily makes, one which in fact is so far from being accurate, that I think the Senator himself will be glad to correct it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was accurate as to my belief, Mr. President, not as to the purpose of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. No, as to the law. The Senator from New Hampshire understands perfectly that this provision as reported in the bill with the amendment limits the total expenditure on this account to $3,205,000, and that it is not possible for the Postmaster-General to exceed that amount. The Senator also knows that it is not unusual to put in the hands of the Postmaster-General the discretion to use large amounts of money, for in that service it can not be otherwise.

The Senator also knows that the act fixing the compensation per car has for twenty years been construed to mean that the maximum shall be the minimum. The Postmaster-General has so stated, his predecessors have so stated, and if he had the undoubted power to use his discretion he would use it and reduce the compensation. After the comments of the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] it occurred to me that if there could be any question as to the sincerity of the Post-Office Department or the ability of the Postmaster-General to do it, it would be wise for Congress to say that the reduction shall be at least 10 per cent.

The Senator from New Hampshire, I think, therefore did myself and others who have considered this matter in committee a very great injustice in what he said. Our whole object from the beginning, and the provision carries it on its face, was to report a measure for economy, to save three or four hundred thousand dollars to the people without crippling the service and without doing injustice to anyone.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind the Senator from New Hampshire that by the unanimous-consent agreement at 5 o'clock pension bills were to be taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then allow me to remark that the trouble with the Senator from Maryland is that what he has stated does not appear upon the face of the amendment, but the contrary is clearly to be implied from the face of the amendment as it stood until the motion was made to amend it a little while ago.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact, if it be necessary to make the statement, that the taking up of pension bills at 5 o'clock under the unanimous-consent agreement is not understood as prejudicing or affecting the status of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. VEST. Certainly not. The appropriation bill will be informally laid aside.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly not. The Senator from Kentucky would have a right to call up the appropriation bill anyway.

Mr. PALMER. I so understood it when the Senator from Kentucky gave me the half hour. I call for the special order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first private pension bill on the Calendar favorably reported will be proceeded with.

JOSEPH PORTER.

The bill (S. 2141) granting a pension to Joseph Porter was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "rate," to strike out "provided for total blindness" and insert "of $30 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph Porter, late a private in Company K, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE OTT.

The bill (H. R. 6868) for the relief of Catherine Ott, widow of Joseph Ott, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Catherine Ott, widow of Joseph Ott, late a musician in the Veteran Reserve Corps.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAULINE M. POOLER.

The bill (H. R. 862) granting a pension to Pauline M. Pooler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay a pension of $12 per month to Mrs. Pauline M. Pooler, of Caledonia, Ohio, dependent mother of Lawson E. Pooler, late a private in Company D, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry. It is provided that if the widow of the soldier on account of whose services the pension is granted shall ever be granted a pension on his account the pension proposed to be granted by the bill shall cease.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT KIRACOFFE.

The bill (S. 2307) granting a pension to Robert Kiracoffe, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Robert Kiracoffe, late a private in Company G, Eighty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY G. ALLABACH.

The bill (S. 1639) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay a pension of $30 per month to Nancy G. Allabach, widow of Peter H. Allabach, late colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIAN C. GURNEY.

The bill (S. 2539) granting a pension to Marian C. Gurney was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "Infantry," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That if it shall at any time be ascertained that said James W. Gurney is living, then the pension herein granted shall cease to be paid to said widow.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved June 27, 1890, the name of Marian C. Gurney, the indigent widow of James W. Gurney, late a captain of Company E, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That if it shall at any time be ascertained that said James W. Gurney is living, then the pension herein granted shall cease to be paid to said widow.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARY L. CLARK.

The bill (H. R. 0074) to pension Mrs. Mary L. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay a pension of $12 per month to Mrs. Mary L. Clark, of Cottonwood Falls, Kans., the stepmother of James K. Clark, who was a private in Company A, One hundred and tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask what is the ground for the pension which is proposed to be paid? Is not this case covered by general law? Is there not somewhere or other a general provision for stepmothers? What is the point in the case? It is not patriotic to make any inquiry about pension bills, but once in a while curiosity impels one to ask a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. PALMER. I ask to have the report read. That is the best explanation. This is a case where the stepmother has been the actual mother.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PALMER January 29, 1895, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6074) granting a pension to Mary L. Clark, have examined the same, and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives hereto appended is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 6794) to pension Mrs. John H. Clark, and submit the following report:

It is shown by the affidavit of George George, S. A. Breese, C. W. Baldwin, and Mrs. J. H. Clark, on file with the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the evidence on file in pension claim of John H. Clark, dependent father of James K. Clark, who was a private in Company A, One hundred and tenth Illinois Volunteers (certificate No. 191886), that Mrs. Mary L. Clark, of Cottonwood Falls, Kans., is widow of the late John H. Clark, and that her husband died at said city on the 29th day of April, 1894, and that he was a pensioner at the rate of $12 per month as dependent father.

Mrs. Clark was married to the late John H. Clark in October, 1847, and at that time her stepson was about four years old. The evidence shows that he lived with his father and stepmother until he entered the Army, and she always cared for him the same as though he were her own son, and that they were very fond of each other.

The evidence on file in the Pension Office shows that the soldier was never married, and that for several years before his enlistment he worked out and helped support his father's family, and that after he enlisted he sent part of his pay to his father.

The soldier, James K. Clark, enlisted August 12, 1862, and served until the date of his death, November 3, 1862, of typhoid fever contracted in the service.

The evidence shows he was in good health at the date of his enlistment; that he had typhoid fever November, 1862; was taken to the hospital at Danville, Ky., where he died.

The evidence shows that the stepmother is now 73 years of age; has a small lot and a little three-room house upon which the taxes are unpaid; that she is in almost destitute circumstances, and will be a charge upon the county unless she is allowed this pension.

Her husband was allowed a pension at $8 per month as dependent father in 1863, which commenced on the 4th day of November, 1862, and which was increased to $12 per month, and continued to the date of his death.

This small pension was the only income the family had, and as the stepmother married the father when the son was but 4 years of age, and always cared for and treated him as her own child, and as the son assisted in the support of father and mother for several years prior to his death, and was never married, and as the stepmother lived with the father until his death, your committee recommend the passage of the bill after being amended by inserting the name "Mary L." in lieu of "John H." in line 7, and also in the title of the bill.

Mr. HILL. This seems to be a proper case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY R. WILLIAMS.

The bill (H. R. 7602) to pension Mary R. Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay a pension of $12 a month to Mary R. Williams, widow of Gustavus A. Williams, deceased, late assistant surgeon in the Army of the United States during the Seminole war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EUNICE PUTMAN.

The bill (H. R. 2051) to grant a pension to Eunice Putman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Eunice Putman, permanently helpless daughter of John Putman, late a private in Company D, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL F. TENANT.

The bill (H. R. 7359) to pension Samuel F. Tenant was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Samuel F. Tenant, late of Company F, Fourth Indiana Legion State Militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. OSGOOD.

The bill (S. 2654) granting an increase of pension to James H. Osgood was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James H. Osgood, late a seaman on the United States ship Circassian, a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLORENCE G. BUSKIRK.

The bill (S. 2671) granting an increase of pension to Florence G. Buskirk was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "Florence," to strike out "G" and insert "W;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Florence W. Buskirk, widow of John W. Buskirk, late a corporal in Company G, Forty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] can explain the bill.

Mr. PALMER. I should prefer to have the report read.

Mr. PLATT. I saw that it was an unusual sum, and therefore asked that the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 4th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2671) granting a pension to Florence W. Buskirk, have examined the same, and report:

Mr. Buskirk when very young went into the Forty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers in the War for the Union, and made an excellent record as a soldier. He was corporal of his company. After his discharge from the Army in 1863, on account of disabilities incurred in the service and in the line of duty, he studied law, and rapidly rose to the head of his profession at Bloomington, Ind. He became one of the best lawyers of his age, although always infirm on account of his army service. Some four or five years before his death his health entirely broke down, and he became utterly helpless. He was pensioned by the Department on account of total disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty at the full rate of $20 per month.

For nearly four years he was unable to walk a single step, or to dress or undress himself, or to use his hands to convey food to his mouth. In this condition his wife, who now survives him, nursed him as a woman would an infant child. All that remained of him was his clear mind, while every want of his body had to be cared for by others. Mrs. Buskirk devoted herself to his care and support without a day's intermission, and hardly an hour's, for more than three years and a half prior to his death. She was left destitute when he died, and his pension ceased, and she is placed on the roll as his widow on a pension of $8 per month. She has neither property nor income except this small pension.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, United States Senator from Indiana, personally appeared before the committee and stated that he was acquainted with the soldier and his family for many years and is personally cognizant of all the facts herein stated, and to his own knowledge he is satisfied that the widow is in extremely needy circumstances.

In view of these exceptional facts and circumstances, your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment.

Amend by striking out the letter "G" in the middle of the name and insert "W" wherever it appears.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Florence W. Buskirk."

SAMUEL GOLDWATER.

The bill (S. 2371) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "roll," to strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert "at the rate of $15 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $15 per month, the name of Samuel Goldwater, late of Company A, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, National Guard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA M. SIPPELL.

The bill (H. R. 6076) to repeal the special act granting a pension to Louisa M. Sippell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Louisa M. Sippell, widow of William E. Sippell, of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry," approved September 29, 1890.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM R. RHEA.

The bill (H. R. 4658) granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Hiram R. Rhea, as of Company G, Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry, at a rate proportionate to the degree of disability from such gunshot wounds as may be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary to have been received at the hands of Confederate soldiers or sympathizers while Rhea was attempting to cooperate with the Union forces, and provided it be shown by the evidence that he was a member of that organization; and repeals the act entitled "An act granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea," approved March 3, 1871.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea, and repealing an act approved March 3, 1871."

CATHARINE DILLON.

The bill (S. 1238) granting a pension to Catharine Dillon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Dillon, of Logansport, Ind., widow of Patrick Dillon, deceased, late a private of Company E, Ninth Regiment of Illinois Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE R. JARDINE.

The bill (S. 2460) granting a pension to Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Brig. Gen. Edward Jardine, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Edward Jardine, late brigadier-general of the Army of the United States, and pay her at the rate of $50 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH A. GRANGER.

The bill (S. 2148) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Granger was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Elizabeth A. Granger, widow of Robert S. Granger, brevet major-general, United States Army, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, to commence from the 26th day of April, 1894, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. ROEBUCK.

The bill (H. R. 6131) to grant a pension to Sarah E. Roebuck was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah E. Roebuck, widow Lawrence R. Roebuck, late quartermaster's employee, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $13 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. HALL.

The bill (S. 2491) granting a pension to Mary A. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Hall, widow of Charles J. Hall, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, and to allow her a pension rated at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG.

The bill (H. R. 6985) granting a pension to William Armstrong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of William Armstrong, late a private in Company A, Gray's Battalion Arkansas Volunteers, in the war with Mexico, and to allow him a pension rated at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA WEEKS.

The bill (H. R. 6493) granting an increase of pension to Julia Weeks was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Julia Weeks, of Allegan, Mich., widow of Capt. Harrison S. Weeks, Eighth Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. MATCHETT.

The bill (S. 2696) granting a pension to William B. Matchett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William B. Matchett, chaplain of the Tenth Regiment of New York Volunteers, at the rate of $15 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD R. KNIGHT.

The bill (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Richard R. Knight was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Richard R. Knight, son of Philip T. Knight, alias Patrick Reardon, late of Company B, Thirty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved June 27, 1890. But if any pension be allowed under the general laws on account of the above-named soldier, pension under this act shall cease.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARILLA PARSONS.

The bill (H. R. 3988) granting a pension to Marilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Marilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich., dependent stepmother of Daniel P. Parsons, late captain of Company D, Eleventh Missouri Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH BROWER.

The bill (H. R. 5642) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brower, a hospital nurse during the war of the rebellion, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Elizabeth Brower, formerly a hospital nurse in the war of the rebellion, and to pay the same to her duly appointed guardian or committee.

Mr. HOAR. Are not all pensions to persons who are under guardianship paid to guardians of course without a special provision?

Mr. QUAY. I suppose that would generally be the case, but this lady is insane and she is in an asylum at present.

Mr. HOAR. This is a House bill?

Mr. QUAY. It is a House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should the word "committee" be in the bill? Who is the committee? There is no such person known in law. The language of the bill is "and to pay the same to her duly appointed guardian or committee."

Mr. QUAY. The "committee" is the name used in the State of Pennsylvania. The guardian appointed by the court under an inquisition of lunacy is called the "committee."

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

Mr. PALMER. In different States different terms are used.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAHAM B. PRINCE.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8486) to relieve Abraham B. Prince. There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to Abraham D. Prince be, and the same is hereby, relieved and exempted from the operations of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, A. D. 1887, and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act in respect to such real estate be, and the same are hereby, remitted.

Mr. HOAR. Was not such an act passed by the Senate in the last Congress?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; it was a statute passed in 1887, forbidding foreigners to hold real estate. This man came to this country when an infant, and supposed he was naturalized by the naturalization of his father.

Mr. HOAR. I thought we passed a statute for his benefit a year or two ago.

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill reported to-day favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, being the bill (S. 2663) to provide for the erection of a public building in the cities of Winston-Salem, N. C.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Senator from North Carolina would explain why this building is to be built in the cities of Winston-Salem. Are they two cities?

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir. As I thought my friend from Connecticut knew, they are known as twin cities in North Carolina. The two cities come right together; there is just a street between; and the public building will answer for both places.

Mr. PLATT. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, in line 12, to strike out "two" before "hundred" and insert "one," and in line 13, to strike out "two" before "hundred" and insert "one;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the cities of Winston-Salem, State of North Carolina, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $150,000, which said sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRONTIER GUARDS.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the courtesy of the Senate to consider the bill (S. 2372) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to place on file in the War Department the names of the officers and members of the Frontier Guards, mustered into the volunteer military service of the United States on the 16th day of April, 1861, and issue discharges to the same.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 6, after the word "guards," to insert "alleged to have been;" in line 9, after the word "furnish," to insert "proof;" in line 10, after the word "satisfactory," to strike out "proof" and insert "to the Secretary of War;" in the beginning of line 11, to strike out "comrades" and insert "members;" and in line 12, before the word "military," insert "such;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the files of the War Department the names of the officers and men of an organization known as the Frontier Guards, alleged to have been regularly mustered into the volunteer military service of the United States on the 16th day of April, 1861, and issue discharges to such of them as shall furnish proof satisfactory to the Secretary of War, by affidavits of members or officers of said organization, that they rendered such military service and were honorably discharged; said discharges shall be in the form and language used by James H. Lane, captain of said Frontier Guards, in issuing discharges therefrom: Provided, That none of said officers or men shall be entitled to pay, or allowance, or bounty, or pension by reason of service in such guards.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. In line 13 I move to insert the word "substantially" after the word "be," and to strike out "and language," in the same line; so as to read:

Said discharges shall be substantially in the form used by James H. Lane, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSS OF PERSONAL PROPERTY IN NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1201) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] be read instead of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that a substitute for the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a substitute for the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read. The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the private property belonging to officers, petty officers, seamen, and others in the naval service of the United States which has been or may hereafter be lost and destroyed in the naval service, under the following circumstances:

First. When such loss or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant.

Second. Where the private property so lost or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of any officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment.

Third. Where it appears that the loss or destruction of the private property was not the fault or negligence of the claimant. And the amount of such loss or losses so ascertained and determined upon settlement by the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be in full for all such loss or damage: Provided, That any claim which shall be presented and acted upon under authority of this act shall be held as finally determined, and shall never thereafter be reopened or considered: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war: And provided further, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as is required by the United States Naval Regulations, and in force at the time of loss or destruction, for such officers, petty officers, seamen, or others engaged in the public service, in the line of duty: And provided further, That the amounts which have been paid to persons in the naval service under sections 238, 239, and 240 of the Revised Statutes shall be deducted in the settlement of all claims under this act: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize the payment to any officer, petty officer, seaman, or other person of any article or articles except such as are required by the United States Naval Regulations in the performance of their official duties: And provided further, That the value of the article or articles lost or destroyed shall be their value at the date of loss or destruction: And provided further, That all claims now existing shall be presented within two years, and not after, from the passage of this act; and all such claims hereafter arising be presented within two years from the occurrence of the loss or destruction. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the reopening or payment of any claims for losses on vessels sunk or otherwise destroyed prior to August 20, 1864.

Mr. COCKRELL. Those provisions are not applicable to the Tallapoosa alone?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; it is a general measure, applicable to all losses of this kind. The object is to substitute a general bill for the special bill. I will let it go over until to-morrow. Let it go back on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. To retain its present place?

Mr. CHANDLER. To retain its place on the Calendar, having been read. The substitute is broader in some respects than I supposed. I will let it remain on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

JAMES GRACE.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now consider the bill (S. 1530) for the relief of James Grace.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $155 to James Grace, of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the court below may in its discretion require as a condition of the appeal an additional injunction bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7731) for the relief of certain Winnebago Indians in Minnesota.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will allow us to go on just five or ten minutes longer.

Mr. QUAY. I hope the Senator from Texas will withdraw the motion.

Mr. COKE. I will withdraw the motion for a few minutes.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT POTTSVILLE, PA.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 155) to erect a public buildings at Pottsville, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BROCKTON, MASS.

Mr. VILAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I have one public-building bill, which is a small one and which has been waiting for a great many years, which I should like to have considered.

Mr. HILL. Is there any more money in the Treasury, Mr. President?

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to withdraw his motion that I may call up the bill to which I refer.

Mr. VILAS. I give way to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 116) for the erection of a public building at Brockton, Mass.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOME FOR DESTITUTE COLORED PERSONS.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7095) to provide for the erection of a national home for aged and infirm colored persons, and for the maintenance of the inmates thereof.

Mr. HILL. Does it take any money?

Mr. PEPPER. No; it is money that is already on hand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it is not right to ask for the consideration of that bill at this time. I am not fighting the bill, but the Senator knows perfectly well that there are two or three Senators who have always insisted on being present when that bill is considered.

Mr. VILAS. I was about to make a statement similar to that made by the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin object?

Mr. VILAS. I do not myself object to the consideration of the bill, but I understand there is objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not making any objection personally, but I know that if the bill should be passed a motion to reconsider would be entered, and it would be of no earthly use to pass the bill.

Mr. VEST. What is the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. It is a bill to provide for the erection of a national home for aged and infirm colored persons and for the maintenance of the inmates thereof.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has objected to that bill time and again.

Mr. VILAS. I think, Mr. President, I must insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 13, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 12, 1895.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PHOTOLITHOGRAPHING FOR PATENT OFFICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for photolithographing for the Patent Office for the current fiscal year, submitted by the Secretary of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in the appropriations for the Department of Justice for the current fiscal year submitted by the Attorney-General; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the House thereto disagreed to by the Senate, and on which a conference was requested, an act (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. BAILEY, and Mr. RAY.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to House bill (H. R. 5740) incorporating the Society of American Florists, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same amended as follows:

In lieu of the words struck out insert the words: "By purchase, and such other estate as may be donated or bequeathed to it;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. H. HATCH,

W. S. FORMAN,

Managers on the part of the House.

M. W. RANSOM,

W. A. PEPPER,

REDFIELD PROCTOR,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House report that they have agreed to the report submitted, the effect of which is to retain the language of the bill as it passed the House, with an amendment which, in lieu of the words stricken out by the Senate, inserts the words "by purchase, and such other estate as may be donated or bequeathed to it;" and respectfully recommend the adoption of the conference report.

W. H. HATCH,

W. S. FORMAN,

Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HATCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

ST. JOSEPH HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (H. Res. 261) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of the appropriation made in the river and harbor act of 1894 for St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 3, after the word "authorized," insert "in his discretion;" so as to make the provision read: "That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion," etc.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

ELIZABETH MOORE ENGLISH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 6885) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, with an amendment of the Senate thereto, on which a conference was requested.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MOSES, Mr. STALLINGS, and Mr. LOUDENSLAGER.

NEWBERRY COLLEGE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 917) for the relief of the Newberry College, South Carolina.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman will allow that bill to lie over until I can confer with him about it. It ought not to pass without careful examination.

Mr. LATIMER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. MAHON objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection on learning that the bill had already been reported by the House Committee on War Claims.

RETURN OF FLAGS TO MICHIGAN REGIMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 113) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the flags of certain regiments of Michigan volunteer infantry.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be now considered.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to return to the State of Michigan the regimental flags of the Seventeenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth Regiments of Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this resolution at this time?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

HISTORICAL MUSEUM, DES MOINES, IOWA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 2539) to grant cannon to the Historical Museum of Des Moines, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REFINING OF BULLION, HELENA, MONT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 1142) directing the parting and refining of bullion to be carried on at the United States assay office at Helena, Mont.; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

CLEARING THE POTOMAC OF ICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 128) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DEEP WATERWAYS BETWEEN THE OCEAN AND GREAT LAKES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 130) authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning deep waterways between the ocean and Great Lakes and providing commissions therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EDUCATION IN MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may now be put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the governor of the State of Mississippi be, and he is hereby, authorized to select out of the unoccupied and uninhabited lands of the United States, within the said State, 46,080 acres of land, in legal subdivisions, being a total equivalent to two townships, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall forthwith, upon receipt of said certificate, issue to the State of Mississippi patents for said lands: Provided, That the proceeds of one township of said lands, when sold or leased, shall forever remain a fund for the use of the agricultural and mechanical college of said State; and the proceeds of one of said townships of land, when sold or leased, shall forever remain a fund for the use of the agricultural and mechanical college for colored persons, established and maintained by said State.

Sec. 2. That in making said selection the governor of said State of Mississippi shall designate the lands for the agricultural and mechanical college, and the lands for the agricultural and mechanical college for colored persons.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I wish to say a single word, and then to ask that the Senate report, which is very brief, may be read. This bill proposes to assign a certain quantity of land for the colored school, mechanical and agricultural, and a similar quantity for the white school, mechanical and agricultural, in the northern part of our State. The bill does not appropriate a single dollar. I ask that the report of the Senate committee be read:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate bill 2000, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

By an act of the legislature of the State of Mississippi, approved May 13, 1871, Alcorn University of Mississippi, a seminary of learning for colored persons, was established, and has been maintained by the State of Mississippi ever since.

By an act of the legislature of the State of Mississippi, approved February 23, 1878, the name of said institution of learning was changed to the Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College of the State of Mississippi. By the act last aforesaid (Laws of Mississippi, 1878, page 118) the Agricultural and Mechanical College of the State of Mississippi was established, and thereafter, in the same year, located at Starkville, Miss., and has been maintained by the State of Mississippi ever since.

The Agricultural and Mechanical College of the State of Mississippi was established and is maintained for the education of the white youth of the State of Mississippi, and the Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College of the State of Mississippi was established and is maintained for the education of the colored youth of the State of Mississippi. The passage of this bill will not require any appropriation of money by the United States Government. It does not grant anything that will bring any revenue into the Treasury of the United States; at the same time it will greatly encourage these worthy institutions of learning and materially add to their efficiency and usefulness.

Your committee therefore unanimously report and recommend that the bill pass without amendment.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. This was the unanimous report of the Senate committee; and the bill passed the Senate unanimously.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPORT ON CHICAGO STRIKE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed of the report on the Chicago strike of June and July, 1894, of the United States Strike Commission, appointed by the President July 20, 1894, 10,500 extra copies, in paper covers, without appendixes; of which number 2,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the use of the Department of Labor; also 5,000 extra copies of said report with appendixes, in paper covers, of which number 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for the use of the Department of Labor.

DEATH OF SENATOR STOCKBRIDGE, OF MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate; which was laid on the table:

Resolved. That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved. That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended, to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved. That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved. That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

ENGROSSMENT AND ENROLLMENT OF BILLS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That during the last ten days of any session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided for in the concurrent resolution adopted by the Fifty-third Congress, first session, November 1, 1893, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand when in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing it is deemed necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Printing have examined this resolution, and also a House resolution in similar terms, introduced by myself, upon which the committee has directed a favorable report. I ask that this Senate resolution be now considered; and if the House agrees to take it up, I propose to move an amendment striking out "ten" and inserting "six," so that the standing resolution on this subject may be suspended during the last six days of the session instead of the last ten days.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "ten," in the first line, and inserting "six;" so as to read, "during the last six days of any session of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should like to ask a question. Is it anticipated by the gentleman from Tennessee that during the last six days of the session the engrossing of bills and resolutions will be after the old style and not by printing?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is anticipated that during the last six days of the short session particularly there may be such a rush in connection with the great appropriation bills that the Government Printing Office, on account of its distance from the Capitol, would not be able to print the engrossed and the enrolled copies. This resolution as amended provides simply that during the last six days of the Congressional session the standing resolution on this subject may be suspended upon the authority of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses, so as to permit certain pages or portions of any bill to be engrossed or enrolled by pen instead of printing.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In other words, the new system, which serves the purpose in the ordinary run of business, when any system would be sufficient, does not do the work when there is pressure; so that we are to have both systems, with presumably the errors of each, and possibly the virtues of neither.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman is altogether mistaken.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am asking for information.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to be making an assumption, not asking a question.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No; there was an interrogation point at the end of my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say then that the gentleman is mistaken in stating that we are to have two systems. I want to say that the experience under the new system has been such as to lead us to believe that it is a most valuable reform. By reason of the improvement brought about by substituting printing for writing not a solitary error, I believe, has escaped the attention of the clerks and the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. Not a single error.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], it will be remembered, called attention a few days ago, when the legislative bill was under consideration, to the fact that not a solitary error has crept into any of these bills, because it is so much easier to detect errors when they are in print than when they are in manuscript. The object of the present resolution is to prevent these errors; such errors, the gentleman remembers, as occurred in the great tariff bill passed in the Fifty-first Congress, as well as other errors of importance which have been found in bills heretofore.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But, if the gentleman will allow me, there has never been any trouble in the ordinary run of the session about the detection of errors and making corrections heretofore. The strain that comes on any system is in the last six days of the session, when most of the time some of us can scarcely tell whether we are standing on our heads or our feet.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is very true; but the error in the McKinley bill, if my recollection serves me right, was not an error committed in the closing hours of the session; for, as I recollect the fact, that bill passed early in October, about the 2d of the month, I think, and we were in session until the 20th of October. So that was not brought about by reason of the hurry and confusion in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. COOMBS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question for information, so as to know how to vote on this proposition. I would like to know the reason for reducing the number of days proposed in the resolution from ten to six?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Simply for the reason that I want to make the time when it is permissible to prepare the bills in this way just as short as possible. We prefer the other system, and this is only to be used in case of absolute emergency.

Mr. COOMBS. But does not the resolution contemplate that if no necessity arises for the use of this modification it will not be employed, no matter what time in the session you permit it to be done?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, for that matter, according to the view of the gentleman, it would be just as well to modify the resolution so as to make it applicable to the entire session. But we desire to reduce the limit as low as possible.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NEWARK BAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 7839) to bridge the Newark Bay.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were read.

Mr. DUNN. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DUNN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESTORATION OF CERTAIN LANDS, ALABAMA AND MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8614) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior for restoration to the public domain lands in the States of Alabama and Mississippi not needed for naval purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be certified to the Secretary of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, the whole or such portion or portions of the several tracts of land in the States of Alabama and Mississippi heretofore set apart and reserved for naval uses as are no longer required for the purposes for which they were reserved, or for any purposes connected with the naval service; and upon such certification the tracts of land described therein shall be duly restored to and become a part of the public lands of the United States: Provided, That all persons who have, in good faith, made improvements on said reserved lands so certified at the time of the passage of this act, and who occupy the same, shall be entitled to purchase the part or parts so occupied and improved by them, not to exceed 160 acres to any one person, at $1.25 per acre, within such reasonable time as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KYLE. I ask that the amendment recommended by the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "States," in line 12, and add the following: "And a preference right of entry for a period of six months from the date of this act shall be given all bona fide settlers who are qualified to enter under the homestead law and have made improvements and are now residing upon any agricultural lands in said reservations, and for a period of six months from the date of settlement when that shall occur after the date of this act: Provided, That persons who enter under the homestead law shall pay for such lands not less than the value heretofore or hereafter determined by appraisal, nor less than the price of the land at the time of the entry, and such payment may, at the option of the purchaser, be made in five equal installments, at times and at rates of interest to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I will object, Mr. Speaker, until I can understand something about it. It seems to me that this is a matter of sufficient importance to entitle it to some consideration.

Mr. KYLE. If the gentleman will permit an explanation I think I can meet his objection.

I will state to the gentleman and to the House that the purpose of this bill is to restore to the public domain certain lands in the States of Mississippi and Alabama that have been heretofore by executive order reserved for naval purposes. The Secretary of the Navy states in his report that the lands are no longer necessary for naval purposes for the reason that live oak has gone out of use in naval construction, and these lands were reserved because of the live-oak timber they contained. They have stopped using that kind of timber in the Navy, and the Secretary recommends that the lands be restored to the public domain. They will of course then be subject to entry as any other public lands.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is the quantity of land involved?

Mr. KYLE. About 30,000 acres, I am informed, in Mississippi, perhaps a little more; 40,000 acres in Alabama.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I judge from the bill that there are a lot of trespassers on the land now.

Mr. KYLE. Well, the bill guards against wrong to the Government on that account.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; but they are allowed to take at $1.25 an acre, although they may be trespassers upon the land now.

Now, I do not know what the lands are worth, but you might be giving land worth $25 or $50 an acre at a nominal price.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I think there is a uniform price for all lands in Mississippi.

Mr. KYLE. That is correct.

Mr. STOCKDALE. If the gentleman from Illinois will notice the amendment to the bill he will see that provision is made against that. It says:

Provided, That persons who enter under the homestead law shall pay for such lands not less than the value heretofore or hereafter determined by appraisal, nor less than the price of the land at the time of the entry, and such payment may, at the option of the purchaser, be made in five equal installments, at times and at rates of interest to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LACEY. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this is a copy of the general bill restoring reservations to the public domain.

Mr. KYLE. This bill comes with the indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy, who says the lands are no longer needed for the purpose to which they were heretofore devoted, and recommends their restoration to the public domain. It comes with the unanimous report of the Committee on the Public Lands; and if the House will permit me, I would like to read what is stated by the Secretary of the Navy in reference to it, which is as follows:

In the early part of the present century a number of tracts of land in the States of Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi were reserved from the public domain for naval purposes as a source of supply for live-oak timber. At that time the probable future needs of the Government appeared to warrant the segregation from the public domain of these extensive tracts, particularly in view of the fact that live oak was then the chief material used for the heavy timbers of naval vessels. In consequence, however, of the general disuse of wood in naval construction, such timber is now no longer required in any quantity for naval uses, and the Department has for many years past given no attention to said lands.

There are on hand now in the navy-yards at Norfolk, Brooklyn, and elsewhere many thousands of feet of seasoned live oak, for which the Department has been unable to find either use or sale. The Navy Department has not, therefore, seen proper to extend any special supervision over these reservations, especially as the Department of Justice is charged with the general duty of preventing trespasses upon the property of the United States. This duty is, no doubt, being faithfully performed, but so far as the Navy is concerned no reason is perceived why the Department of Justice should be longer burdened with the task. Having stated this much, it may not be out of place to say that, in my opinion, such reservations obstruct the settlement and development of the sections in which they are located, and offer a continuing temptation to trespassers and squatters.

The Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a recent inquiry from this Department on the subject, stated that in his opinion ample provision for the restoration to the public domain of such of these lands as lie within the State of Florida is contained in the "act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior all lands in the State of Florida not needed for naval purposes," approved March 3, 1879 (Stat. L., vol. 20, page 470). This Department is now taking the necessary steps to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior such of these lands as are no longer needed for naval purposes, in order that they may be restored to "entry and sale in the same manner and under the same conditions as other public lands of the United States" in pursuance of section 2 of the act cited.

The provisions of the act of March 3, 1879, apply, however, only to lands lying within the State of Florida. Inasmuch as the conditions which have prompted the action above referred to in the case of lands in the State of Florida apply with equal force to naval reservations of like character in the States of Alabama and Mississippi, it is respectfully recommended that Congress be asked to extend the provisions of that act to the States last named.

Thus it will be seen that he recommends that these lands be restored.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand it, the Committee on the Public Lands are unanimous in their report.

Mr. KYLE. That is my information about it.

Mr. LACEY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who is a member of that committee, given this matter a personal examination?

Mr. LACEY. I have given this matter careful attention, and I will say in addition to what has been stated that in each navy-yard there is a quantity of live-oak timber piled up which is useless under the new methods of construction.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Now I offer my amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 32 insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That so much of said lands as are situated on Back Bay, near the city of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi, shall be disposed of under the town-site law and not as agricultural lands."

Mr. KYLE. I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KYLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BASIL MORELAND.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to give notice that I shall call for the regular order after a recognition on either side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4704) for the relief of Basil Moreland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Basil Moreland the sum of $2,212, in full for all claim he may have against the United States for his land and improvements in Blue Earth County, Minn., taken by the United States for the Winnebago Indians.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I ask that the report be read. It is brief.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. BOWERS of California. If gentlemen will listen to the report they will see that this bill is all right.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4704) for the relief of Basil Moreland, having considered the same and accompanying papers, respectfully submit the following report:

That the committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate report 575, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which said report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and is as follows:

"In March, 1854, Basil Moreland settled upon the unsurveyed public lands in the Territory of Minnesota, on Blue Earth River. He built a good house and fenced and cultivated a considerable portion of said land. At the time of this settlement no right of preemption as to the unsurveyed public lands existed, but in that same year, August 4, 1854, Congress passed an act authorizing such preemption. On the 17th of March, 1856, Moreland, having continued to reside on and cultivate said land, went to the land office with his witnesses to prove his settlement and right of preemption and offered to pay the money, which was refused by the register of the land office upon the ground that this land was embraced in a boundary recently set apart as a home reservation for the Winnebago Indians, in accordance with a treaty of February 27, 1855. He continued to reside upon and cultivate said land until the fall of 1856, when he was evicted by the agent of said Indian tribe. In the fall of 1861, the Indians having been removed to another reservation, he returned to said farm, and continued to reside on and cultivate the same until it was sold for the benefit of the Winnebagoes for $1,212 in 1863.

"The treaty with the Winnebagoes did not locate the reservation, but provided it should be on Blue Earth River, and it was surveyed and located so as to include Moreland's land, after Moreland's settlement, and after the passage of the act of August 4, 1854, by which he acquired a clear vested right to preempt said land, and of which his expulsion could not divest him; and when he returned to it in 1861 his rights were as complete as when he was forcibly expelled from it.

"He made another effort to perfect his title by an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Caleb Smith, and offered to locate the land with a military land warrant. The Secretary, after a full examination of the case, in April, 1862, decided that Moreland was entitled to preempt said land, and directed the Commissioner of the Land Office to allow him to perfect his title by locating the same with a military land warrant, which was done and the patent actually issued, dated April 10, 1863, but was arrested in its transmission by order of Secretary of the Interior J. P. Usher, who had succeeded Caleb Smith in the Department of the Interior.

"The entry was canceled and the land warrant returned on the ground that the treaty with the Indians was the supreme law of the land. The reasoning of the Secretary is not satisfactory, but admitting its force as a matter of law, it does not affect Moreland's equitable claim for damages. There can be no doubt of his right to preempt said land, and that he did all the law required of him to perfect his title, but lost his land and improvements and has never been paid for either.

"An act of Congress of July 14, 1862, directed the Secretary of the Interior to examine and audit the claims of persons damaged by the treaty with the Winnebagoes. Then preceptors to the number of 20 presented the claims which were allowed by the Secretary, and have all been paid except Moreland. (See letter of Secretary Usher to Commissioner of Indian Affairs of date April 22, 1865.)

"The land sold for $1,224, the improvements were valued at $1,200, and the committee believe that Moreland is justly entitled to this sum less the value of the land warrant, which was returned to him, say $200; and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass."

The committee therefore adopt said Senate report as the report of this committee, and report the accompanying bill for his relief, with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from California some questions in regard to this bill before either objecting or consenting to its consideration. I understand, from the reading of this report, that this land was sold for the benefit of the Winnebago Indians?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Have they any money subject to their credit in the Treasury?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. SAYERS. It would be better to ascertain whether this money is in the Treasury. If the land was sold and the money paid over to the Indians, it should be paid out of their annuity.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman allow me to say one word—

Mr. SAYERS. Another question. The land was sold for $1,224, and the improvements were valued at $1,200?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. And the committee believe that Mr. Moreland is justly entitled to this sum of $2,400 less the $200. I submit to the gentleman that there is a possibility of this claim having been doubled up or duplicated.

Mr. BOWERS of California. The records are all complete, and I have the affidavits and records of the Interior Department maintaining and fortifying every fact stated in the report. The man was on the land for five years. The patent was actually issued. Here is the report of the Secretary of the Interior, who ordered the patent to be issued to him.

Mr. SAYERS. I will admit that.

Mr. BOWERS of California. He was on the land for five years. There were 19 other claimants on this land, who have all been paid. This is the only remaining case. He is my neighbor. He is a poor man. The Government has taken his property and sold it from him, and it is a righteous claim, which ought to be paid.

Mr. SAYERS. I am not objecting to the merits of the claim, but it seems to me from this report that instead of $2,424 being due there is only $1,200 due.

Mr. TAWNEY. Part of it is for the land and part of it is for the improvements. They valued the improvements at $1,200, they valued the land at over $1,200, and the two combined make the aggregate amount which the claimant is entitled to.

Mr. SAYERS. This says the land sold for $1,224, and of course that carried the improvements with it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. No; he had made over $1,500 worth of improvements—

Mr. SAYERS. All I want is to see whether this amount should be paid. I will agree that whatever is justly due the man shall be paid, but I do not want, in the face of this report, to allow the payment of $2,400.

Mr. BOWERS of California. The gentleman from Texas asks that I let this go over, and I ask unanimous consent that it go over until to-morrow morning; that it come up then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to let this matter of consent go over until to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yielding to pressure, I will not insist on the demand for the regular order until there have been further recognitions, provided there is no debate.

ELIZABETH J. COOK.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8401) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook, who, at the town of Washington, Hempstead County, Ark., in the month of July, 1846, volunteered and served as a United States soldier in the war with Mexico, in Captain Babbitt's company, Colonel Hoffman's regiment, of Kentucky troops, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I would like to ask if this bill has been considered at a Friday night session?

Mr. McRAE. It has not been considered at the Friday night session, but it has been favorably and unanimously reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Is not that the proper course for it to have taken?

Mr. McRAE. That is the proper course beyond all question unless unanimous consent is given.

Mr. LOUD. How long does this man claim to have been in the service?

Mr. McRAE. The report will show that.

Mr. LOUD. Twenty-nine days, is it not?

Mr. McRAE. He went through the whole service and made a splendid soldier.

Mr. LOUD. Is not this a case in which he served only twenty-nine days? If the man had served thirty days there would not be any necessity for his coming here for a special act.

Mr. McRAE. He enlisted at the beginning and served through the war, but his name is not borne on the rolls of the War Department, and for that error the widow has to come to Congress.

Mr. LOUD. This is not the twenty-nine days' case?

Several MEMBERS. No.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "in Captain Babbitt's company, Colonel Hoffman's regiment of Kentucky troops," and insert "in the First Arkansas Mounted Infantry Volunteers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. JONES. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8401) to grant pension to Elizabeth J. Cook, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of the late Robert T. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., who is shown to have served as a soldier in the war with Mexico, but of whose service no record can now be found at the War Department.

Mrs. Cook has made application at the Pension Office under the Mexican war act of January 29, 1867, but the case has been regarded as inadmissible because of the aforesaid inability to find a record of the soldier's service.

Your committee has before them, however, convincing proof that, notwithstanding the failure to discover a record, the soldier did serve as alleged. John C. Peay, an aged citizen of very high standing, of Little Rock, Ark., swears that he was second lieutenant in Company E, First Arkansas Mounted Infantry, in the war with Mexico; that the regiment was mustered at Washington, Ark., and while stationed there Robert T. Cook was employed in the commissary department, and when the regiment left for San Antonio, Tex., Cook continued with the organization as commissary sergeant.

The witness testifies further that he saw Cook several times on the march to San Antonio, and also on the march from Rio Grande to Saltillo, Mexico. Witness was subsequently assigned to picket duty, and when he last saw Cook in the service he was on duty at Saltillo, about December 20, 1846, and he (witness) was officially informed that Cook remained at said place in service as late as January or February, 1847. After the war witness was well acquainted with Cook in Arkansas, and often conversed with him about their military service in Mexico.

Correspondence with the War Department by your committee elicits the information that the service of Lieutenant Peay is a matter of record.

Mr. Cook's service is further shown by the testimony of Lewis Stardage, formerly a slave belonging to the mother of Mrs. Cook. This witness testifies to having a distinct recollection of the time when Mr. Cook joined the company of cavalry for the Mexican war, and was absent several months. After his return home Mr. Cook said he had been to Mexico, and often related incidents connected with his service in that country.

Another old-time acquaintance of the claimant and her husband, Mr. W. H. Calloway, of Clark County, Ark., swears that as early as 1855, when there was no idea of pensions being granted to Mexican war veterans, he heard Robert T. Cook relate circumstances connected with his service in Mexico, and further that Cook was a man of honor and integrity.

The claimant was married to the soldier December 7, 1843, and he died June 14, 1880. She is now about sixty-seven years old, and stands in much need of the pension provided by the bill.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended, with an amendment striking out all after the word "Mexico" in line 9 to and including the word "troops" in line 11 and substituting therefor the words, "in the First Arkansas Mounted Infantry Volunteers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

[Mr. WILSON of Washington, recently elected Senator from that State, appeared on the floor and was greeted with loud applause on both sides of the House.]

JAMES STEWART.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of James Stewart, who served as first sergeant, Company B, second and fourth lieutenant Fourth Artillery, and captain Eighteenth Infantry of the United States Army in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of said rebellion and during his entire time of service in said Army, and not paid to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment, irrespective of the lapse of time, for the amount, if any, found due of the United States upon the said claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STORER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SORG, for this day, on account of sickness.

REMOVAL OF TROOPS FROM SAN CARLOS AGENCY.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD resolutions of the house of representatives of the Territory of Arizona concerning the San Carlos military reservation.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Charles M. Bruce, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the within copy is a true and complete transcript of the house memorial No. 1, of the eighteenth legislative assembly of Arizona, filed in this office the 5th day of February, A. D. 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m., as provided by law. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix this 5th day of February, 1895.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES M. BRUCE,
Secretary of the Territory.

House memorial No. 1—Protesting against the removal of troops from San Carlos, Ariz.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to represent to your honorable bodies:

That there are now about 4,000 Apache Indians located and near San Carlos, on the White Mountain Indian Reservation.

The effect upon these Indians by the abandonment of San Carlos as a military post is not realized by the War Department.

Heretofore the Indians have furnished nearly all of the fuel, wood, hay, and barley consumed by the military, besides finding a market for the various other products of their farms and articles of Indian manufacture.

These Indians have supplied the post of San Carlos yearly about—

1,300 cords of wood, at $6 a cord.....	$7,800
400 tons of hay, at $15.....	6,000
400,000 pounds of barley, at $1.25.....	5,000

Total..... 18,800

And, besides, considerable additional revenues were derived from the sale and manufacture of Indian beadwork to the officers and soldiers, which was expended for the staple articles of food and clothing.

Nevertheless with all of this revenue these Indians have suffered for the necessities of life, and the majority have had to go hungry several days of each week.

When these Indians, who are only partly civilized, and whose savage spirit is only subdued by the constant presence of the United States troops, will be without adequate food and clothing for their bodily sustenance and comfort and by the withdrawal of the troops, they will be driven to desperation by starvation and insufficiency of clothing and compelled to raid, plunder, and murder our citizens as in years past.

Now, therefore, we, your memorialists of the eighteenth legislative assembly, do earnestly pray your honorable bodies that the foregoing are facts readily proven, and in view of the alarming situation we earnestly protest against the removal of troops from San Carlos, and ask your honorable bodies to have the order rescinded.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Territory is hereby requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and to our Delegate in Congress, and that our Delegate be, and is hereby, requested to use all honorable means to bring this matter to their earnest and favorable consideration.

A. J. DORAN, President.
J. H. CARPENTER, Speaker.

(Indorsed): I hereby certify that the within memorial originated in the house, and is known as house memorial No. 1.

CHAS. D. REPPY, Chief Clerk.

Filed in the office of the secretary of the Territory of Arizona this 5th day of February, A. D. 1895, at 10 a. m.

CHAS. M. BRUCE,
Secretary of Arizona.

By F. B. DEVEREUX, Assistant.

CLAIMS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY FOR LOSS OF PRIVATE PROPERTY DESTROYED.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill (H. R. 8387) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports to make may file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JURIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GOODNIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 8227) to provide for the striking of juries in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed a bill similar in all respects to this, and I ask that it be retained on the Speaker's table until the bill from the Senate is brought over, which I understand it will be to-day.

The SPEAKER. This will have to be printed and go on the Calendar. The gentleman can call it up just as well from the Calendar.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Very well.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring up the matter which was presented to the Speaker last evening, as to whether or not my motion calling on the Senate to return a bill was not one of privilege, and one which could not be shut out by a single objection. It seems to me that it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not had opportunity to look into the matter. Perhaps there is no objection.

Mr. HULL. I object.

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution calling on the Senate to return a bill. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 5200) entitled "A bill granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a short statement in regard to the matter. On the 25th day of January, among the other bills that came before the Committee of the Whole at the Friday night session was that to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan. It is not necessary now to discuss the merits of the question. The Committee of the Whole at that time adopted, by a majority, a recommendation that the bill be referred back to the House to be laid upon the table; and it was so reported back to the House to lie on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. At two different times.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It came in that way before the House on last Friday. I was absent at the time when those bills came up. This bill came up among others, and the House, by inadvertence of the Clerk or some person, took the bill up as having been favorably reported, when in point of fact it was before the House on an unfavorable report.

Mr. JONES. The previous question had been ordered on the other bills, and not on this one.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Now, then, I submit it was taken up by the House under the supposition that there was a favorable report, when in point of fact it was unfavorably reported; and perhaps the House voted for it and passed it with that understanding. Now, then, in the first place, it seems to me we ought to have this bill brought back, because if that bill is to be considered at all upon its merits it ought to be again referred to the Committee of the Whole and let the House act upon it for the purpose of passing it. Now, I have not undertaken to discuss the merits of the bill at all. But I desire to say further to the House that it passed the House as a bill to give to the Secretary of the Interior the right to place this man upon the pension roll.

The bill is not worth the paper it is printed upon, and it seems to me that under all the circumstances, the Committee of the Whole having reported the bill unfavorably, the House having passed it under a misapprehension, and the bill itself being worthless, it is a question of the highest privilege that it should be brought back if the House has power to bring it back, and should be disposed of upon the report that was actually made to the House by the Committee of the Whole. I take this view without desiring to say a word either way as to the merits of the bill, but simply as a matter of justice to the House of Representatives and to the Committee of the Whole which acted upon it at the Friday night session.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, is the resolution before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not had time to examine the question and is not clear as to whether the resolution is privileged. Is there objection to considering the resolution?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, objection was made yesterday, but if it is in order to bring it up at this time, of course I do not want to argue the question as to whether it should come up or not. I do, however, desire to say a few words upon the merits of the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will recollect that the other day, late in the afternoon, several pension bills were taken up, and this one was presented to the House among those that had been favorably reported. In fact it was indorsed as having been reported unfavorably, but, in the hurry, that indorsement escaped the notice of the Clerk, and the attention of the House was not called to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. The bill is not worth the paper it is printed on.

Mr. HULL. Oh, that is all nonsense. The Senate can amend it if it desires.

The SPEAKER. The bill must come back in any case.

Mr. HULL. Certainly. Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the Committee of the Whole at two different night sessions by a very large vote, and was only defeated by the fact that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] raised the point of no quorum. The last time the bill was considered the committee was exceedingly anxious to get away from all contested cases and proceed to consider those to which no objection was made. This bill was at the head of the Calendar. Just before it was taken up my colleague from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asked unanimous consent that the order of the Calendar be departed from that the roll be called, and that each member present, when his name should be called, should have the right to call up a bill.

I conceived it to be my duty to object, in the interest of this old soldier, as his bill was next on the Calendar, and I really think, from expressions made by the members of the committee at the time, that the defeat of the bill resulted more from my objecting to the proposition to call the roll than from any supposed want of merit of the bill. When the vote was taken the idea was in my mind to raise the point of no quorum in order to save the bill, but one of the clerks told me that if it was let alone it would come before the House and we could have a vote upon it with an unfavorable report just as well as with a favorable report, and I therefore did not raise the point of no quorum, although I think it was only a matter of two votes.

However, it seems there has been a misunderstanding, and one that has deceived the House. Personally, I shall not put myself in the position of trying or seeming to try to perpetrate any fraud upon the House in any way whatever. I am exceedingly anxious that in some way this man shall have an honest and fair vote on his claim in the House, because I know him to be deserving, and I now ask the chairman of the committee to consent to this. Let this resolution go through; let the bill be called back, and then, when it comes back, let us have a vote upon it on the merits and let the House decide the question.

Everyone can see that by reason of the mistake I have waived certain rights that I might have exercised. I could have moved that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill and that a vote be taken on it in the House, and could have appealed to the House on that motion. If the bill takes the usual course that means its absolute death for this session at least. Therefore, in the interest of justice and fairness all around, I ask that, as a mistake has been made, for which I do not hold anybody responsible, certainly not myself, the bill be brought back and submitted to the House on its merits, and let the House determine whether it shall pass or not.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the parliamentary situation to be this: This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole adversely. Now, if it is recalled from the Senate it comes back to the House for action, and the House may, if it chooses, disagree to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole, or may take any action that it thinks proper. The bill, as I understand, is bound to come before the House for some sort of action, and the House can either approve or disapprove the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. I understand that; but why not agree to my proposition, that instead of having one vote upon it and then sending it back to the Committee of the Whole, we shall proceed, if the adverse recommendation of the committee is voted down, to take a vote upon the passage of the bill. It seems to me that that is a fair proposition.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the merits of this claim; but inasmuch as my course in connection with it has been referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, I simply want to say that his recollection of the history of this bill is incorrect. The gentleman states that this bill was passed by the Committee of the Whole twice by a large vote, and that its favorable recommendation was prevented only by the interposition of the point of no quorum. The gentleman has forgotten that upon one occasion at least during the last session of Congress this bill was ordered reported to the House adversely by a vote of the Committee of the Whole, and that it was only then saved by the gentleman who had charge of it raising the question of no quorum. The bill, then, has been reported adversely once, and on another occasion was saved from a like fate by the point of no quorum being made.

In the interest of truth I want to make this statement.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Virginia is absolutely making a misstatement to this House. The bill was twice favorably acted on in Committee of the Whole by a large vote, as the records will show, and was prevented from passing by the point of "no quorum." It was defeated twice, and was saved once by the point of "no quorum" when unfavorably acted upon.

Mr. JONES. Ah; the gentleman from Iowa did not make that statement. He makes it now for the first time.

Mr. HULL. I made the statement that the bill passed the Committee of the Whole twice, and was prevented from being favorably reported by the point of no quorum. That statement is absolutely correct; and each time that it was passed upon favorably it passed by a large vote—a vote of 3 to 1; and each time when it was defeated it was by a close margin; and the unfavorable action was taken more with the idea of getting rid of a contested case than upon the merits of the question. So that the gentleman did not state the facts correctly.

Mr. JONES. The bill twice received the unfavorable action of the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Iowa did not make that statement.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] would modify his resolution so as to allege that this bill was reported unfavorably from the Committee of the Whole, and was considered by the House under the idea that it had been favorably reported, the Chair thinks the resolution would be privileged. But a simple resolution to recall a bill can hardly be considered privileged, because in that case such a resolution might be presented with regard to any bill that is passed. To make the resolution privileged it should show that the House has acted under some misunderstanding of the report of the committee or something of that kind.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. The report of the Committee of the Whole, which is a matter of record, shows that the bill was reported unfavorably.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the resolution should allege some error or misapprehension in order to make it privileged.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. The record shows that the bill was reported unfavorably; and would not that fact, being matter of record, be sufficient, taken in connection with the terms of the resolution, to make it privileged?

The SPEAKER. The records show that the bill was unfavorably reported; still, when a bill is unfavorably reported it is within the power of the House to disagree to the report and pass the bill.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Will the Speaker allow me a parliamentary inquiry? If this bill should be called back from the Senate would it not lie on the Speaker's table for such action as the House might choose to take when it comes up? It could not, as I understand, go back to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It would not go again to the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole is discharged from the further consideration of the bill, having reported it back to the House with an unfavorable recommendation. If the bill should be returned and should lie on the table it would be considered the first time the House might take up bills reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULL. If the House should disagree to the report of the Committee of the Whole what would then be the position of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The question would be on its passage.

Mr. HULL. Then I have no objection at all to the recall of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The resolution as modified by the gentleman from Indiana will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 5200) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan, the bill having been adversely reported from the Committee of the Whole and by an error passed by the House.

The resolution was adopted.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee of the Whole was last in session it was agreed by unanimous consent that forty-five minutes for debate should be assigned to the gentlemen opposed to the provisions of the bill in regard to the Pension Office and thirty minutes to those gentlemen in favor of the bill as reported. I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], representing the minority, be allowed to take charge of the forty-five minutes and distribute the time.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] desires to proceed, and will limit himself within the time allowed to this side.

Mr. PICKLER. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent is asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] be allowed to control the forty-five minutes on one side and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to control the thirty minutes on the other.

Mr. PICKLER. When the forty-five-minute proposition was talked of last night, it was with the understanding that there was to be a vote on the legislative bill last night; there was no agreement that the debate should be limited to forty-five minutes under the present circumstances.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no one asking for debate on this side, I believe, other than the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the agreement which was made.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know that that is necessary, if nobody else on this side wants to occupy time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is mistaken as to the terms of the agreement.

Mr. PICKLER. The Chair will find, that following the agreement as it first appears, I made the proposition that the agreement was only on the understanding that we were to vote on the bill last night.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is no use raising any question of that kind when the gentleman from South Dakota is going to get all the time that he wants.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from South Dakota can have all the time he desires to the extent of thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], without objection, will control the forty-five minutes on that side and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] the thirty minutes on the other.

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield thirty minutes, if he desires that much time, to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for that portion of the bill relating to the Pension Office. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on pages 84 and 85 of the bill as follows, beginning with the word "ten," in line 23, page 84, down to and including the word "copyists," on page 85, and insert:

"Twelve chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,000; fifty-eight principal examiners, at $2,000 each; twenty-four assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; three stenographers, at $1,600 each; seventy-seven clerks of class 4; ninety-seven clerks of class 3; three hundred and seventy-five clerks of class 2; four hundred and seventy-eight clerks of class 1; three hundred and thirty-seven clerks, at $1,000 each; one superintendent of building, $1,400; two engineers, at $1,200 each; two hundred copyists."

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the total force carried by the amendment?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer is exactly the present law. The amount is not stated. The amendment is to strike out the provision in the bill which reduces the clerical force in the Pension Office and insert in its proper place the number now employed in the office under the present law.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, the attention of the committee for a short time to try and show by the figures, in the first place, that there is no reason why this reduction of 165 clerks should be made in the Pension Office at the present time and under the present circumstances; and, secondly, to show that this is not really recommended by anybody with any kind of emphasis or earnestness, not even by the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Pensions, with any kind of good reason.

AMOUNT OF WORK IN PENSION OFFICE.

I wish to call the attention of the committee first to the amount of work now existing in the office and awaiting action by the clerical force. It must be remembered that the pending proposition in this bill as it comes to us from the Committee on Appropriations is to reduce the force there about one-tenth; in other words, for about every 10 clerks in the office the proposition is to take away one, amounting in the aggregate to 165 clerks. Let us examine now in what condition the work of the office is, and determine from that whether this is a proper time to undertake such a reduction, or whether the reduction can be justified under existing circumstances.

I call your attention to the last annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions. By reference to page 35 of the report you will find the total number of pending claims, and I beg the committee to mark this particularly. The total number of pending claims in the office, the number of claims that are now awaiting action of the clerks in the office, is 619,027. Remember, now, that that is the number of claims awaiting action in the office by the clerical force; more, I suppose, than have ever before been known in the history of the office at any one time.

I further call your attention to page 37 of the same report, and on that page will be found the number of claimants not pensioned. Mark you, this is the number of claimants that are drawing no pension whatever, and the aggregate is 287,209. There are 619,027 claims pending and 287,209 claimants drawing no pension. Further than that, gentlemen of the committee, on the pension bill that went from the House to the Senate lately that body has graded the rate of all pensions below $6 per month so that they shall be brought up to that amount; and I am informed, by probably the best authority in the House upon the subject, that the conference committee is almost certain to agree to this amendment. That will bring in 48,447 new claims by this action of the Senate, which is now, in fact, I suppose, almost as certain as if enacted into law, and will add that additional work to the clerical force. We have, then, this statement of the number of claims:

Awaiting action, 619,027.

Number of claimants not drawing pensions, 287,209.

New claims under the Senate amendment, 48,447.

I submit, then, in view of these figures, that this is no time for the reduction of the force in the office, and I submit further—and I say it is to the credit of the Commissioner of Pensions—that while in something of a halting way he seems to agree to this reduction, in the evidence before the committee he did not earnestly recommend it. The Secretary of the Interior is a little more positive, but there is nothing in the recommendations of these officers that will warrant Congress for a moment in making this reduction.

QUIET RECOMMENDATION OF COMMITTEE.

It is a little singular when we reflect upon the method by which this matter is brought before the House by the Committee on Appropriations. It would seem that in as important a reduction as this in one of the Departments of the Government, a reduction taking away nearly one-tenth of the force of a Bureau of the Government, that the Committee on Appropriations would have given some statement in reference to it or gone into the matter at length in the report accompanying the bill. But in this report there is not a word in regard to this reduction except in one of the tables of figures, where, by a mathematical process of addition and subtraction, we are able to ascertain that this number of clerks is reduced 165 from what it was last year. But there is not a word in the report proper about it, and you would not know from the bill, unless by an examination either of the Book of Estimates or some other outside source, of this large reduction of Pension force. It seems to be a silent reduction that the committee fail to enter into any explanation concerning or give any reasons for in their report.

EVIDENCE OF COMMISSIONER AND SECRETARY.

Now, I want to call attention to what the Commissioner of Pensions says in regard to this, and also to the statement of the Secretary of the Interior, and I now read from the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, page 87.

I submit that these two officers, the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, are desirous, as shown by their own evidence, of turning out a lot of the Pension employees, but do not want to assume the burden of it themselves, and want Congress to step into the breach and become responsible. That is this whole proposition. Let us see what Commissioner Lochren says:

Mr. DINGLEY. How much reduction of your force in the Pension Office do you recommend?

Commissioner LOCHREN. That is a matter I did not know you were going to inquire about, but speaking from recollection, I think it is about 165.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are those clerks in a large number of divisions or are they concentrated in a few divisions?

Commissioner LOCHREN. No, sir; I presume it will lessen the number in most of the divisions.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this a reduction on account of the decrease of work to be done?

Commissioner LOCHREN. No, sir; not particularly, but we are somewhat crowded.

Mr. DINGLEY. And you have more force than you can accommodate?

Commissioner LOCHREN. It is somewhat so, Governor. We find it very difficult to accommodate as much force in the rooms we have.

There is the answer of the Commissioner of Pensions. Is there anything positive about that? Governor DINGLEY put both those propositions to him.

"It is somewhat so, Governor." That is the answer of the Commissioner.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that the sole reason you make the reduction? Commissioner LOCHREN. No, sir; it is not the sole reason. I might say there is a certain number of clerks, probably not a very small number, who have outlived their usefulness, and that is one reason.

Mr. DINGLEY. That takes in about what proportion of those who are to be discharged?

Commissioner LOCHREN. I should think it would include the most of them.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then the work of your office has not diminished?

Commissioner LOCHREN. There is work enough there.

Mr. DINGLEY. If this is to be done, this reduction of force, therefore, will necessarily diminish the amount of work that will be done?

Commissioner LOCHREN. I do not fancy it will greatly; I do not think it will have that effect.

You see the Commissioner there admits it means a decrease of the amount of work done, but he says it will not be greatly decreased.

Mr. DINGLEY. For what reason do you think so?

Commissioner LOCHREN. Well, it is clearing the office of some of the dead-wood and giving those who remain more opportunity, more elbowroom.

Now, they have the same elbowroom down there that they had under the other Commissioner. They have the same elbowroom that they have had at all times heretofore. With all this vast amount of work on hand, they want to turn out about one-tenth of their force. It is like a farmer in my country in a 500-acre wheat field, with 20 reapers in it. He says to two of them, "Go home; I want elbowroom and will do this work with 18."

I desire to call attention to what Secretary Smith says, and what his reasons are. He does not disguise the matter. He comes to the proposition flat-footed, and here is what Mr. Smith says. This is on page 64 of these hearings. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], a member of this committee, seems to have given the Secretary his cue. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] says to the Secretary:

There is a good deal of mischief in the bureaus of your Department; for instance in the Land and Indian Bureaus.

Mr. Smith ignores the Land and Indian Bureaus and jumps to the Pension Office on the cue given him by Mr. COOMBS. He says:

Yes; particularly in the Pension Bureau.

That is the mischief.

I beg the attention of the committee to this proposition of Secretary Smith, because here is the whole thing in a nutshell as to what they are trying to do.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; particularly in the Pension Bureau. The truth is, and I have no hesitation in saying it here, that we have a larger force in the Pension Bureau in proportion to the work they do than in any other office in the Department. We have a great many people there who are not of much account. There are a great many old women, wives of soldiers, and a number of soldiers under the civil service who are only about one-half of a clerk. They continue on as a sort of halfway pensioners.

Here is the secret of it. It is to get rid of those old soldiers and their widows in the Department.

In other words, Secretary Smith says there are a lot of people over there who ought to be removed, and he wants Congress to do it by wholesale. But, he says, if you investigate each particular case there is reason why they should be kept in. This is his exact language:

We have tried somewhat to put in bright young men in order to strengthen the force, and I think if strict rules were applied there would be a great many removals; but if you investigate each case there would be some particular reason for keeping them in.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my proposition is that under the laws as they now exist, if there are any people there who are inefficient, if there are any persons in the Pension Office who ought to be turned out, if there are any there that ought not to be in the public service, then Secretary Smith has the power now to obviate the difficulty without asking Congress to step in and back him and assume all responsibility.

AVOIDS RESPONSIBILITY.

What is the object of this limping and halting way that Commissioner Lochren says "somewhat, governor," in his answer, and with Secretary Smith's assertion that the object is to turn out wholesale the widows of soldiers and old soldiers who are deemed inefficient, when they fail to do it themselves? They will not assume the responsibility that is assumed by all the Secretaries in the other Departments, but they come in and ask Congress to act. The question is whether this committee is willing to go upon record as standing back of this proposition and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to turn out these widows of soldiers and these old soldiers that he himself says, in his own language, which I have quoted, when each case comes to be examined separately there are reasons why that party should not be turned out.

Mr. HULICK. Is there any intimation anywhere in the examination by the committee of the Commissioner or the Secretary that if these places were required to be filled hereafter, that they are calling upon Congress to discharge, Congress would be called upon to appoint in the places of these clerks to be discharged?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, I think not.

Mr. HULICK. They are willing to take the responsibility of filling the places, but not willing to take the responsibility of discharging them.

Mr. PICKLER. I am of the opinion that it would not be a very great while until these very gentlemen would fill these places; and they would be wanted, beyond all contradiction, by the report of the Commissioner himself. The work of the Pension Office is about, on an average, from the best information that I can get from that office—three years behind. Is there any reason why the force should be diminished when we have that much work that needs attention? I believe that, as to these departments regulating their business, they should regulate it as a man in private affairs regulates his. I affirm that there is but one Bureau of the Government in this city where a member of Congress can make an inquiry and can have an answer in the time he ought to have it—it is that of Colonel Ainsworth, the chief of the Record and Pension Division. A member of Congress writes him making an inquiry to-day, and he has his answer to-morrow. There is some satisfaction and business in that. But as to any other Departments of the Government you have to wait anywhere from ten days to ten years for an answer.

THREE YEARS BEHIND.

Mr. HERMANN. Is there any reason to believe that if this provision should be carried out and these men discharged public business would be expedited in the Pension Office?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no. I think there is no assurance of that kind. They do not pretend that the business will be expedited. The inference from their statement is that it will be retarded. They talk about its giving more "elbowroom;" but that is all a pretense, in my opinion.

Mr. HERMANN. It is not the policy of that Department to cut down the force in order to bring the allowance of pensions to a minimum, so that the appropriation shall not be increased?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not make that charge. I am one of the last men to make charges against public officers on this floor; but I think anybody who will give a candid examination to this matter, and recall the history of the Pension Office for the last two years, will see what the result would be. Here we find $500,000 appropriated in this bill to send out these young men—for they are principally young men—who are sent out as special examiners under the pretense that they are to aid in the settlement of pension claims. We find this large appropriation for that. And then we find a disposition to cut down the working force of the office. We find that the work is three years behind, and we find 40,000 of these soldiers dying every year; we find large numbers of widows' claims in the Pension Office awaiting adjustment; and when we note all these facts, and we then find that this Appropriation Committee, under the pretended recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, come in and make a proposition to reduce this force nearly one-tenth, it seems to me that the Pension Office is not acting in good faith in granting these pensions as they ought to be granted.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Will you state how many cases have been acted upon by the Pension Office and granted during the last year?

Mr. PICKLER. About 30,000 original, besides increases and restorations.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And how many do you say are not acted on?

Mr. PICKLER. Six hundred and nineteen thousand and twenty-seven claims of all kinds.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. So that there is abundance of work for all the clerks for several years.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; for several years. And there comes a proposition from the Senate to make the minimum rate of pension $6, which gives 48,000 other cases to be acted upon; and yet they are asking to reduce the number of clerks in the Pension Office.

PENSION OFFICE FORCE ALWAYS REDUCED.

Clerks who have been in the Pension Office and others detailed from there to the other Departments should be put to work in their own Department. Mr. Chairman, as is shown by the testimony here, when the Indian Office wants a detail, or the Land Office wants a detail, as sworn to by Secretary Smith, they go to the Pension Office. That is the first force that they seek to reduce. They make their details from the Pension Office, as a rule, when the other Departments want them, and thus the work in the Pension Office suffers, and two score thousand soldiers are dying each year, many of them with unadjusted claims in the Pension Office, and thousands of others go to almshouses and poorhouses of the land because the Pension Office fails to act upon their claims and give them their just dues.

It does seem, Mr. Chairman, that every proposition to retard the work in the Pension Office, every maneuver that can be contrived to make the allowance of pension claims slower, is resorted to.

SHALL CONGRESS DISCHARGE SOLDIERS AND THEIR WIDOWS?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to put this question to members on both sides of this Chamber: Are you willing to say to Secretary Smith and the Commissioner of Pensions that you will relieve them from all responsibility of discharging inefficient clerks and will take the burden upon yourselves? You are not doing that for any other Department of the Government. It is acknowledged by everybody, as was stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] last evening, and as we all know, that every head of a Department has the power to discharge any inefficient clerk. They are making such discharges in the Departments under one pretense and another every day, and they have full power and authority under the law to do it. Now, if there are inefficient clerks in the Pension Office, let the Commissioner and the Secretary take the responsibility that the other Secretaries and heads of bureaus do, and not come in here and ask Congress to stand behind them in making those discharges.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Yes; and they can discharge any efficient clerk either, by making the charge that he is inefficient.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, we all know that there is no trouble, it seems, in the heads of the Departments getting rid of any clerk they want to get rid of, whether he is efficient or not. Therefore, by what kind of reasoning, by what kind of pretext, by what kind of justice toward the other Departments shall we allow the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions to come here and say to this House of Representatives: "Here are some old soldiers whom we want to turn out of office; here are some widows of old soldiers, here are some inefficient people that we want to turn out, and we want you to stand behind us, as we do not want to take the responsibility ourselves?" Gentlemen, do you not have to assume your own responsibilities? Who assumes your responsibility as members of Congress? Who assumes the responsibility when you make a recommendation for a post-office or any other office? Who takes the responsibility as to how your votes shall go on the record? You take it yourselves, and the public officer who is not willing to take the responsibilities of his office ought to resign.

Mr. COOMBS. I understand the gentleman to say that the Commissioner of Pensions is trying to put the responsibility on Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. I do say so. If Congress is going into the business of discharging clerks and making appointments to office, then it seems to me that we have a bigger job on hand than ever before. Is not the gentleman from New York a civil-service reformer?

Mr. COOMBS. I am. But I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it shows any malignity on the part of the Commissioner of Pensions to come to Congress and ask their advice and direction in this matter.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, I do not say there is any malignity in it. He simply wants to get rid of some of these people, and instead of doing as the other heads of bureaus do he comes and says to Congress: "You take the burden; you take the responsibility."

Mr. COOMBS. Yes; because he appreciates what men like you would say if he made the changes himself.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; I would criticize him if he commenced to put out soldiers and their widows, as the Appropriation Committee propose to do in this bill. It is an attack upon soldiers which I resent.

Mr. HUNTER. I will ask the gentleman whether we have not, as a House of Representatives, as the representatives of the people, abdicated all our authority over the Government Departments and surrendered it to a Civil Service Commission.

Mr. PICKLER. To a large extent, yes. I believe in the Civil Service Commission. I believe in civil service. I wish all these offices were under the civil-service rules.

I believe it is the best thing for the country; but I believe that, as was suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi the other day, these clerks ought to have a tenure of office. I would put them in for six years, with the understanding that then they were to go out, except soldiers and their widows, and that there was to be rotation in office. I believe the present system is ruinous to many of these clerks, and you have a good illustration of it here, when these people in the Pension Office who have become old and helpless are to be turned out upon the tender mercies of the world unfit for any other business. I believe in civil-service reform; but I would give the clerks a tenure of office. I would have two-thirds of the force in the office old clerks, and one-third coming in new all the time, and under that arrangement the business of this Government would be done and well done. I believe, too, as was suggested the other day, that there ought to be an apportionment by Congressional districts, so that all parts of the country would have a fair show in this matter of appointments to office, and that my section and all other sections shall have an equal chance in filling these offices. I am in favor of that kind of civil service.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman says that these clerkships in the Pension Office should be apportioned to Congressional districts, and at the same time he says they should be given to veterans of the late war. Now, there are Congressional districts in this country that can not furnish one veteran of the late war; and what would the gentleman do in such cases?

Mr. PICKLER. There is not such a Congressional district in the United States. There is no district to which pensions are not going to-day. The gentleman can not name one. Furthermore, these old soldiers can very few of them pass the civil-service examination, but when they can they should have the preference in appointments, and those that are now in should not be turned out. But I was not speaking particularly of the Pension Office. I was speaking of the officers in the Departments generally. I was laying down a general proposition. I am opposed to turning soldiers and soldiers' widows out of the Pension Office. I suppose the gentleman will support the Secretary of the Interior in asking this House to indorse the proposition which I have read from his evidence that the House of Representatives solemnly assembled here shall declare that these old soldiers and soldiers' widows must go out of that office, even though the Secretary of the Interior says in the same breath that there are reasons in each case why they should be retained.

WHAT WE WANT.

We want no reduction in the pension force. Every mail I get letters from these old veterans complaining in many instances of claims pending for years and no action thereon.

We want this pension force in good faith to try to forward claims and not retard them.

We want less technical letters written simply to consume time, less technical orders issued, less time spent in seeking to make excuses for not allowing pensions, and less time spent in perfecting appeals to courts to deprive soldiers of their honest pensions, and more time spent in honest, industrious work by the Pension Office to allow the claims of these dying claimants.

The work is years behind and this proposition is to still more delay it. We want force enough to bring the work up to date as speedily as it can be done practically. If there is not room in the Pension Office for the clerks, let other rooms be rented. This proposition is to hinder the work of the office and should be voted down. My substitute should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has expired.

Mr. PICKLER. Unless somebody else wants to occupy the time, I should like to have five minutes more. I have been interrupted.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman has had his time.

Mr. PICKLER. I only want to say this by way of explanation: I do not think I shall consent again, as I have heretofore, to limiting debate in this way. I agreed with these gentlemen that general debate should be closed. They told me that I would have no difficulty in getting all the time I wanted. When it came to this proposition, to accommodate the gentleman from Maine I agreed to waive my right, and now, as usually happens, I am limited in my time. I simply want to say that this is the last time I will consent to yield my rights. But for that I might have had an hour.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make some additions to my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIKEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from South Dakota that I do not want to encroach upon any of his "rights." I think I have imposed myself upon this House very much less than the gentleman who now talks about yielding his "rights" to me. I have been in this House long enough to believe that I have some rights of my own, and certainly I shall never be a beggar to the gentleman from South Dakota or any other member of this House for any of their rights.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman is alluding to me, he has misunderstood me. I think the gentleman ought to have such time as he may desire. I was only talking about not getting my own rights.

Mr. MILLIKEN. All right. I have only five minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I object to the insidious way in which this bill endeavors to oust a number of old veterans from the Pension Office. It is said that the Commissioner of Pensions has the power to do this himself, but he will not exercise it. I am glad he will not. It shows that he has a heart and a soul in which resides the spirit of patriotism.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if the employees who are the least competent are to be discharged from the Pension Office, of course the old veteran will have to go. The war ended thirty years ago; there can not be a Union veteran in the Pension Office who is in the prime and pride of manhood. None of them can be less than fifty years old. Hence this proposition to discharge the least competent means simply a discharge of the old veterans and nobody else.

Plutarch tells us that the father of Themistocles took his son down to the seashore and showed him there the old hulks that had been left upon the beach to decay. He wanted to impress upon the mind of his son a lesson to deter him from entering public life. He said to him:

If you enter public life the people when they get through with using you will leave you on the strand like these old hulks. There was a day when the commanders of those vessels were proud of their commands; there was a time when these were gallant ships that sailed the sea triumphantly. Now they were thrown upon the shore to decay.

So, Mr. Chairman, there was a time when you were proud of these old soldiers—when with bright eyes and brave hearts they went to the front to defend the country which to-day is rejoicing in the fruits of their heroism. You did not believe then the time would come when it should be proposed by legislation to cast them upon the shore like old hulks neglected and decaying. Themistocles, rejecting the advice of his father, entered public life; but the lesson which his father had sought to teach him proved to be true. After serving his country faithfully and with transcendent ability, after he had saved it from destruction by the Persians, he was forced to flee to the very nation whose forces he had defeated, and die in a foreign land.

Shall we legislate to treat the nearly worn-out veterans of the Union armies in this ungrateful way? Shall they be cast aside like worn-out ships upon the shore, to be neglected in their old age? Even if they can not do the work of young men they are entitled to our grateful consideration. They have done their duty to their country when they were in their prime, and I believe that when this Government shall turn its back upon them, the men who were its defenders, who saved the national life, who made it possible for you and me to live under one flag and in an undivided country, God will turn his back upon this nation.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I am not here to defend the action of the Commissioner of Pensions. I do not deem it necessary. In the discussion incident upon the passage of our last appropriation bill an attack was made upon the employment of special examiners sent out into the field by the Commissioner. To-day that attack is withdrawn, events having justified his action in that particular, not only to the country, but even this Congress finds nothing to criticize in the matter. It has been discovered that the cases which are now in the Pension Office for examination are, in very great part, those that can not be expeditiously disposed of in the office, and that the soldiers need skilled assistance and help in order to perfect their claims.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] yesterday, in answer to an inquiry of mine, admitted that up to 80 per cent at least of the examiners were honestly at work perfecting the claims of the old soldiers. I shall say no more, therefore, on that point, but turn my attention to the proposition, or the question, that is attracting the attention of the House to-day, namely, to the proposed discharge of a number of clerks from the Pension Office. The Commissioner of Pensions comes to us and says that he has a superabundance of clerks and makes certain recommendations and gives certain advice. But it is in the province of Congress to act under that advice or not as it sees fit.

If he had acted up to the full measure of his authority; if he had desired to act independently in regard to this matter, he could have dispensed with the clerks on his own motion and without any authority of Congress. But he places before the Representatives of the people the exact condition of the Department and asks advice, and is criticised on that account. There is no reason why it should be assumed that the people to be discharged are veterans. In answer to the inquiries of the Committee on Appropriations he says that the work being done by the agents in the field has made it unnecessary for him to have as much help in the Bureau. It was his plain duty to answer those questions honestly. The committee has formulated its recommendations in accordance with that information, and it now remains for you to decide whether or not those recommendations shall be followed.

Mr. BOATNER. Is he not a veteran himself?

Mr. COOMBS. He is a veteran, and I think that he can be trusted to look after the interests of the veterans.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am going now to leave the pension question and talk of something else.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

I am going to take advantage of the latitude of debate which the House allows and speak of the financial situation as developed in the last few days—

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from New York has given notice that he is not going to talk on the question before the House, but is going to discuss the financial question. We are under the five-minutes debate, and I make the point of order that the gentleman can not pursue that line of argument.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman is mistaken. The House has given consent that I occupy the floor for fifteen minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COOMBS. The President a short time ago, in the discharge of his duty, sent a message to this House in which he pointed out the perils that surrounded the financial situation and the dangers that menaced the integrity of our national credit. It was an earnest message, approved of by the country at large, and merited our immediate and careful attention. He appealed to the patriotism of the members; besought them to bury partisanship and act together in order to avert impending trouble.

At the same time he pointed out the inadequacy of the power placed in his hands to discharge his obligation to maintain the parity of the various classes of Government obligations, and distinctly told us what he needed to enable him to do it. He made certain recommendations that were in great part embodied into a bill and presented for our consideration by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

After a three-days discussion it was defeated. In defeating that measure this House assumed a grave responsibility. It not only denied to our Executive the powers that he said were necessary in order to enable him to maintain the integrity of our nation's finances, but it ignored the appeals that came up from all parts of the land. The people indorsed his policy and implored Congress to follow his indications. You disdainfully rejected them, and when the bill was defeated a yell of triumph went up, papers were thrown into the air with wild demonstrations of delight. Yes, you gloried in the fact that you had made it more difficult and more expensive for him to sustain the integrity of our nation, to maintain our respectable position among the great nations of the earth. The day will come when you will not feel proud of that victory.

History will do credit to the magnificent courage and integrity of purpose of our President, who, when denied the remedies that he had asked for, calmly and quietly took upon his own shoulders the load that you had refused to help him carry.

It became necessary for him to fall back upon the powers placed in the hands of the Executive by a preceding generation, and not adapted to the emergency which confronted him. He found that while the two preceding issues of bonds had temporarily relieved the drain upon the gold reserve, it had been only temporary. That in order to secure real relief it was necessary to place our bonds abroad under such conditions as would warrant the belief that they would not be immediately returned, receiving gold in payment from the foreign stores instead of from our own meager supply. No one will say that it was not a wise policy, but one surrounded by many difficulties. You had denied the authority to insert the word "gold" in place of "coin" in our future issues of bonds, and had thus cast a doubt upon their ultimate redemption in the only coin recognized by the investors of the world.

Under these adverse conditions, driven by the necessity of replenishing our gold reserve, he negotiated the loan of which he informed you three days ago in his special message. He pointed out to you that should Congress within ten days decide to insert the word "gold" instead of "coin" the terms would be changed so as to admit of an ultimate saving of over $16,000,000. There is no doubt that it was the best arrangement that could be made, and again threw upon your shoulders the responsibility of deciding whether or not you would by an honest and open expression of your intention to pay in gold save the nation that vast amount of money.

You have not yet decided that question, and much of our future reputation and standing among the financial nations of the world depends upon it. It will be difficult to convince foreign investors in our securities that we have an honest intention to pay our debts in gold if we decline it. They will not believe that any sanemen will pay such an enormous price for the privilege of indulging themselves in their obstinacy.

It has recently been pointed out that the price realized for the new bonds was less than the market price of another class of bonds on the day in which the arrangement was consummated, and explanations have been requested. It does not seem to me to be a very difficult question to answer, and I will do it in a sentence. It is because our people have more confidence in their ultimate redemption in gold than is held by the foreign investor, and if we would secure foreign gold we must float them abroad, at a less price than we can float the same bonds at home.

Mr. BOATNER. Well, is that so?

Mr. COOMBS. It is, because our credit stands higher at home than it does abroad.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Then we had better trade with home people.

Mr. COOMBS. I can not submit to interruptions in the brief time I have, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it.

I would point out, too, Mr. Chairman, that the reason the people abroad have been compelled to lose confidence in our bonds—

Mr. BLAND. Let me say to the gentleman—

Mr. COOMBS. I decline most positively to yield. I have but a few moments. The gentleman has had his own time.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Let the gentleman from New York defend the Administration without interruption.

Mr. COOMBS. If the defense of a good business policy is defending the Administration then I am doing so; but I wish it to be distinctly understood that I have not communicated with it in relation to what I have said or what I shall say hereafter. I should be proud to be its authorized defender on this floor, but can not aspire to that distinction.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Why should they not have confidence in our bonds when they get their gold regularly?

Mr. COOMBS. I hope the gentleman will be required to keep still and allow me to proceed without interruption. I ask the Chair to protect me from the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The gentleman asked a question, and I have a right to answer it.

Mr. COOMBS. I did not ask the gentleman a question. Let me proceed without interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted without his own consent.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I ask that the gentleman be protected.

Mr. COOMBS. Before I was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee I was on the point of showing why it is that the credit of our bonds stands higher at home than abroad, and will now, if I am permitted to go on, proceed to do so.

Our people at home do not believe that under any circumstances will our bonded debt be paid in anything else than the best money under the sun. They do not believe that the people will ever countenance repudiation or partial repudiation. They are not frightened by the vapors of demagogues or theorists, who are tolerated because they are not taken seriously, but are looked upon as an unavoidable temporary nuisance in a popular Government, and that they do not in any way represent the honest sentiment of the American masses.

The foreign investor can not understand this matter as fully as we do, and there are many things to excite his fears. He sees a bill brought before this House providing that we place in plain language what the commercial and financial world believe to be our intentions, namely, to pay our bonds in gold, and we deliberately scout the idea and defeat the bill.

How is he to know, as we do, that you do not represent the honest sentiment of the people? He may possibly have lost confidence in the financial integrity of the present House, and have taken courage in the fact that it is soon to be replaced by the opposite party, but that confidence is destroyed when they find the leader of that party, under whom the new House is soon to be organized, proposing a measure which also avoids that very vital point, the promise to pay our bonds in gold.

And they say if the present House of Representatives are not in favor of declaring to the world that their bonds shall be honestly paid, and if the Administration that is to come, through its leader and its possible candidate for President, avoids that point, avoids making any committal of himself, what have we to hope for? I ask you, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, if foreign bondholders have any reason, from the action of Congress, particularly when they look at the action of another body at the other end of this Capitol—I ask you if they have any reason to have confidence in us, and is there any reason why our bonds should not come back to us? Or if for any reason we seek to sell them abroad that we should not be obliged to submit to extraordinary terms? It is a business operation, and the profit must be proportioned to the supposed risk—

Mr. BOATNER. Would it interrupt my friend—

Mr. COOMBS. I am sorry, but I can not allow an interruption. You have placed upon the shoulders of the Executive of this nation the duty and responsibility of maintaining its credit, and yet you disregard his reasonable advice and refuse to grant him the remedies that he asks for to enable him to perform his duties properly. You have been and are hard taskmasters, but I thank God that we have in the executive chair a man who, confident in his own integrity, does not hesitate to take responsibilities, who sees his course clear, and who will defend the nation notwithstanding you desert him. He has the confidence of the people and they will stand behind him.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Because the other branch of Congress has reported a free-coinage bill the gentleman has no right to malign it.

Mr. COOMBS. I have not maligned anyone. They have acted upon their own responsibility and according to their own judgment of what constitutes financial integrity.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COOMBS. You can not ask me a question. I have refused to yield to you, and decency requires that you do not interfere with me.

I say, gentlemen, that the condition which confronts us in relation to our standing before the world is one of the most serious that can be imagined. I look around upon your faces in the House, and I see a smile of incredulity. When it was foretold before the war of the rebellion that we should have a long and bloody conflict that same smile passed over the countenances of gentlemen then present.

I tell you that if you allow the credit of this country to be ruined abroad, if you allow us to be discredited before the nations of the earth, it will be more than a four-years conflict before we can regain the position to which we are entitled. It will cost us billions of money to regain the ground that we have lost and other billions in the way of losses from lack of prosperity. It will cost us the respect of the world. It will entail a loss of self-respect.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOMBS. No; I will not yield. I know that in making my voice heard here to-day upon this subject I have but performed a patriotic duty, and I believe that the time will come when those who to-day malign the friends of sound currency and good honest business methods in the conduct of our financial affairs of the Government will see their mistake. The time will come when the friends of a sound and honest currency will be honored, and the men who smile with incredulity when disaster is foretold will hide their heads in shame.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has thirteen minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER].

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I desire to have read the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: In the debate in the House yesterday I have just noticed that you asked Mr. DINGLEY the question:

"Is it not true that by reason of the fact that about 80 clerks have been taken out of the Pension Bureau and put into the field, the certificates which are being issued from time to time have been greatly reduced, until now they average only about 300 per week, or about one-third as many as the roll is being reduced by reason of suspensions and deaths?"

Mr. DINGLEY replied: "Very likely that may be so," etc. I feel that you would not make an intentional misrepresentation, and beg to call your attention to the fact that the average number of certificates issued per day is very close to 300, and has been for some time past.

From the report for the week ending February 9, 1895, now before me, I find there were 1,754 certificates issued; for the week previous there were 1,423; the week prior to that there were 1,595; for the week ending January 19, 1895, there were 1,944, and during the week ending January 13, 1895, there were 2,665.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

D. I. MURPHY,
First Deputy Commissioner.

Hon. EUGENE J. HAINER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, certainly no person should desire to place the Pension Bureau in a worse position than it deserves to be placed by the facts. Desiring to treat it with the utmost fairness, I have caused to be read this letter, which must be presumed to state the facts most favorable to the Bureau. Gentlemen who listened to its reading must have noted, and I call the attention of the committee and the country to it, that the honorable deputy does not deny the substantive propositions contained in my question of yesterday directed to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. He does not deny that 60 clerks have been taken out of the office to be placed in the field; that in consequence the number of claims allowed has been greatly reduced, and that now the number dropped may be three times as great as that placed on the rolls. His letter shows that the average of claims has fallen from 2,665 to 1,423.

This reduction we may well believe is a natural and necessary consequence of taking 60 competent and experienced examiners out of the office. How else can you account for this reduction of almost one-half during the past month?

In this connection the exact figures as given by the Commissioner in his last annual report at page 39 are significant, and demonstrate that the Bureau is not engaged in doing the great service for the defenders of the country which its friends would have us believe.

This table shows that the number of claims allowed exceeds the number dropped by only 1,134, and that 5,920 were reduced, so that the number dropped and reduced exceeds by nearly 4,800 the names added to the rolls.

Compare this with the record of former years:

In 1891 there were allowed 156,486 claims; in 1892, 224,047 claims, and in 1893, 121,630 claims.

Let it be remembered, too, that in the allowances now being made must be included reissues; old certificates are being canceled and new ones issued at lower rates. How many there are of this class I do not know, but their number I conclude from personal observation to be large.

Comment is unnecessary. The bare statement of these facts and figures taken from the published record of the Bureau is sufficient to carry that condemnation which found partial voice at the polls last November. The proposition involved in the pending amendment is to still further reduce the force in the Bureau, and that despite the fact that more than 600,000 claimants are knocking at the doors for admission, and more than $23,000,000 from last year's appropriation remain unexpended. At the rate claims were acted upon last year four years would be required to pass upon the cases now filed. Reduce the force and these claimants must wait still longer. The dictates of common honesty require that these cases be passed upon in time if we are to help them at all. God will take care of the claimants in eternity. If these clerks are inefficient, discharge them and employ others. If there is not room for them to work, rent sufficient buildings, but pass upon these waiting, deserving cases. Refusal to act upon them is a denial of justice and approaches hard upon crime.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS].

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, this debate has taken a rather singular turn. We were considering that provision of the bill by which the Pension department seeks to dismiss a large number of clerks—not quite 200—who are necessary to perform the duties of the Pension Bureau, and who are absolutely needed there, if the 600,000 of undecided pension claims are to be determined. My colleague [Mr. COOMBS] has drifted away from the bill before the committee and into the financial question. I listened with great interest to what he had to say upon that question, and I must say that I believe that he is a much better lawyer than he is a financier.

Mr. COOMBS. I am not a lawyer. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Then I take back the compliment. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SNODGRASS. That settles it, then.

Mr. COOMBS. So I have to stand on my financial record entirely.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. We find ourselves in this situation: By the legislation of this Congress and the action of this Democratic Administration the Government is obliged to borrow money to live on. The question is this: How shall we borrow it? I was in hopes that my friend from New York would explain why, when, on Friday last, when Government thirties, at 4 per cent interest, having run eighteen years, and with only twelve more to run, were sold in the market at New York at 110½, the President should make a bargain with his former law partner, or his present one for all I know, to sell to him at private sale sixty-two millions of—

Mr. COOMBS. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. The difference is 6 per cent. I had hoped that my colleague would explain that matter so the country can see why it was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. COOMBS. My point of order is that the gentleman is attacking the Chief Executive of the nation and making insinuations against him.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. COOMBS. He is making insinuations that ought not to be allowed to be made.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I am making no insinuations. I simply state facts; I draw no inferences. Anybody can draw their own inferences. I had hoped my colleague would give the House an explanation of this unusual and strange proceeding. He has failed to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Sell to him at private sale sixty-two millions of the same class of bonds, bearing the same rate of interest, payable in the same kind of money, viz, coin, and having the advantage of thirty years to run, instead of twelve, for 104½. When such bonds were selling in open market at a premium of 10½ cents, why should the President sell sixty-two millions of them at private sale for a premium of only 4½?

If the gentleman has a good explanation, I wanted him to make it.

Mr. COOMBS. I did make that explanation in my previous remarks.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I wanted him to make that explanation so plain that we can understand what it is. His explanation did not explain.

Mr. COOMBS. You did not hear me because you were not listening, and I do not expect to be able to convince you.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I wanted to understand why it is that while Government 4 per cent thirties were selling in the market in New York at a premium of 10½ per cent this loan was made to a New York lawyer at a premium of only 4½ per cent. What becomes of the 6 per cent difference in the sale of the same class of bonds on the same day?

Why was the sale made to the agents of the Rothschilds of Europe at 6 per cent less than the bonds would bring in Wall street? The gentleman says our credit is bad, and gives that as the only reason.

Mr. COOMBS. It is not as good abroad as it is at home for reasons that I have given.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I deny it. The credit of the United States is as good as that of any nation on the face of the earth. It is not in the power of this Congress and this Administration to destroy the credit of this country.

Mr. COOMBS. The Administration is not destroying it, but guarding it without the help of Congress.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Yes; guarding it by degrading and cheapening our bonds. If our credit is destroyed how can you sell even gold bonds? Where are these bonds held?

Mr. SNODGRASS. They are held abroad.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And sell here at a premium of 10½ cents.

These old bonds have twelve years to run, and a thirty-year bond is much more valuable than a twelve-year bond; so that the gentleman's explanation, if he made one, as I said before, did not explain. The country wants to know just now why it is that the President dictates to this House that we shall not borrow any money unless we put the word "gold" in the bond. Why is it that he says that if we use the word "coin" it will require a bonus of $16,000,000 on a loan of $62,000,000? And coin includes both gold and silver.

Mr. SNODGRASS. And who gets the margin?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And, as my friend from Tennessee asks, who gets it?

Mr. COOMBS. Whom do you think gets it?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Oh, I do not know.

Mr. COOMBS. You prefer to make an insinuation rather than a charge.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I do not believe that you get a dollar of it. [Laughter.] I make no insinuation. I believe the bonds could be floated as a 3 per cent bond and $16,000,000 saved to the Treasury.

Mr. COOMBS. You prefer innuendo to plain statement. You prefer by vile insinuations to try to blacken the character of the only man who stands up before the world for the integrity of the country.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Not at all. I simply state facts. I attack the character or integrity of no one.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I ask that the two gentlemen from New York be protected from one another. [Laughter and confusion in the Hall.]

The CHAIRMAN. Public business will be suspended until order is restored.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, my colleague says that the country needs the gold to make the gold reserve good in the Treasury. How came the reserve to be impaired? Simply and solely because this Administration has been using it to support the Government when it ought to have had revenue sufficient for that purpose. The Republicans always had revenue sufficient when they were in control of affairs.

One word more and I shall sit down. We offered from this side of the House a proposition that would help the Government out of the difficulties of the situation—a proposition to issue 3 per cent bonds payable in coin and let the people of the United States take them. It was to be a people's loan. They could be sold at the post-offices and wherever the people have their dollars to invest; a loan that would be taken to ten times the amount that is required, taken in this country by our own people at 3 per cent, and thus easily escape paying this enormous bonus in order to get foreigners to take our loan.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Certainly. I will do for you what you refused me.

Mr. COOMBS. The proposition from your leader on that side was not in the direction of retiring these Treasury notes and greenbacks that constantly make their depredations upon the Treasury, and any man who knows the financial situation knows that to accept that proposition would be simply to keep turning over the same weary wheel which we have been turning for the last year. That proposition would not meet the necessities of the situation at all.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for a speech. The gentleman, it appears, has a wheel in his head. [Laughter.] I suspected it before, but now he confesses it. He wants to revolutionize our whole financial policy his way, when the urgent question, the question absolutely necessary to be acted upon is how can this Government get money enough for its immediate and indispensable needs. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] to use the remainder of his time now.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the matter of the reduction of the clerical force in the Pension Office was thoroughly gone over in the Subcommittee on Appropriations. Governor DINGLEY, last evening, before going away for a few days, fully gave expression to the House as to his position on this question. It is hardly necessary for me to say that, of subcommittee with him, I fully concur in his conclusions. The propositions submitted to your committee were simply these: That we would increase the special force for special work $250,000, giving for the next fiscal year a half million dollars for work in the field for contested pension cases. That is $250,000 larger than we have heretofore given save under deficiency bills.

The Commissioner of Pensions, as well as the Secretary of the Interior, came before the committee and made statements, in substance, saying: "We can reduce the clerical force under this appropriation almost $200,000 for the next fiscal year. For some six or eight years past there have been detailed in various divisions or bureaus in the Interior Department between 50 and 60 clerks from the Pension Bureau who have not been doing pension work."

The Committee on Appropriations took up those several bureaus and said:

We will give you the clerical force in those bureaus which have heretofore been detailed from the Pension Bureau.

That left a possible reduction in the Pension Bureau of 114 clerks. Both the Commissioner and the Secretary said:

We have in our vast body of clerical force, covering an appropriation annually of upward of $2,000,000, 114 men and women whom we can dispense with because they are superannuated, because they do not do a full day's work, and further because, being relieved of that force, we can do better work in the Pension Office.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and myself critically examined the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions; and we reached the conclusion that in view of the giving of half a million of dollars for the special examining force of the Pension Bureau we could wisely dispense with these 114 superannuated and unmeritorious clerks who have heretofore been doing a line of work—

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. BINGHAM. No; not now. That these men may have been soldiers or that these widows may be the widows of soldiers is of course a question for reasonable consideration. But the soldier and the widow of the soldier receive under the statute special consideration in appointments in the Pension Bureau when positions are filled. The intention of the statute, the consideration and the generosity of Congress, run only to the extent of preference in the appointment. When a man or a woman is engaged in any clerical branch of any Department of this Government the standard of obligation must reach as high as that which is applied to any other clerks. The merit of having been a soldier, or the sad condition of being the widow of a soldier, runs only to the question of appointment. After that every condition is equal.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman three minutes additional.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish to say to the House that, accepting the well-considered judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, accepting the critical examination to which we subjected the Commissioner of Pensions when he was before our committee, I for one, ever watchful of the interests of the soldier on this floor, identified with every vote of generosity and patriotism toward the soldier, believe as my best judgment after such examination that the pension administration will be bettered by the acceptance of this reduction of clerical force and the acceptance of the quarter of a million dollars additional for special pension examiners in connection with the examination of special pension claims.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Does the gentleman think that a soldier who has lost one arm should be required to do just as much work as a clerk who has two arms?

Mr. BINGHAM. As to clerical work, yes. The Government gives the soldier for the loss of his arm that to which your patriotism and mine have contributed, an honorable recognition by way of pension; but in working as a clerk, receiving $1,200, $1,400, or $1,600, the standard of efficiency, after the admission of the man to the service, must be adhered to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But if a man is admitted to clerical service because he is a soldier, and he is required to do work which it is impossible for him to do because of his service as a soldier, then his admission into the service is a farce.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; his services as a soldier go to give him preference in admission. The supposition of the law is always that his ability to do the work is on a parity with that of others who are assigned work of the same class.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But why should not the same advantage be given to the soldier all through his service as in his appointment?

Mr. BINGHAM. The preference based on the recognition of his services as a soldier is given to him in his appointment upon the distinct presumption that he is capable of doing the work. If you are going to establish any other standard, then you must have your pension roll of clerks as well as your regular pension rolls for disability in the service.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes; but the gentleman would blot out altogether after the clerk is appointed the distinction based upon service as a soldier.

Mr. BINGHAM. The man when appointed as clerk must do his full day's work.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But in the case supposed he can not; he has but one arm.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then he gets his pension.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then he goes out of office.

Mr. BINGHAM. He does not go out of office.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. On the gentleman's theory he does.

Mr. BINGHAM. There are lines of work which one-armed men can do.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Not as clerks.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman is not fair in his proposition at all.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am entirely so.

Mr. BINGHAM. The proposition is a simple one. If the gentleman's view is correct, why do we not provide in the statutes that the one-armed man appointed as clerk shall do less work than the two-armed man?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Because God Almighty declared it in His statute when he made men with two arms. That is the reason.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is all very well. But you fix in your statute a limitation as to compensation by reason of work done. You provide your different classes of clerks, one, two, three, and four. The gentleman might as well say that the clerk holding a one-thousand-dollar position should receive a salary of $1,400.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. We are not talking about promotion; we are talking about entrance into the service at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. I make this proposition: We have provided in our statutes that ex-soldiers should receive recognition as such in clerical appointments. But once in a clerical place, the ex-soldier must do his full line of clerical work.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And this bill takes it away.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose a soldier is given a place in any one of the Departments, and after serving for a time it is found that he is not able to do the work to which he is assigned. Are there not light places in all of the Departments where he could be retained?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, of course. But the gentleman understands that the work is graded, and the clerks who do a certain class of work receive one compensation—

Mr. PICKLER. But he could be retained?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Then, why turn him out?

Mr. BINGHAM. We do not turn him out. This does not turn him out. The matter rests entirely in the discretion of the head of the office.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Secretary of the Interior in his testimony before the committee that I read a short time ago said that the object was to get rid of soldiers and soldiers' widows who are incapacitated for the work.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no doubt that nine-tenths of the employees in the Pension Office are either soldiers or soldiers' widows.

Mr. PICKLER. And I do not want them turned out.

Mr. BINGHAM. And that is the only way you can speak of them; for the body of the force is undoubtedly soldiers or the widows of soldiers. Now, if you are going to do the Government work at all—and the pensioners who are seeking to get their pension claims allowed are interested in having it done well—but if you are going to do that work on the part of the Government you have got to do it on well-defined lines. Your statutes fix the manner of the entrance of the appointee and the preference that shall be given to certain appointees. But the supervision of the work or the manner in which the work is done rests and must necessarily rest with the head of the Bureau. When you set up a system in any bureau of the Government you must have the work done according to that system or everything will fall into disorder.

Mr. PICKLER. But why does not the Secretary put these people out if they are inefficient? Why does he recommend this matter to Congress and place the responsibility upon us?

Mr. BINGHAM. He does not. The gentleman certainly understands the question here. The Secretary tells Congress that he can do the work with a reduction of a quarter of a million of dollars, and do more work.

Mr. PICKLER. No; he does not say as much work. The Commissioner says to the contrary.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from South Dakota can not emphasize his devotion to the old soldier any more than I; but when you undertake to do the work of the Government it has got to be done on a system, and whether it be done by a soldier or a civilian it must be done under some well-defined rule.

Mr. PICKLER. But I do not see any reason why soldiers or soldiers' widows should be turned out if there is light work in the Department that they can perform.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, they are not turning anybody out. It is a matter of discretion with the head of the Department.

Mr. PICKLER. Then let him exercise it and not ask us to take the burden of it.

Mr. BINGHAM. He does not. He simply says I can do the work with a reduction of this force if I am allowed this appropriation to use for special examinations.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Did the Secretary explain to the committee why it was that they were so far behind in the work of the office?

Mr. BINGHAM. We have no evidence that they are.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, we all know it. There are 619,000 cases pending.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Members of Congress who have given attention to the matter know that they are behind with the work. You can not get papers in certain divisions of the office because they are behind.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no such evidence before the committee.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Then the Commissioner hid something from the committee. Now, as long as they are so far behind there should be no reductions in the force.

Mr. BINGHAM. The general assertion I recognize has force, but I fail to see it in any examination or testimony adduced before the committee.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Then I repeat he must have hid something from the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. It must have been because the committee were not able to cross-examine them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, after the very concise and satisfactory statement of this provision of the bill by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] I feel it hardly necessary to add anything by way of explanation.

The House will remember that when the act of June 27, 1890, was passed 455 clerks were added to the permanent force of the Pension Office for the purpose of expediting the consideration of claims under that law. The greater part of that work has been completed. The Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior estimate that the force of the office is now unwieldy, and that they have 114 clerks more than necessary. There is, it is true, an apparent reduction of 165 clerks in this paragraph, but 51 are detailed to other bureaus of the Interior Department, and have been thus detailed for a long term of years. So the net reduction in the office force is but 114 clerks.

The Commissioner of Pensions expresses the view, in which the Secretary of the Interior concurs, that this reduction will rather expedite than retard the consideration and adjudication of pension claims. Upon an examination it appears that there are about 80 clerks in the Pension Office, whose annual salaries amount to $92,800, who are either absolutely inefficient or below a fair standard of efficiency. Now, then, the inefficient clerks who cumber the rolls, instead of expediting the settlement of claims, absolutely hinder their adjudication.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, on pages 84 and 85, the following: Beginning with the word "ten," line 23, page 84, to and including the word "copyist," on page 85, line 9, and insert the following:

"Twelve chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,000; fifty-eight principal examiners, at $2,000 each; twenty-four assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; three stenographers, at $1,600 each; seventy-seven clerks of class 4; ninety-seven clerks of class 3; three hundred and seventy-five clerks of class 2; four hundred and seventy-eight clerks of class 1; three hundred and thirty-seven clerks, at $1,000 each; one superintendent of building, $1,400; two engineers, at $1,200 each; two hundred copyists—

Mr. PICKLER (during the reading). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the substitute be omitted. It simply puts the number of pension clerks where it is now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does it restore the 165?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then you give 51 more than have been there for a long term of years.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. PICKLER, and the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. PICKLER demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, yeas 132.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before moving that the committee rise I will say that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has a request for unanimous consent to offer an amendment, to which I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add the following new section between sections 8 and 9, to be numbered 9: "That in initiating a claim to public land under any of the laws of the United States, the applicant may make the preliminary affidavits required before the register or the receiver, or some officer having a seal and authorized to administer oaths, in the land district in which the land is located, such affidavits to be filed with, or transmitted to, the register and receiver, with the fee and commissions, or other payments, required by law.

"That hereafter timber-culture claimants shall not be required in making final proof to be personally present at the land office to which such proof is to be presented, but the claimant may have his or her personal evidence taken at place of residence and transmitted to the proper land office under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill at the point indicated to offer this amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I object.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before demanding the previous question I desire to be heard upon one proposition in this bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Pending the request of my colleague to be heard—

Mr. DOCKERY. I have made no request.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Pending the suggestion of my colleague that he desires to be heard upon a particular provision, I wish to submit a point of order against one amendment reported in this bill by the chairman of the committee, the one relating to annual clerks to members.

The point of order which I wish to submit is that this proposition involves a change of existing law and does not reduce the amount appropriated by the bill or the number of persons employed in Government service.

The SPEAKER. That point should have been raised in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I desire to be heard for a moment on that question if the Chair will indulge me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are two considerations involved in the point of order. One is whether the point of order itself is good, waiving the question whether it is made at the right time. The other question, and the one which would deserve primary consideration, is whether or not this amendment, being reported from the Committee of the Whole, the point of order can now be raised against it. To that particular question I wish to address myself briefly, of course not desiring to consume time and not desiring to intimate that the Speaker is not much more familiar with these questions than I am. The question is one which I believe has not before arisen in the House.

The first proposition, as to whether the point of order is good, I take it, may go without discussion. Wherever an amendment is such that it changes existing law and does not reduce the expenditures carried by the appropriation bill it is, under Rule XXI, unquestionably bad. This is precisely such an amendment. The only question which now arises, I think, is whether that question of order can be submitted to the Speaker of the House, this bill having come from the Committee of the Whole. The rule, as it will be observed, is a rule primarily for the guidance of the House in the disposition of the business before it. It is a rule the object of which is to prevent the incorporation into appropriation bills of propositions which change existing law, unless those propositions fall within the exception of the rule itself, as by lessening the amount carried by the bill.

The amendment proposed by the Committee of the Whole—

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman just there that the application of the rule to which he refers was not in the House, but in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, I will ask the Clerk to read that clause of the rule. The Clerk doubtless has it at hand. I believe it is Rule XXI, second clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States; by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House, members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I think this provision relates to bills wherever they may come up; relates to the proceedings of the House rather than to the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole. The provision of this—

The SPEAKER. The point is that appropriation bills come up in the Committee of the Whole, and therefore that must apply there.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Speaker will indulge me, the provision in reference to that is in another rule; and I submit that that provision does not throw any light upon the question I am now raising, namely, the question whether this point of order under the rule just read at the Clerk's desk can be made in the House upon an amendment reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole. That to which the Speaker refers will be found in the rule on Committee of the Whole, Rule XXIII, I believe. That provision is simply this, that, the point of order being made, no appropriation bill can be considered in the House at all until it has been considered in Committee of the Whole. That applies to the general course of appropriation bills. This other applies to amendments proposed to appropriation bills.

I think the rule to which the Speaker referred is not the one which has been read from the Clerk's desk. That rule against new legislation upon appropriation bills is not restrictive in its language, nor can it be in its intended scope. There is nothing in that rule, as suggested by the Chair, which indicates that the rule has application only in the Committee of the Whole. Suppose, for illustration, that a bill should be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Suppose the point of order, good under another rule, was not made that the bill should receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole and consideration were entered upon in the House; then, clearly, the point which I have raised would be admissible, notwithstanding the other point of order had already been waived and consideration of the bill in the House entered upon.

An amendment does not become part and parcel of the bill until it is incorporated into it by the action of the House. This amendment comes to the House from the Committee of the Whole merely as one of the amendments to be acted upon by the House. As an amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole this rule was invoked against it when it came before the House to be considered in the House with a view to attaching it to the bill. By our rules no new legislation can be incorporated in an appropriation bill so as to escape the force of the rule which was read by the Clerk without an order from the Committee on Rules permitting that incorporation. In this case the rule I have invoked must have full and controlling force, unless it be held that the House is powerless to enforce or consider it, merely because the House is weaker than the Committee of the Whole, its own creature.

Why, a half dozen words, or even a single word, absolutely unnoticed in the hasty reading of a paragraph in Committee of the Whole, might reverse the meaning of pages of the statutes. And yet, if a point of order such as I have here raised is to be dismissed as out of time, there can be no recurrence to the improvident or accidental departure by the Committee of the Whole from the rules of the House for the purpose of raising a point of order, confessedly good if the House or the Speaker can entertain it. Surely the House should not be held to have abdicated essential power under its rules. Otherwise, an amendment having passed the Committee of the Whole by some inadvertence or oversight, the House would be absolutely powerless to exclude that amendment, however obnoxious, under its rules. Though it were passed in Committee of the Whole in violation of this rule upon which I rely, or any other rule or rules, the House could not exclude it. The House would be compelled simply to vote upon it, no matter how gross the ignorance, how palpable the blunder, or how indefensible the course of procedure through which the amendment might get into the House by report from the Committee of the Whole.

Now, the object of this rule is to prevent legislation upon appropriation bills when that legislation is of a character which would change existing law, unless it be made allowable upon such bills by reducing the expenditures carried by them. That object being sought, why is it not good and proper to accomplish it wherever it may be accomplished? Suppose an error has been committed in Committee of the Whole. Suppose, for illustration, that, as oftentimes happens in the consideration of a long bill, the member of the House chosen by the Speaker to preside over the Committee of the Whole were temporarily absent, and a point of order were suddenly raised, with an inexperienced member in the chair, and were decided incorrectly. If the Clerk, reading on, had entered upon another paragraph not only the committee but the House would be absolutely powerless to invoke its own rules to correct the error if the point of order can not be raised in the House as I am striving to invoke it here and now.

Mr. TAWNEY. An appeal could be taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes; an appeal can be taken, of course, wherever the decision of the Chair upon a point of order is not satisfactory to any member; but that does not meet the question. You can easily imagine an instance where a decision, manifestly wrong, has been upon a point of order in Committee of the Whole, and where, through haste, or lack of attention on the part of the presiding officer for the time being, or of the members of the committee, the Clerk has entered upon the reading of another paragraph so that the right of appeal has been lost. In such a case, if the doctrine against which I am arguing can be maintained, we are in the position that one man in the House can absolutely hold the House by the throat in defiance of its own rules.

If the question is submitted in the House in respect to an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole whether that amendment is obnoxious to some rule of the House, what harm or wrong can happen from having the judgment on that question of the regular presiding officer of the House calmly invoked in the House before a vote is taken upon the proposition itself? What harm or wrong or violation of any rule can result from that? I have endeavored to show that upon the other construction it can very easily, very readily, happen that a decision may be made in Committee of the Whole, through haste or inadvertence, and be allowed to pass without an appeal, a decision absolutely wrong in point of parliamentary law and absolutely violative of the rules of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to another thing. These decisions stand as precedents; one is backed more or less upon another. Decisions in the House upon points of order, as well as decisions in the courts, rest upon one of two things, or upon both: upon general principles or upon authority—prior decisions. When questions of this kind are raised we know how often they are disposed of by recurrence to former decisions, and a decision of the Committee of the Whole is quoted as parliamentary law upon a similar question arising later.

Now, ought the House to be helplessly cut off, upon any particular question, from determining what is the law and what shall be the precedent? Shall the ill-advised, or hasty, or erroneous decision of a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole be beyond the reach of the House, and stand for all time for what, as a precedent, it may be worth, while in fact it is worthless in reason—stand to guide or to hamper other Chairmen presiding over the Committee of the Whole, or, worse still, that high officer, the Speaker?

I submit in conclusion that what I contend for is simply a carrying out of the purpose, the object, the scope of this rule, and making it effective, by enabling the House, in its organized capacity, with its regularly chosen and skilled officer in the chair, to determine what the decision and the precedent upon a particular point shall be. No harm can result from that. On the other hand, to take the other view is, or, to put it otherwise, might be, to make parliamentary law out of a hasty, ill-advised, erroneous decision of a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, simply because that decision has been made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Suppose the amendment had been ruled out of order, would the gentleman think the House could take it up and dispose of it?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, sir; I would not think any such thing.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then why do you propose that the House shall take this matter up?

Mr. NORTHWAY. The converse of the proposition ought to be true.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will tell the gentleman why, though I am very much surprised that he should ask the question. The why is that an amendment does not come before the House from the Committee of the Whole unless it be reported to the House by that committee. If voted down in the committee it is not reported to the House—as I suppose the gentleman has discovered by this time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If a proposition is settled in Committee of the Whole why bring it before the House?

Mr. DE ARMOND. If it is settled in Committee of the Whole! Settled in Committee of the Whole! These propositions are not settled there. The propositions reported from the Committee of the Whole upon this bill have merely reached the legislative stage when the House is to consider them, and the question is, shall that consideration be limited to a direct vote upon the propositions themselves, or shall it be broadened so as to include the question whether they are allowable upon the bill which carries them or are violative of the rules of the House?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I agree perfectly with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] on the main question, and I intend as certainly to vote against the amendment as he does. The question now, however, is not as to the merits of that amendment, but it is a question of order, and is important, as it will establish a precedent where none now exists.

While this immediate and precise question has never been presented, it has been ruled over and again that the Speaker can not pass upon any matter which has occurred in the Committee of the Whole unless that special matter has been referred by the committee to the House for its decision. The former practice was when a question of order arose in the Committee of the Whole for the committee to rise at once and refer it to the House; but the later and, as I believe, the better practice is to settle questions of order in the committee itself; and we now frequently see appeals taken from the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. This can and does answer every purpose which a similar proceeding in the House could answer.

Indeed, sir, there is absolutely no difference between the Committee of the Whole and the House itself except that a Chairman presides in the committee; that there can be no previous question; that there can be no motion to lay on the table, and no vote by yeas and nays. With these exceptions the Committee of the Whole is the House itself; and any effort to establish a distinction is based upon a parliamentary fiction.

I repeat, that while there may have been no ruling upon this precise question, there are many decisions which thoroughly analogize with this and which establish the doctrine that when the Committee of the Whole has not referred a matter to the House for a decision the Speaker is not permitted to pass upon the question.

The House has nothing before it except the report of the committee, and is not presumed to know what has transpired there except as informed by the report. That report can be adopted or rejected in whole or in part, as the House in its wisdom may determine, but we can not go back and reverse the proceedings by which the committee agreed upon its report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, whether this amendment may have been originally subject to a point of order or not, the point of order was made in the Committee of the Whole and was there considered; and the point of order having been overruled, the amendment is now reported to the House. I do not recollect any precedent where a point of order was made and sustained upon an amendment reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole. I do recollect, however, where points of order were made in the committee on the extra month's allowance—I think in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses; possibly in the Fiftieth, certainly in the Forty-eighth or Forty-ninth Congresses, or both.

In that case the point of order was overruled in Committee of the Whole and the amendment reported to the House; and my recollection is that Speaker Carlisle, on the point of order being made in the House, overruled it, and said that under the circumstances, the amendment having been reported by the committee, the House should have the privilege of voting upon it. I think I can refer the Speaker to that ruling if he desires to examine it. I believe it is upon my desk.

So much for that. If the Chair desires to hear argument upon the merits of the point of order, then I should be very glad to submit a few words. But I do not care to do so unless the Chair wishes to hear further discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the views of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] are in accord with those of the Chair. The Chair is ready to rule.

Under the rules of the House all appropriation bills are to receive their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole; and the rules of the House, so far as applicable, apply to the consideration of such bills in the committee. The action of the Committee of the Whole is reported to the House. The House is informed of such action only through the report of the Chairman of the committee.

No other cognizance is taken by the House of the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole. The amendments which are considered in the Committee of the Whole do not appear in the Journal except those favorably acted on, which are reported to the House. No reference appears in the Journal of the House to any amendment which may have been offered and voted down, though it is true such amendments appear in the proceedings in the RECORD. The House, however, takes cognizance of such matters only occurring in the committee as are reported to it from the committee.

The Chair finds quite a number of decisions to this effect:

The Speaker can not rule in regard to what occurs in Committee of the Whole unless reported by the committee to the House for such decision.—Journal, second session Forty-ninth Congress, page 384; second session Forty-fifth Congress, page 81. Congressional Globe, Thirty-ninth Congress, page 628. Journal, second session Forty-ninth Congress, page 384; second session Forty-fifth Congress, page 81. Journal, first session Fiftieth Congress, page 623. RECORD, May 17, 1890, Fifty-first Congress.

Again it has been decided that—

A Committee of the Whole having reported a bill to the House, the Speaker can take no cognizance of alleged irregularity in its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The reference given in the Digest is to CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session Forty-ninth Congress, page 1050. The Clerk will read from the RECORD the proceedings on that occasion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILLIS. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question upon agreeing to the amendment and ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to say that the provisions of the bill making separate and distinct appropriations have not been considered in the Committee of the Whole, and no vote has been taken upon any provision appropriating a specific sum of money. Before the Committee of the Whole had proceeded beyond the consideration of the eighth line, before any subsequent paragraph had been read, this amendment was offered, and against objection a vote upon it was forced prior to the taking of any vote upon any one of the subsequent provisions of the bill. I make the point of order that the vote can not be taken upon the adoption of this substitute until the provisions of the bill have been separately read and considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House now has nothing before it, and the Chair has nothing before him except the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The facts stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], if they be facts, might constitute a good reason for the recommittal of the bill by the House to the Committee of the Whole. But the Chair must deal with the report as presented. The bill is out of the Committee of the Whole and in the House by the action of the committee, which the Chair can not revise or overrule in any manner. The point of order is not sustained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to find any precedent sustaining the position assumed by the gentleman from Missouri in submitting the point of order, and therefore overrules it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the Chair, I should like to say a single word further on this question. It may not be important, but I hope the Chair will allow me to call attention to what seems to be a difference in the situation as it now exists and that with reference to which the Speaker has just called attention. That was a point of order on an allegation, as I understand it, that the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole were irregular. This is a point of order which has nothing to do with the Committee of the Whole at all. But here is an important amendment reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole, and the point is raised that it is not in order under the rules of the House, saying nothing of what transpired in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the practice and under the rulings heretofore the House could not possibly review a point of order made in the Committee of the Whole. The point is made and decided by the Chairman of the committee. There is an appeal allowed from the decision of the Chair, and then it rests with the Committee of the Whole whether the decision shall stand as the judgment of the committee or not. Under the practice suggested by the gentleman from Missouri a point of order might be raised in Committee of the Whole and determined by the Chairman, an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair, and the decision affirmed or reversed, as the case may be, in the committee; the same point of order could be brought into the House, debated, and decided by the Chair, with the right of appeal, and a judgment be rendered by the House finally upon it. The Chair does not think it would be consistent with the orderly practice of the House or consistent with the usage heretofore, and therefore overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, is not the regular order the vote on the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman in charge of the bill has not yet demanded the previous question. The gentleman from Missouri has been recognized, and the Chair supposes he will demand the previous question when he has made such debate as he may desire.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, under the act approved March 3, 1893, each Member of the House and each Delegate is allowed $100 a month for clerical services, provided that such Member or Delegate certifies to the disbursing officer of the House that he has paid, or agreed to pay, that sum. That $100 a month runs during the session of Congress; and there is carried in this bill, pursuant to the existing law, $230,889.15. That provides each Member and Delegate $100 a month for clerical services from December 1 next until the 30th day of June following.

The proposition which comes to us from the Committee of the Whole does not make permanent law. Some gentlemen have supposed that this proposition makes the clerks annual. That is an error. It simply provides that beginning with the 4th day of March next and terminating with the 30th day of June, 1896, each Member and Delegate shall be allowed $100 per month for clerical services.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is a proposition that those present shall vote themselves that sum.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will allow me, it is a proposition that each Member and Delegate shall be allowed $100 a month for clerical services from the 4th of March, 1895, to the 30th of June, 1896. Thereafter annual clerks will not be carried in the bill unless the law so provides.

Now, what is the liability involved? It means this, gentlemen, that this bill must carry provision for $100 a month compensation for the clerks of 356 Members and four Delegates, or 360 clerks in all, for nine months from the 4th of March next, amounting to $324,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not yield.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, you have got all the time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Allow me to complete my statement first, and I will yield afterwards.

It means also that there will be carried in this bill a liability of $31,500 for 20 annual clerks for nine months from the 4th of March, 1895, to the 1st of December, 1895. In other words, the proposition involves a liability upon the Government of $355,500 for the nine months ensuing after the 4th of March, 1895; and during that period Congress is not in session, and the members have not even taken upon themselves the oath of office. It means a duplication of expenditures to the extent of $31,500, because the annual clerkships run for that time.

Now, let me illustrate that for a moment, and if my friend from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] will not object I will use his committee clerkship for the purpose of illustration. The Committee on the District of Columbia has an annual clerk. He was appointed by my friend from Missouri, the chairman of that committee. That clerk will draw his compensation at the rate of $2,000 per annum for nine months, and my colleague's successor will also, under the amendment, have the right to name another clerk at $100 a month for the same nine months.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will my friend yield for a moment?

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think the gentleman certainly will yield to me—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman declines to yield, I will not interrupt him. The gentleman has all the time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Divide the time with us.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How much time does the gentleman want to yield to us?

Mr. DOCKERY. The time will be equally divided. Now, let me give another illustration. Take, for instance, my friend from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Allow me to further illustrate this proposition by the use of his committee clerkship. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has an annual clerk. That clerk will draw his pay for nine months from the 4th of March until the 1st of December, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will also under this amendment have the further right—because he is a member of the next House—to appoint a clerk at $100 a month for those nine months. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to the fact that the Committee on the District of Columbia has an annual clerk, and my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] objects that his colleague [Mr. HEARD] goes out of office on the 4th of March, and that his successor who comes in on the 4th of March will have a clerk for nine months. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if the clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia will have anything to do with the work of the successor of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. No; and what is worse—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I want to ask my friend, is the clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia to be the clerk of the committee or the clerk of the chairman of the committee? Is he not the clerk of the committee?

Mr. BINGHAM. All annual clerks are committee clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. Annual and session committee clerks.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He works for the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. STOCKDALE. You say he will be the committee clerk. Will there be any such committee?

Mr. DOCKERY. The annual clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia certainly can not have very much public business to discharge during those nine months.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then ought we not to discharge the clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. DOCKERY. We ought to do it if we are going to allow each member to name a clerk at $100 a month.

Mr. HEARD. Illustrate with somebody else. Take the Appropriations Committee. That will apply just as well.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is it not a fact that this bill carries a large number of items of appropriation for clerks for whose employment there is no provision of law?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Did you not know that when you introduced the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, certainly; I suppose there are five hundred items in the bill that are not expressly authorized by statute and only live in appropriation bills. I have only referred to the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds and on the District of Columbia to illustrate the point I was seeking to make. The same illustration applies with equal force to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Ways and Means and every other one of the 20 committees which have annual clerks.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to yield one-half of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want five minutes of that time.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used ten minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish first to address myself to the point which has been raised against this amendment by the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was suggested to me the other day that my amendment was open to the objection he raises of a duplication of clerkships—that is, in reference to the clerks of committees. I then stated to the gentleman from Missouri that if he would raise no captious objection to my amendment I was perfectly willing to have it corrected to obviate that alleged objection if it really existed. My proposition was declined, and it then occurred to me that his purpose was rather to defeat my whole amendment than to secure an amendment to my amendment in the line of the objection he raised.

I am quite willing, I state now, as I stated on that occasion, to accept any fair amendment correcting any error in my amendment if I could obtain unanimous consent; but I do not desire to see my amendment defeated by captious opposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would you allow me to say a word—

Mr. BARTLETT. No, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On your side of the question? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If this bill passes a resolution can be put through in fifteen minutes to get rid of the bugbear suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The conference committee can fix it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Any disadvantage which may have been caused by the adoption of my amendment can be cured and corrected by the committee of conference. Now let me state, in answer to the objection made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], for whose energy, zeal, and ability I have the highest regard, that it seems to me that there is nothing in his objection. The clerks, on the 4th day of March, 1895, for instance, of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Appropriations, will, it is true, remain in office as the clerks of those committees, liable to discharge any duty for the discharge of which they are called.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; but they are not called upon to do any work for any member of this House. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will cease to be chairman of that committee with the end of this Congress; so will the chairman of every other committee. And if these clerks remain in office it is merely to discharge committee work, and for no other purpose. Now, if you desire to abolish these clerks, if the new Congress does so, I have no objection; but that objection has no bearing upon my amendment; and there is only one possible objection which can be urged against my amendment.

It must be conceded that those members of the Fifty-third Congress who are reelected members of the Fifty-fourth Congress will require the services of their clerks during each and every day of the recess. But it may be said, why should those men who become members of the Fifty-fourth Congress, not having been members of the previous Congress, without having taken their oath of office, be allowed clerks? There seems some little point in that objection; but we must follow general principles; and if it inures to the benefit of a few, we must not take that into consideration. We must regard the good of the many, even though possibly it inures to the unnecessary benefit of a few. Moreover, I have no doubt but that the new members of the Fifty-fourth Congress will be called upon by their constituents to discharge many duties concerning which they will need clerks.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do you think they would be called upon to perform any duties requiring the extra pay allowed to the clerks?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If you do, will you state in what direction it will be?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no doubt that they will be the recipients of numerous requests and letters of inquiry, and from time to time, if not daily, certainly weekly, that they will be required to perform certain duties in response to the requests of their constituents.

Mr. BLAND. Are not members paid for that?

Mr. WISE. Do not they get $416 a month for that?

Mr. BLAND. If it is the purpose to give this additional salary to the member, why is it not done directly instead of indirectly?

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me answer the gentleman from Missouri. I say that the charge that this is trying indirectly to increase the salary of members is wrong, improper, and unjust. No member of this Congress, no member of this House, do I believe would be so unworthy as to take one dollar of this money for his personal benefit. We were treated to an extraordinary exhibition the other day.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me? My point is this: The member will attend to his private business and the clerk will be left to attend to what would be the public business of the member.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would ask these gentlemen who have these acute consciences, why do you draw your money during the recess; why do you take your $416 a month?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the very question which I am asking is, Why should they draw the money during the recess for doing this business for which they want a clerk?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know how it may be with some members of this House. I know for myself that all the money I receive is $5,000 a year, and that is all I want, although I consider it somewhat inadequate pay. All the sums that are allowed for clerk hire are for the clerks alone, for work which they perform not for us, but for the benefit of our constituents, as was ably pointed out the other day by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I can only say this, that the small objection which can be raised to new members drawing this clerk hire certainly does not apply to the great body of the members of this House, and we must have some firm and lasting rule established. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-one minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, this whole question is a question that addresses itself to the judgment of every member upon this floor. Is it right? [Cries of "No!" "No!"] I remember, Mr. Speaker, that when this question was before the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and others who now shout "No!" "No!" objected to members being allowed session clerks, yet what have they done from that day to this? They have gone into the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms and certified that a clerk was necessary to them, and that they had employed clerks and desired to have them paid, although when the proposition was before the House they said they had no need of a clerk.

Mr. BLAND. I never certified that I needed a clerk, and never had one except during the sessions of Congress.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is time we were done with demagogy on the floor of this House. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Speaker, "You can fool all the people part of the time and you can fool a part of the people all the time, but you can not fool all the people all the time." [Applause.] And those who oppose clerks on a yea-and-nay vote, while in Committee of the Whole vote for them, will be known at last to their constituency. The question is simply this, do the members of the Fifty-fourth Congress need annual clerks or not? That is the only question. The argument has been made upon this floor privately that this should not be passed because the Fifty-fourth Congress will be Republican. [Laughter.] What difference does that make? If every single member of that Congress were Republican, how would that affect this question? If they were all Democrats, how would that affect the question? Mr. Speaker, I assert on the floor of this House that this amendment added to this bill in Committee of the Whole is not for the benefit of any member of Congress, but is for the benefit of his constituents.

Mr. HUNTER. Of one of his constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I propose to vote for this proposition for the benefit of my constituents, and I am willing to take the risk of their disapproving it, and they pay the taxes. When any man says that if this appropriation passes it makes an addition to our salaries he says what is not true, and when it is charged that this is a proposition to increase the salaries of members upon this floor the charge is not true. The only purpose of it is to enable members to give better attention to the business of their constituents, which is outside the official duties of Congressmen, and which without some such provision as this it can not receive.

The private claims and personal matters pertaining to our constituents are important to them, and if our official business forbids our personal attention to these matters they should be served; especially so when the cost would only be  $4\frac{1}{2}$  mills per capita. For this small tax per capita for all the months when Congress is not in session each district could have an agent in Washington City under the control of the Representative of the district who could answer the personal calls and private as well as public matters that can only be attended to by personal attention of someone.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I came here summer before last several times—for what purpose? To look after claims of my constituents that were pending in the Pension Office and in the Court of Claims or other Government Departments. There is not a member on this floor to-day who, when he leaves here on the 4th of March, will not be compelled to leave numerous matters concerning the interests of his constituents unattended to; and shall he be expected to run up here every two or three weeks to attend to those matters?

Mr. CARUTH. Where is that war claims office that the gentleman had to go to?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman is so ignorant, after having served here ten years, that he does not know the location of the Government offices, I have no time now to instruct him. [Laughter.] It is his fault if ignorant, not mine.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in Committee of the Whole I had five minutes to say what I desired to say touching this amendment. I said it then as best I could, and I do not know that in the short time I have now I can add thereto. I have, however, nothing to take back that I said then. I have for years believed that the expenditure for clerk hire to Senators was a wise one. Some people thought otherwise.

At first the allowance was for the session, but it is now annual. I believe that is wise. I was gratified when the Fifty-second Congress, of which I did not have the honor to be a member, had the courage to make provision for clerks for members. I believed it was right, and said so before I ceased to be a Member of the Fifty-first Congress. In my judgment the average Member of Congress—and I hope I am about an average member—can use this allowance of $100 a month for clerical assistance for the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not recall that there was any action on that subject during the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It was proposed.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And voted down?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Dropped. But we made progress.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It was carried, I believe, on a vote in Committee of the Whole, but defeated on a yea-and-nay vote in the House, was it not? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think so. That is my recollection. But suppose it was, that Fifty-first Congress does not meet the approval of my friend from Ohio, and I hope he will not follow the precedent that was made at that time. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I believe that every member here, elected to the next Congress or a member of the present House, believes that the public interest would be served by making this appropriation. I am willing to walk up and vote for it. I believe the country will endorse it, and, as I said the other day, a country that gathers annually a revenue of $400,000,000, or ought to, and makes expenditures of over that amount, ought not to stop and criticize an appropriation like this for clerk hire, and will not do so. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. BARTLETT. I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the reason assigned in the last Congress for giving clerks to members during the session was that it was necessary that members should be present here while the House is transacting its business, and therefore necessary that they should have clerks to attend to their work about the Departments and to assist in their correspondence. No such reason exists in favor of this amendment. This proposition to furnish members clerks during vacation at the expense of the Government simply means that when vacation comes and the lawyers, the bankers, and the business men of this House give up their Congressional work and commence attending to their private affairs they shall have clerks paid by the Government to attend to their official duties, while they themselves receive $400 per month for attending to their own private business. That is what this amendment means. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia may talk about demagoguery or any other "gogy;" I tell you the people will understand that this is simply voting money into your own pockets. What member of this House is there who can not after the 4th of March attend to all his Congressional correspondence and other official work without the assistance of a clerk? If my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] must go into the courts and try his cases—if other lawyers of this House and business men must look after their private affairs which have been neglected during the Congressional session, they may need clerks, it is true, to attend to their Congressional work. But I say when a man is allowed nine months in the year to attend to his private affairs, while his official salary runs on, he can afford to hire a clerk for $100 per month at his own expense to attend to his official duties and enjoy the other $300 of his salary himself while attending to his own private business during vacation. I hope the amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, each time we rise on this side of the House to speak we hear that doleful cry upon the other side, "Vote!" "Vote!" We will not vote until we get through discussing this matter, and that satisfactorily.

I was one of those who earnestly supported the proposition that members of Congress should have clerks during the sessions of Congress. I supported it from the beginning to the end, though at no time was I directly interested. I am opposed to this proposition to give members $100 per month for clerks the nine months preceding the commencement to the session for several good reasons. The first is, there is no necessity for it. Why should gentlemen compare the duties of a Member of Congress with those of a Senator, who has his whole State for his constituency, who receives correspondence from every part of the State? There is no comparison between the amount of clerical work required of a Member and that required of a Senator.

Again, this amendment is in violation of the spirit of the contract between Representatives and the people who sent them here. The terms of salary and labor expected for these nine months were well known—did not contain this $100—and you gladly accepted them. When gentlemen were candidates for reelection last fall they did not let their people know that if such a proposition as this should come up they would vote in the affirmative. You know you would not have done so. To give new members this extra pay is unfair to old members who are not chairmen of committees having annual clerks. Many of them will have more clerical work in closing their next nine months than any new member will have in that time.

Then, again, this proposition is directly in the interest of the members who are to vote upon the measure. They propose to vote to themselves release from that little portion of clerical labor which comes to them during the nine months of Congressional recess. I have been in Congress for ten years, and have therefore had five opportunities to know what the work amounts to during such a recess. I have a large constituency. My district embraces a large city and contains also within its limits a very considerable number of ex-soldiers. I have always had many demands upon my time when at home; but there has never been a period when I could not perform the duties of Congressman while at home, so far as correspondence and other matters of that kind are concerned, in from one to two hours each day. It was not necessary for me to have a clerk at $100 a month to do those things, nor is it necessary that you should have now. If you must devote your time to other matters you can employ such clerical help as you need for $25 or $30 per month.

There would be much more justice, much more equity, in a proposition of this sort if this Congress, instead of voting for this special proposition, should adopt an amendment to the general law to pay for clerks from the time the first session begins until the end of the term. Gentlemen do not propose to change the law; they do not propose to make a general provision for annual clerks. You simply provide that those of you who are to be members of the next Congress shall during the first nine months of your term enjoy the benefits of this $900. Wait until the next session if you desire to do this thing. You will have the opportunity to do it in the deficiency bill. It will be just as honorable; it will be just as fair to the people then; it will be just as statesmanlike then; it will be just as necessary then. You can then vote this $900 to yourselves for your clerk hire if you feel you ought to have it; if you are satisfied that it is justly your due.

Mr. CARUTH. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He is, I believe, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARUTH. Will he have the kindness to tell me, for the information of the House (because the gentleman from Georgia seems to be the only one that knows), where the "war claims office" is?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am not familiar with that office; I do not know where it is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE].

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I can not and will not vote for this proposition as it stands. I should be very glad to vote to give to my successor the same facilities as a member of this House which I have had and greater facilities. I believe that the services of clerk to a member should begin with the first session of the member's service, whether it be a regular or a special session, and should then continue until the end of the Congress. But I do not believe that during the vacation, which forms ordinarily the first part of the Congressional term, a member should have this allowance for a clerk. If the gentleman from Georgia is sincere in his statement that for the present and for the future he has abandoned demagoguery on the floor, I insist on having him sworn and let it be made a matter of record. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. He might be congratulated by the House.

Mr. PENCE. But, Mr. Speaker, there are serious objections to this amendment, which I think must be insurmountable to every member of the House who will give it a moment's consideration. As it stands I certainly think it should be defeated. But I am ready, with other gentlemen here, many of whom are retiring from Congress, and who want to do the right and proper thing not only to their successors but to the people, and arrange for an effective service in the future—we are ready to vote for a proposition that will allow the services of a clerk to members of Congress beginning with the service of the Congressman himself at the opening of the next regular session. But certainly I do not think we could conscientiously go beyond that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield now three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, a single word on the subject now before us.

Gentlemen in this House protest against the allowance of a reasonable compensation for clerical labor to assist the members of the House during that period of Congress when we are not actually in session, and the impression is sought to be made that during that time there is no need for such service. Gentlemen forget at the same time that among other allowances to members is a compensation for mileage far beyond the requirements of actual travel. As an illustration, I am allowed $56 from my city to this capital to and fro each session of Congress. It costs me $6, and yet there is no criticism on the part of gentlemen near or far as to drawing too much compensation on that account. Gentlemen draw $125 a session for stationery, and yet there is no man here who draws and uses that much stationery in any session of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the service of a clerk for one who gives his time to his constituency is as necessary and the work is as great during the recess as during the session of Congress. I have been a member of Congress for sixteen years, and during that entire time I have never given to business any moment of my time outside of the time I have given to my constituency, and that runs to every man who represents a large constituency. My work never ceases after the 4th of March until the reassembling of Congress, and there are as many constituents in my house each day when I go home during the recess as when I go home during the session of Congress. The service of a clerk is of assistance to me and of great value to them.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise at this time with any hope that I will be able to exercise any influence on this question to defeat the proposition, but more for the purpose of putting upon record my earnest protest against the adoption of the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole. I have heard no suggestion from gentlemen who support it which to my mind is at all satisfactory or sufficient to recommend it to my favor. If you concede that members of Congress after the 4th of March have public duties to perform, you must also concede that they are paid by the people for their performance. If to my mind there was no other objection to the amendment I should feel constrained to oppose it because of the manner in which it comes before us.

I respectfully submit to the House that we are called upon here to do something which I understand to be in plain, palpable, and flagrant violation of the rules of the House. Here we are a body of lawmakers, with a system of rules for our government as binding upon us as if they were written upon the statutes of the country, and yet we are asked to trample upon those rules, and for what purpose? However gentlemen may disguise the fact, whatever methods of reasoning they may pursue, it is for the purpose of paying money for our own benefit. Gentlemen say not a dollar will go into their pockets. Undoubtedly that may be so; but the money is being used to employ somebody else to perform a service for the performance of which they are already paid by the people of this country.

Now, I submit to the House whether or not it is becoming in us, whether or not it is worthy of members of this Congress, in the face of its own rules to adopt this amendment. I have not yet heard of the denial of the fact that it was a violation of the rules, and I understand that has been practically conceded.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this House since the Fiftieth Congress, and I have passed through many just such scenes and outbursts of sentiment from gentlemen on this side of the House and on the other side as this whenever any question comes up here which may affect the interests of any constituency of a member where that interest may be considered personal to the member. I want to say that there is not now, nor has there been in the House, ten men within the last ten or twenty years who have performed all of the duties incumbent upon a member of Congress—I mean the entire duties with reference to the Department work, the distribution of seeds, sending out documents, and attending to the thousand and one things which are merely mechanical in their nature, but which form an important part of the duties of a member of this body.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I stood upon this floor and voted to pay to the members of this House the loss which occurred to the members through the defalcation of a former Sergeant-at-Arms. I saw pass between the tellers in Committee of the Whole a large majority in favor of that measure. When the time came to call the roll there were a number of members who had passed between the tellers who, when their names were called, did not have the moral courage to stand up to their convictions and record their votes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that when the proposition was made for clerks to members that same thing happened, and I want to say that the second proposition, made just as this is, on the eve of the adjournment of a Congress, passed, and I want to say of those who cast their votes against the proposition and denounced it as being wrong, that they were the first men to appoint clerks and to certify to the necessity of their employment. I want to say that the very same gentlemen who made the outcry against the payment of money for the defalcation of Silcott, everyone of them, with the exception, I believe, of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, accepted the money after it had been appropriated.

Mr. BLAND. You might include me also as one who did not accept the money.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman should also include me.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. These gentlemen, then, are noble and distinguished exceptions. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not accept the money.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I want to say that if every man has the courage of his convictions, and if every man who voted for this proposition by passing between the tellers will cast his vote as he voted then, that this proposition will carry by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I have simply to say that I have stood for twelve years in this House, and have seen from time to time this same question under consideration. I have seen the House by a rising vote decide 2 to 1 in favor of clerks, and then when my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or some one else called for the yeas and nays, I have seen a vote of 2 to 1 the other way. In Committee of the Whole the other day this House voted 2 to 1 for annual clerks. The question is whether you have the honest courage and integrity to stand by your convictions or whether you will be stampeded by this scarecrow of what somebody in your district will do.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES] one minute.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of giving clerks $100 a month for twelve months each year, commencing on the 4th day of next December. I desired in Committee of the Whole to have an amendment to this amendment, but was refused any consideration and was told that I must take this or nothing, and I have concluded that I would favor this amendment rather than have it defeated. Still I am opposed to the amendment as a whole. I do think that the members of the Fifty-third Congress who have been reelected to the Fifty-fourth Congress should have from the 4th of March clerks at $100 a month continuously, but I do not think it is necessary for the new members of the Fifty-fourth Congress, who are not members of this Congress to have clerks from the 4th of March, when they have no work for them to do, when we who go out will have six months' work without clerks in sending out seeds, books, etc. I do not think it is fair—

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like the attention of the House for two or three minutes, as I am now called upon to close the debate on our side.

I wish to say a word or two in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who has attacked our side so vigorously, and who imagines he is a parliamentarian more able than the Speaker of this House or than the distinguished Chairman of the Committee of the Whole; who imagines that he is a parliamentarian greater than the able gentleman from Texas who gave us his views on the point of order when it was raised, and who also imagines that he alone holds the monopoly of honesty in this House, he who says that we come here as vultures to prey upon a carcass. I for one do not propose to allow any man in this House to say that I am a vulture. [Laughter.] Nor do I propose to have it said that any of the gentlemen who support the amendment offered by me are birds of prey.

I say that the gentleman is mistaken. He is no eagle. He is rather the raven, that croaks continually, "Nevermore," or the daw that picks at the sleeves of honest men, of those members who favor this amendment.

Now, gentlemen, I can tell you for one that this amendment makes no personal difference to me. I have an office in New York, run at a loss and sacrifice. I have abandoned a practice of $25,000 a year to come here. [Great laughter.] And, gentlemen, I am glad and proud to have done so, for I feel that I may be of some possible service to my constituents; but if these gentlemen imagine—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask for another moment. If these gentlemen imagine that their little village communities represent the people and that their communities alone represent the masses, I tell them that we represent the people just as much as they do, and our constituents believe in us and in our honesty.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this proposition is a very simple one. We have heard upon this floor all this session and nearly all of last session that the Treasury of the United States was "hard up." We have refused public buildings where they were necessary. We have refused improvements because the Treasury was in an embarrassed condition; but to-day we come here and demand that the country take $300,000 or more from the Treasury to pay for clerks when Congress is not in session, and when gentlemen elected to the next Congress have nothing to do for the money which they received but to write five or ten letters a day with respect to public business, which is the only work they can do. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if I can get the attention of the House I desire to say—

Mr. HUNTER. Yield one minute to me.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, when I shall have spoken three minutes I wish the Chair to let me know. I desire to yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Speaker, I will address myself particularly to this side of the House. The majority will be held responsible for such legislation as may be enacted. Others will be the beneficiaries of this measure if it shall become law, but the Democrats of the House will be held responsible before the bar of public opinion for this appropriation. Now, what is the appropriation? Three hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars in order to pay for the services of clerks to ourselves when we are engaged in our private business affairs. I have been in Congress now nearly ten years, and I know something about what a Congressman does during vacation. I know that no man can rise in his seat and say that the necessities of the public service during the vacation are such as to require the employment of a clerk at $100 per month to assist him in the performance of his official duties.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow an inquiry?

Mr. PICKLER. How many clerks has the Committee on Appropriations. Three?

Mr. SAYERS. Two less than has the Committee on Invalid Pensions, of which the gentleman is a member; besides, I will say to my friend that I do not use any of the clerks of the committee during vacation.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman now allow an inquiry?

Mr. SAYERS. I will be at home, and they will be here in Washington city attending to the business of the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. You have three; we have none.

Mr. SAYERS. Any of the members of the committee may use its clerks, and there is no member of the committee but what uses them as much as I.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me an inquiry?

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to talk to the Democrats of the House, my friend. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Then I will take another minute. I have a minute more, Mr. Speaker.

Now, gentlemen, I will give you a parting warning. You may swell the appropriations of this Congress by such expenditures as this, but when the sum total of appropriations shall be announced to you no one of you who shall have voted for this measure will rise and say: "Mr. Speaker, I contributed to it to the amount of $350,000 for my own personal convenience."

Mr. BINGHAM. Now will the gentleman allow an inquiry?

Mr. SAYERS. My friend will excuse me; I am talking to the Democrats.

Mr. COX. Will you yield to me?

Mr. SAYERS. No. Now you have clerks during the session of Congress.

Mr. COX. I am on your side.

Mr. SAYERS. And from the 4th day of March until the 1st day of December next there is not one Representative in twenty on this side of the House who will have anything to do except to attend to his own private business. Why, then, vote for this appropriation? Is it necessary, is it right to do so? I think not.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the one minute remaining I only desire to say that this Congress has unwisely materially enlarged and extended the franking privilege, and in my judgment this House can not afford to grant any further gratuities and benefits to the membership of this body or to those who shall come after us. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment with respect to clerks to members.

The SPEAKER. Is any other separate vote demanded? If not, the vote will be taken on them in gross.

No other separate vote was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, then, the amendments will be agreed to, except the amendment which the clerk will now report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18 strike out all after the word "Representatives," in line 2, down to and including the word "necessary," in line 9, and insert: "For annual clerks to Members who are not chairmen of committees, and to Delegates from Territories, at $1,200 each, from and after March 4, 1895."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Speaker appointed to act as tellers at the desk Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 142, answered "present" 4, not voting 105; as follows:

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, be excused, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused on account of illness in his family. If present he would vote "no."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. PASCHAL, be excused, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BARWIG. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. WELLS, be excused, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall during the roll call and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. I came in during the call, but I did not observe what portion of the roll was being called at the time.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman can state that he was in the Hall and failed to hear his name called the Chair can not entertain his request.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. I think I was, but I am not certain. If permitted to vote I would vote in the negative.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, is paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then my vote stands.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TURNER]. If he were present I would vote "no."

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the negative, but I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with my colleague, General COGSWELL.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the negative, but, being paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], I withdraw my vote.

The following-named members were announced as paired: Until further notice:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. CAUSEY with Mr. HICKS.

Mr. ABBOTT with Mr. WEVER.

Mr. JONES with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

The following for this day:

Mr. WOODARD with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. HERMANN.

Mr. PASCHAL with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. HARRISON with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey with Mr. FUNK.

Mr. SOMERS with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. COOMBS with Mr. COUSINS.

Mr. HARE with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

The following on this question:

Mr. UPDEGRAFF with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. MOON.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia with Mr. MOORE.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. AITKEN.

Mr. DENSON with Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. WELLS with Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. FLETCHER with Mr. HALL of Minnesota.

Mr. TRACEY with Mr. SCHERMERHORN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear my name in the list of pairs, but I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MORSE. If he were present I would vote against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 98, the nays are 142, and 4 have answered "present." The nays have it, and the amendment is not agreed to; so that the text stands as in the original bill. [Loud applause.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BUTLER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Aiken County, S. C., alleging frauds in the elections recently held in that State and praying for the enactment of legislation to inquire into and punish the parties guilty of the frauds; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the Paper Trade Association, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Bailey bankruptcy bill, and praying for the passage of the so-called Patterson pooling bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HIGGINS presented a petition of the Delaware State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, praying for the passage of the so-called Hill oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Delmar, Del., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 40 citizens of Milton, Del., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of Stove Molders' Art and Benevolent Union, No. 10, of St. Louis, Mo., and a petition of the National Brotherhood of Electrical Workers of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also present a petition signed by a large number of business men of St. Louis, Mo., in the horse and mule trade and organized as the Horse and Mule Dealers and Raisers' Association of Missouri, representing that the horse and mule market of that city is recognized as the largest in the world, stating that they have suffered materially from the fact of the bounty on sugar being withheld from the producer by the Government, and praying for the payment of that bounty. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present resolutions of the board of directors of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., in favor of legislation by Congress to secure to the sugar raisers of the country such compensation in the way of bounty for the crop of sugar grown in 1894 as was contemplated by the law which was in existence when such crop was planted and being grown.

In connection with the resolutions I present a letter from Hon. E. O. Stanard, transmitting a communication signed by a very large number of prominent bankers and business men of St. Louis, favoring the payment of bounty to the sugar producers.

I ask that the resolutions, together with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANDERSON. Should not such memorials go to the Committee on Appropriations, where that matter is now pending?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Committee on Claims is the proper committee for the consideration of the subject. That committee has a bill pending before it for the payment of sugar bounties; but I do not suppose it makes much difference to which committee such memorials are referred.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator is aware that there is an amendment reported by the Committee on Claims for the same purpose, which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims has first jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall not object to the reference proposed by the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TURPIE. I present the petition of Omer E. Huffman, of Dearborn County, Ind., late of Company H, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, and late a seaman in the United States Navy, praying that he may be granted a pension. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of the Jewelers' Association of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation carrying out the recommendations contained in the President's recent message; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Peoria, Ill., and a memorial of Pomona Grange, No. 33, of Peoria County, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Patterson railroad pooling bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Local Union, No. 18, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Springfield; of Electrotypers'

Union, No. 3, of Chicago; of Local Union, No. 181, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Chicago; of Local Union, No. 73, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Alton; of Local Union, No. 199, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Chicago; of Local Union, No. 23, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Chicago; of Local Union, No. 295, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Collinsville; and of Local Union, No. 257, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Bloomington, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 134) calling on the President to take such measures as he may deem necessary to consummate the agreement between the Governments of Spain and the United States for the relief of Antonio Maximo Mora, a naturalized citizen of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 22d ultimo, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 957) for the relief of C. J. Baronett, of Gardiner, Mont., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1684) granting a pension to Robert Gamble, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BRITISH VENEZUELA-GUIANA BOUNDARY.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 252) relative to the British Venezuela-Guiana boundary dispute, to report it with amendments, and I will ask the Senate to consider the measure, inasmuch as there is nothing to come from it except a mere suggestion to the two Governments that they shall arbitrate the question. It will take but a moment to dispose of it. I suppose no one can have any rational objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations were, in line 5, to strike out the words "boundary limits in Guiana" and insert "the boundaries;" and in line 6, before the word "earnestly," to strike out the word "most," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the President's suggestion, made in his last annual message to this body, namely, that Great Britain and Venezuela refer their dispute as to the boundaries to friendly arbitration, be earnestly recommended to the favorable consideration of both parties in interest.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN. The committee also report an amendment to strike out the preamble.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be regarded as agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TURPIE. The title ought to be amended by transposing the name "Guiana," and placing it after "British."

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. I move to amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution relative to the British Guiana-Venezuela boundary dispute."

The amendment was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2750) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2751) to increase the wages of the laborers in the Government Printing Office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 2752) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Dardanelle, Yell County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2753) authorizing the Dyersburg and Mississippi River Railway and Improvement Company to bridge the Obion River, in the State of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PROPOSED ISSUE OF BONDS.

Mr. VILAS. I introduce a bill which I ask may be read at length, and that it lie on the table and be printed.

The bill (S. 2749) to save to the people of the United States $16,170,770 was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States, by his communication on the 8th day of February, 1895, has advised the Congress that, pursuant to the thirty-seven hundredth section of the Revised Statutes, he has concluded an arrangement with parties able to fulfill their undertaking, whereby gold coin to an amount slightly exceeding $65,000,000 is to be delivered to the Treasury of the United States in return for bonds of the United States to the amount of a little less than $62,400,000, to be issued under the authority of the act of January 14, 1875, payable in coin thirty years after date, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, by which the interest to be paid on the amount of gold to be delivered will be at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, but that he has reserved the privilege to substitute at par within ten days, in lieu of such bonds, other bonds, in terms payable in gold, and bearing only 3 per cent interest, if the issue of the same should in the meantime be authorized by the Congress, by the exercise of which privilege there may be annually saved to the people of the United States the sum of $539,150, amounting in the period for which the bonds will be outstanding to the aggregate sum of $16,170,770: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue in a sum or sums not exceeding in the aggregate $65,000,000, coupon or registered bonds of the United States, in such form as he may prescribe, and of the denomination of $50 or some multiple of that sum, payable in gold coin of the present standard value, at the pleasure of the United States, after thirty years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; which said bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority; and the said bonds shall have set forth and expressed upon their face the above-specified conditions, and shall, with their coupons, be made payable at the Treasury of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to dispose of any of the bonds issued under this act, at not less than their par value, for gold coin of the present standard value, and to apply the proceeds thereof to the redemption of the United States legal-tender notes, which he is required to provide for the redemption of, under and pursuant to an act entitled "An act providing for the redemption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875.

Mr. HOAR. I beg leave to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question; and that is, where the correspondence in regard to this proposed arrangement, or the details of it, or the persons who have agreed to make it, is to be found?

Mr. VILAS. What is the Senator's inquiry?

Mr. HOAR. The bill which the Senator has just introduced recites that a certain arrangement or proposition has been made under which the United States is to save $16,000,000 or thereabouts. I ask the Senator if he can tell the Senate where the correspondence or contract containing that arrangement is to be found, or with what persons it has been made, or the details of it. I think we ought to have in some way, if the Senator knows where it is to be found, all the details of the transaction.

Mr. VILAS. I am not the keeper of the executive documents. The President of the United States has communicated the facts to the Senate, and upon the President's message the bill which I have drawn has been introduced.

Mr. HOAR. Then the Senator has no knowledge at all as to who are the persons with whom this contract has been made, or the details or conditions of it, or where it is to be found, as I understand.

Mr. VILAS. No; I have no further knowledge than other Senators have.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. Has his attention been called in the public press this morning to the announcement that these bonds are being sold in London at 112½, netting the people who are purchasing them but 8 per cent and giving to the syndicate of foreign bankers who took the loan in England some 8 per cent profit?

Mr. VILAS. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it. I intend at some time to submit some observations in respect to the bill, and there is an additional reason stated (and I am glad to have the Senator from Colorado on my side) for the adoption of the measure.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I can hardly see how the suggestion made by my colleague can justify the Senator from Wisconsin in saying that my colleague is on his side. These bonds are sold in this country at 104.49. That is equivalent to paying interest on this loan at 3½ per cent. If the public press is stating it correctly, they are sold in London substantially on a basis of 3 per cent, giving to the syndicate in New York, as my colleague said, 8 per cent profit. If the Senator from Wisconsin justifies that, as I have no doubt he will, I very much doubt whether the American people will do so. The President of the United States sent us a message in which he states what he has done, but he does not give us the correspondence or the contract as made.

Mr. HOAR. Nor the facts.

Mr. TELLER. Nor the facts; and up to the present time, as I understand, a committee of another body which has been trying to find out has not been able to ascertain who the parties are or what the terms are except as to the amount of interest. We were told in a general way that if we came to the opinion of the Executive and concluded that we would authorize the issue of a 3 per cent gold bond they would take this loan at 3 per cent. In other words, according to the President's message, they are taking it upon a silver basis because they say that they might have to take silver in payment of the bonds, and therefore they must have three-fourths of 1 per cent extra. The President then announced that they are to be paid in gold and that they must be paid in gold, although he is dealing on a silver basis.

A thirty-year bond is a valuable bond, and I have no doubt myself if the President of the United States had offered that bond to the American people in limited amounts, say $100,000,000, it would have been promptly taken at 3 per cent. Two months ago or a little more the Government of the United States was able to make a loan of ten-year bonds at less than 3 per cent. It can not be possible that even the efforts of the Administration and the lack of business tact shown by the Treasury Department have so deteriorated and destroyed the credit of the Government that there is a difference in two months of three-fourths of 1 per cent on a bond infinitely better, having thirty years to run instead of ten.

The American people have had no opportunity to take these bonds. The President of the United States does not see fit to offer them to the American people. He offers them to a syndicate of bankers, whether European or American we do not know, but the price is, according to the public press, 8 per cent below what it is being taken for in Europe.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Colorado pardon me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator that he ask unanimous consent that the Senate pass a resolution this morning requesting the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interests, to submit a copy of this contract to Congress.

Mr. TELLER. I should be quite willing to stop and let such a resolution be offered by some one who thinks he can secure that information. I have no idea myself that you can get any such information from the executive department. I understand that the committee, as I stated in another place, has so far failed to get it.

Now I wish to add another word. If these bonds are being sold on a 3 per cent interest basis in Great Britain, it is very apparent that our credit has not been so greatly impaired as the President of the United States in his message to us said it has.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I did not intend by the mere introduction of the bill at this moment to bring on a special debate, although I do not wonder that there is some disposition to begin exculpation as quickly as possible. I ask that the bill be printed and lie on the table, when there will be an opportunity for debate upon it, I hope.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table. It will be printed under the general rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer a substitute for Senate bill 2642, reported yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] from the Committee on Finance. I ask that the substitute be read, and that it be printed and lie upon the table.

The Secretary read as follows:

Substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. SHERMAN to the bill (S. 2642) providing for the issue of bonds, the coinage of silver, and for other purposes.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for and maintain the redemption of United States notes according to the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments,' he is authorized from time to time, at his discretion, to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in gold coin, either of the description of bonds authorized in said act, or coupon or registered bonds of the United States, to an amount sufficient for the object stated in this section, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, in gold coin, after five years from their date, with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions provided in said act for the bonds therein authorized. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall use the proceeds thereof for the purpose provided for in this section of this act and none other.

"Sec. 2. That to provide for any temporary deficiency now existing or which may hereafter occur, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to issue certificates of indebtedness to the United States, payable to the bearer in lawful money of the United States, of the denomination of twenty-five, fifty, and one hundred dollars, with annual coupons for interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and to sell and dispose of the same for not less than an equal amount of lawful money of the United States at designated depositories of the United States, and at such post-offices as he may select. And such certificates shall have the like qualities, privileges, and exemptions described in said resumption act for the bonds therein authorized. And the proceeds thereof shall be used for the purpose prescribed in this section of this act, and for none other.

"Sec. 3. That upon any deposit already or hereafter made in the manner required by law of any United States bonds or certificates bearing interest any national banking association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, not exceeding in the whole amount the par value of the bonds deposited: Provided, That at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued to any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock."

Amend the title so as to read:

"A bill to provide for maintaining the redemption of United States notes, and for a temporary deficiency of revenue."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HILL subsequently said: Mr. President, yesterday there was reported from the Finance Committee a bill relating to the subject of the finances of the country, and being so reported by a committee of course it went upon the Calendar. This morning two bills in regard to the subject of the issuing of bonds and relating generally to the finances of the country were introduced, and ordered to be printed and lie upon the table. Of course it is not expected, I assume, that those bills, the one introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the other by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], should go to any committee. The suggestion I make is that when printed these bills should go to the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill I offered is intended to be proposed as an amendment to a bill that is on the Calendar, and therefore it goes to the Calendar without any formal reference.

Mr. HILL. I suggest that the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin should also go upon the Calendar.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Wisconsin wants to speak upon the bill.

Mr. HILL. He can address the Senate upon it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Wisconsin himself asked that the bill lie upon the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the object of the Senator from Wisconsin was that his bill should lie upon the table, as he wanted to deliver some remarks in relation to it.

Mr. HILL. This disposition of the bill will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TELLER. I will object to the bill going to the Calendar. It has no place on the Calendar until it has been before a committee and reported by it.

Mr. HILL. That is a matter purely within the control of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the Senate could vote to place the bill upon the Calendar if it saw fit to do so.

Mr. HILL. The only point in reference to having the bill placed on the Calendar is that it would then be subject to a motion to proceed to its consideration. There is a question as to whether a motion can be made to take up and consider a bill lying upon the table, but if a bill is placed upon the Calendar a motion can be made, without debate, to take it up, and a vote be had on it; and I think we have the right by motion to place the bill upon the Calendar. It is not necessary that a bill should go to a committee and be reported by a committee in order to be placed upon the Calendar. It is purely a matter within the discretion of the Senate.

The Senator from Wisconsin is now here, and if he desires he can have the bill remain on the table or take such course as he wishes. I ask the Senator if he desires to have the bill remain on the table, so that he can speak upon it.

Mr. VILAS. I should be perfectly willing to have the bill go upon the Calendar, and I suppose under the fourth subdivision of Rule XIV the bill goes to the Calendar if there be no other disposition of it, for that rule reads:

Every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave . . . shall, if objection be made to further proceeding thereon, be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. All bills are referred to committees, and that is the only proper way to proceed. A Senator may ask that a bill be placed upon the Calendar without going to a committee, and I have no doubt the Senate can place it on the Calendar if it chooses; but the mere asking that a bill be placed on the Calendar can not place it there, and I shall object to the Senator's bill going to the Calendar. I do not object, of course, to its lying on the table.

Mr. VILAS. I asked that the bill lie on the table, so as to produce no discussion upon the point at this time; but when the Senator from New York suggested that the bill should go to the Calendar and be given the same position for discussion that the other bills are given it struck me as being a desirable course to pursue.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether it is within the power of the Senate to place a bill upon the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. Being objected to, it goes over.

Mr. LODGE. Or does a single objection prevent it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have read the fourth clause of Rule XIV.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XIV.

4. Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice if not objected to, on the same day, and placed on the Calendar in the order in which the same may be reported; and every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave, and every bill and joint resolution of the House of Representatives which shall have received a first and second reading without being referred to a committee, shall, if objection be made to further proceeding thereon, be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I object to the bill lying on the table, and I understand, under the rule, that objection takes it to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is undoubtedly the correct interpretation of the rule.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is a bill which is put upon the Calendar under the clause which has just been read one of the bills as to which a motion may be made to proceed to its consideration after the morning hour has closed?

Mr. HILL. I desire to have the bill placed so that a motion to take it up will be in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the rule read as to the motions to proceed in the morning hour to the consideration of bills upon the Calendar, for if a bill in this condition can have the same privilege of consideration as a bill which has been reported by a committee, I am very much mistaken either as to the rules or the practice of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the rule read.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether all of this discussion is not out of order during the morning hour?

Mr. HILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The bill has gone to the Calendar, has it not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One parliamentary inquiry is already pending, the Chair will state to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. Which parliamentary inquiry is pending, the one submitted by me or the one submitted by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CALL. I make the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order until I can have the rule read as to motions to proceed to the consideration of bills upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read Rule IX.

The Secretary read as follows:

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the Calendar is completed, and not later than 3 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the Calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar, which motion shall not be open to amendment.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Secretary has read sufficient. Now, I inquire whether the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin is on the Calendar of General Orders, so as to come within the rule which has just been read? Does the Chair so understand?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HOAR. There is another rule that ought to be read in that connection, to which I will call attention, and that is that a bill can not be read twice on the day it is introduced, if objected to, nor debated, except for reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what the ruling of the Chair is? The Senator from Wisconsin introduced a bill and asked that it lie on the table for the purpose of enabling him hereafter to submit some remarks upon it. That was done by unanimous consent, I suppose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that an objection was interposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. TELLER. That was not until afterwards. After the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] attempted to have the bill placed on the Calendar I objected, and the bill went to the table—that was the order of the Senate—and it is on the table now, and not on the Calendar, as I understand, unless the Senate now puts it on the Calendar. Besides, considerable other business had intervened before the Senator from New York thought of asking to have the bill placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection was interposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and under the rule, which the Chair has had read in the hearing of the Senate, the bill has gone to the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the inquiry of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I make the point of order that this discussion is out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The discussion has closed, the Chair will state to the Senator.

Mr. CALL. Then I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills is still in order.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TURPIE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2297) to provide for the restatement, readjustment, settlement, and payment of dues to army officers in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2297) to provide for the restatement, readjustment, settlement, and payment of dues to army officers in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. COKE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2297) to provide for the restatement, readjustment, settlement, and payment of dues to army officers in certain cases; which was ordered to be printed, to accompany the bill.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

COAST FISHERIES OF FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Fisheries is hereby directed to make inquiry in reference to the extent, methods, and present condition of the coast fisheries of Florida, more particularly the sponge and oyster fisheries, and to report as to the desirability of establishing a station for investigation, experiment, and fish-culture at some suitable point on the coast.

SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the Senate a copy of the contract recently entered into between the Treasury Department and the representatives of certain banking houses for the sale of United States bonds.

Mr. VEST. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will not object to its consideration.

Mr. VEST. It will lead to considerable debate.

Mr. ALDRICH. There will be no discussion whatever, if the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. VEST. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HOAR (to Mr. ALDRICH). Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. I object.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator object to the passage of the resolution if it leads to no discussion?

Mr. VEST. It will lead to discussion; I desire to say something about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over under the rule, and be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That on and after Friday, the 15th day of February, 1895, and until otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of the Senate shall begin at 11 o'clock a. m., and the morning hour shall terminate at the expiration of one hour thereafter.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the resolution lie on the table.
Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that it go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule.

THE EVERGLADES OF FLORIDA.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether it is proposed to issue a patent to the State of Florida for that portion of the State known as the "Everglades," and, if so, whether the Seminole Indians of Florida will be thereby dispossessed of their occupancy of said lands or any portion thereof.

JOSEPH M'GUCKIAN.

Mr. GRAY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Joseph McGuckian be placed on the messenger roll of the Senate at a salary of $600 per annum, to be paid monthly out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that he be assigned to one of the committees of the Senate now without a messenger.

CHICKAMAUGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. PALMER, Mr. PASCO, Mr. MILLS, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. PEPPER as the committee on the part of the Senate under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses providing for the appointment of a joint committee to prepare and report to their respective Houses for consideration a plan for the proper participation of Congress in the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, on September 19 and 20 next.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 8401) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 8614) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior for restoration to the public domain lands in the States of Alabama and Mississippi not needed for naval purposes was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to House bill (H. R. 5740) incorporating the Society of American Florists, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, amended as follows:

In lieu of the words struck out insert the words, "by purchase, and such other estate as may be donated or bequeathed to it;" and the Senate agree to the same.

M. W. RANSOM,
W. A. PEPPER,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. H. HATCH,
W. S. FORMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

INCOME RETURNS FOR 1894.

Mr. VEST. Yesterday I reported from the Committee on Finance a joint resolution relative to extending the time for making returns under the income-tax law, and was instructed by that committee to urge its consideration. It is a matter of very great importance to the taxpayers of the country, and if action is had it must be had now, as the Senate knows. There are some amendments which the committee think are necessary. I ask the Senate, therefore, to take up that joint resolution and consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Missouri if the joint resolution will provoke any debate?

Mr. VEST. I think not.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894.

Mr. BERRY. I suggest that the joint resolution was read in full yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution was read yesterday, and unless its reading is called for it will not be read now. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution the following:

Resolved, That in computing incomes under said act the amounts necessarily paid for fire-insurance premiums and for ordinary repairs upon any real estate shall be deducted from the rents accrued or received from such real estate.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from Missouri ought in a word to explain what this joint resolution proposes to do and what changes it makes in existing law.

Mr. VEST. There are three additional clauses proposed by the Senate committee. In the first place, the joint resolution makes clear the intention of the income-tax law to give a party not in business, not in trade, as the language of the law states it, a credit for his fire insurance; in other words, it includes that amount of expense to his credit in making his return under the law.

It also makes clear the intention of the law that the cost of repairs on buildings, not betterments, but ordinary repairs, shall be included in the expenses which are allowed to him in making his return. That is the first amendment. If the Secretary will read the second amendment that will be evident.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to add:

Resolved, That in computing incomes under said act the amounts received as dividends upon the stock of any corporation, company, or association shall not be included in case such dividends are also liable to the tax of 2 per cent upon the net profits of said corporation, company, or association, although such tax may not have been actually paid by said corporation, company, or association at the time of making returns by the person, corporation, or association receiving such dividends.

Mr. VEST. That is an amendment rendered necessary in order to remove the objection which is made now, growing out of the fact that the income tax, for instance, of 1894, has not been paid by a corporation at the time the return is made by the individual stockholder, which is March 1, 1895. Therefore this amendment states that although the corporation may not actually have paid the tax, yet if it is liable for it the individual stockholder is not compelled to give in the amount of those dividends in his return. That is the meaning of the law.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether the forms sent out by the Department are not otherwise.

Mr. VEST. This conforms to the existing law.

Mr. GORMAN. The blanks are all out, and if this amendment were adopted would it not of necessity require the Department to withdraw all those blanks and issue new ones?

Mr. VEST. It would not necessarily require the Department to change the blanks, but my object in having the joint resolution passed in this form is that the taxpayers and stockholders may understand distinctly that the law has been amended, and that they are not required to put this statement in their returns. This simply makes clear the intention of Congress in enacting the law as it stands. We intended to avoid double taxation. As a matter of course, if the corporation paid the tax, the individual stockholder should not pay it. For 1894 the corporations have obviously not paid this tax, but they are liable for it, and when under the existing law, without this amendment, the stockholder makes his return under the instructions or forms which have been issued by the Internal Revenue Department, he would make the return of the dividend for which the corporation is already liable. We simply propose to provide now that he shall not make that return of that liability which exists on the part of the corporation.

Let the third amendment be now read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the second amendment to be now acted upon?

Mr. PLATT. Let that be agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Yes, let that be agreed to. The Senator from Maryland wanted me to explain the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The third amendment will be read. The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to add:

Resolved, That no taxpayer shall be required in his, her, or its annual return under said act to answer any interrogatories except as specifically provided in said act.

Mr. VEST. In other words, the law intended that the taxpayer should first make his return, and then, if the collector suspected or had good reason to believe, to use more definite language, that there was any mistake or suppression of returns or fraud, then these interrogatories could be put which it seems the Internal Revenue Department now thinks should be put in the first instance. We make clear the intention of Congress that the taxpayer shall first make his return, and that is conclusive, unless the collector sees proper to use the other instrumentalities provided in the law in order to satisfy himself of its correctness.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest that the title of the joint resolution should be amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. VEST. After the resolution is passed I propose to move to amend the title in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. VEST. Now I move to amend the title by adding to it the words "and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the joint resolution and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. VEST, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

Mr. VEST. One other word, Mr. President. I hold in my hand an official communication from the Treasury Department in regard to the returns upon salaries and as to whether commutation in money to officers of the Army and Navy and to members of Congress is to be included in returns. Unless some Senator asks for its reading, I shall simply request that the communication be printed in the RECORD, as it relates to a matter of very general importance.

Mr. CHANDLER. And printed as a document?

Mr. VEST. And printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., January 2, 1895.

SIR: I have to acknowledge yours of the 13th ultimo making the following inquiries respecting the construction and effect of the new income-tax law, to wit:

1. Whether "mileage and commutation of quarters" paid officers of the United States Army are to be considered as parts of the incomes of such officers;

2. Whether, if they are to be so considered, they are to be added to, and held to be a part of, the salaries or "payments for services" within the meaning of section 33 of the act and therefore to be taken account of by paymasters under said section; and

3. Whether, in the case of an army officer subject to an income tax on his salary, the tax is to be collected in installments by deductions from his monthly pay or be collected in bulk annually and be based on the amount of salary received in the calendar year preceding the time of the collection of the tax?

Replying to these questions in their order—

First. The answer to the first question is found in Division V, page 33, Regulations Relative to the Income Tax, just issued by the Treasury Department, wherein it is expressly provided that paymasters and disbursing officers shall deduct the 2 per cent "from all salaries and payments of every kind made in money to officers or other persons in the civil, military, naval, and any other employment in the service of the United States * * * upon the excess of said salaries over the rate of $4,000 per annum."

In this particular, and though the phraseology of the two statutes is not the same, the Treasury "Regulations" construe the existing law to be the same in meaning and effect as section 86 of the act of July 1, 1862 (see Treasury Regulations, December 1, 1892), a distinction being drawn between supplies in kind which are not assessable and pecuniary payments which, though representing such supplies, are nevertheless assessable. This ruling of the Treasury Department has been promulgated since yours of the 13th ultimo, and will, I assume, be accepted as satisfactory.

Second. Under the existing statute a salary in excess of $4,000 is taxable as such at the rate of 2 per cent upon the excess. If the recipient thereof has other income exceeding $4,000 such excess is also taxable at the same rate. But if the salary or other compensation is $4,000 or less, or is uncertain or irregular in amount or in the time of its accrual or being earned, then nothing is taxed as salary, but the salary is one item of the total income which becomes taxable when exceeding $4,000. The answer to the second question, therefore, is that commutation moneys received by an officer are to be added to other incomes (including a salary of $4,000 or less) in order to ascertain the total income the excess of which over $4,000 is subject to a tax of 2 per cent.

Third. The third question seems to be completely answered by the following paragraph of the Income Tax Regulations, Division V, page 33:

"Paymasters and disbursing officers of the Government will make no deduction for taxes from the salary or pay of any officer or person in the employ of the United States for the year 1895 or thereafter until the amount paid to any such officer or Government employee on account of such salary or employment has reached in the aggregate for that calendar year the sum of $4,000, when from the first payment on the excess of said amount or any part thereof the paymaster or disbursing officer making the payment shall deduct and withhold the tax of 2 per cent on the entire amount of such excess of salary or compensation payable to such officer or employee for said year. The excess upon which the tax of 2 per cent is payable shall be ascertained by deducting the sum of $4,000 from the fixed annual salary or compensation."

Respectfully, yours,

RICHARD OLNEY, Attorney-General.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (S. R. 123) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania was passed yesterday on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I was absent from my seat yesterday when the joint resolution was passed. As it concerns very materially interests in my State, one end of the bridge being in the State of New Jersey, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed. I will promise the Senator from Pennsylvania that to-morrow morning I shall be able, I think, either to withdraw the motion or to ask for a vote.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from New Jersey is not ready to proceed now to the consideration of his motion?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from New Jersey says he thinks he will be ready to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered in accordance with the request.

Mr. QUAY. It goes over until to-morrow, to be disposed of then.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SHAW.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I beg leave to give notice that on Saturday, the 23d of February, instant, I shall ask the Senate at the proper hour to suspend business in order to listen to eulogies on the life and character of my late colleague in the House of Representatives, Hon. George B. Shaw.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 7839) to bridge the Newark Bay; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 261) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of the appropriation made in the river and harbor act of 1894 for St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the postal service.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kentucky please withdraw his motion in order to enable me to call up a bill? I see there is a minute or two left before 1 o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not. I have had similar requests made by several Senators. Instead of there being a minute or two left, I see it is now a minute and a half after 1 o'clock.

Mr. McPHERSON. There will be no debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In common fairness I should have to yield first to other Senators who have made the same request. I should gladly yield to the Senator from New Jersey but for that fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, when the Senate had the pending bill under consideration yesterday evening I was endeavoring to show that the proposed amendment is not only unnecessary, but dangerous. It appears that this clause is unnecessary, because the most ample power now exists in the hands of the Postmaster-General to reduce the expenditures for the railway post-office car service. The law provides a certain method of compensation, but does not provide the amount of compensation except by saying that it shall not exceed a certain sum. In other words, it provides a maximum, and that maximum has twice been reduced by legislation of Congress. Therefore upon the face of the amendment, so far as it is intended as a measure of economy, it clearly appears that it is not needed.

I have examined the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] made in the opening of the debate upon the bill, and I find (it is due to him that I should say this) that he did state when the debate commenced that the amendment was intended to be a measure of economy and a means of securing a reduction of what he said were the enormous expenditures of the Post-Office Department in connection with the postal-car service. But in answer to the purpose that was avowed by the Senator from Kentucky, and the purpose later avowed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], to whom we look as the economist of the Senate, it clearly appears, as it seems to me, that the amendment is not needed. It is entirely unnecessary. Therefore I condemn the amendment as being an alteration of existing law which is not needed for any wise purpose, which is not needed for the purpose for which the two Senators unite in saying that it is designed.

Going further than that, it appears that the amendment is not only objectionable because it is unnecessary in order to a reduction of expenditures, but it is objectionable because, as originally presented, it authorized an increase of expenditures. As the law now stands the Postmaster-General can reduce the compensation, but he can not increase it. As the amendment was proposed while he could continue to reduce the expenditures if he chose, he could also increase the expenditures to any amount. That amendment in that view is highly objectionable. It is objectionable, as I shall endeavor to show before I finish, in the form presented by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], which requires the Postmaster-General to reduce the compensation not less than 10 per cent.

Mr. President, there are in this city, and they from time to time gather together, men who make it their business to make money in connection with governmental transactions. They are sometimes claim agents in good and regular standing; they are sometimes lawyers in good and regular standing in the city of Washington; they are sometimes lawyers in good and regular standing in Buffalo, N. Y., and in New York City; and they are sometimes claim agents and attorneys who are in good and regular standing nowhere. But these men make it their occupation to look up business, and they seek for great corporations who have means, from whom they may extract in some way or another the money which they need for their subsistence. I shall not any more closely describe the men of this character, but I have them in my mind's eye—soldiers of fortune, men who mean to get a living in one way or another, and who generally succeed in doing it by carrying out their various schemes.

The danger of the amendment, if it had passed as originally reported, would have been that immediately after it became a law—and it will be the danger if the amendment does become a law—that some one of these men will approach an official of one of the great railroad lines which are receiving large compensation for postal-car service, and will say to him, "Are you aware that there is a provision in the Post-Office appropriation act by which your mail-car compensation can be increased in the discretion of the Postmaster-General?" The railroad official will doubtless say, "I am not aware of it." He will then be informed by the person who approaches him that such is the case; that authority has been given to grant increased compensation for postal-car service. If the railway official says that he does not intend to apply for increased compensation, that he is satisfied with the sum he receives, he will then be informed by the gentleman who waits upon him that the law not only authorizes an increase of compensation, but it authorizes a reduction of compensation, that there is such an authorization contained in the act, and that there is a special injunction given to the Postmaster-General to reduce the compensation. The intimation will be given that it will be necessary for the railroad corporation to give some attention to this subject, otherwise there will be a reduced compensation paid in the particular instance to the particular railroad company for its postal-car service.

I very much fear that in a case such as I suppose there will be an intimation that the person who approaches the railway official has it in his power to procure the Postmaster-General either to increase the compensation if the railroad wants it increased or to procure a reduction of the compensation in case the individual chooses to request a reduction. In other words, upon that amendment as it stands to-day in the bill there will be organized a system of levying upon the railroad corporations of this country by persons who claim that they have influence with the Postmaster-General and the Administration for that purpose.

I have the highest respect for the present Postmaster-General. I do not know whether the present Postmaster-General is to remain; I have heard rumors lately that he talks of resigning, and we know not who the Postmaster-General for the next two years will be. Even if our present upright and able Postmaster-General remains in office it is not right to subject him to be surrounded by the class of persons whom I have described and to the importunities of these men who want to make money out of the railroad companies and who will go to him either to ask him on the one hand to increase the postal-car pay to a particular railroad because they are already employed by the railroad or to reduce the compensation given to a particular railroad because they are not employed by the railroad company.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to say that under the amendment proposed by the committee the Postmaster-General can increase the pay of certain railroads and decrease the compensation of certain other railroads for doing a similar service?

Mr. CHANDLER. Beyond all question.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any justification for such action on the part of the committee?

Mr. CHANDLER. When a particular sum of money is appropriated, in this case $3,205,000 for postal-car services, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any provision of existing law in conflict therewith to the contrary notwithstanding, the Senator from Rhode Island knows very well, and he knew when he asked the question, that that public official can give to one railroad just what pay he chooses for postal-car service and he can give to another railroad just half of that sum for the same service. In other words, he can prescribe discriminating rules. He can exercise an arbitrary power. He can select his favorites and give them a hundred dollars, and he can select those railroad companies which he dislikes and give them $50 for the same service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. With great pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is it not true, and does the Senator not know it is true, that under the act of March 3, 1873, the Postmaster-General now has that discretion absolutely, and for twenty-two years has had it, up to the maximum rates prescribed in that sliding scale?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; he has had the discretion, but he has pursued it under a regularly established system of postal-car service. If the Postmaster-General has had this power all the time it is mysterious to me that the two Senators who are now advocating the amendment should want to give it to him over again.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator from New Hampshire, with his permission, and say that the amendment which I have submitted and which he will find printed in the RECORD this morning does not repeal any law now in existence.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does in effect but not in terms.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I may be permitted, I assert that it neither in terms nor in effect repeals any law now in existence. It does not touch in any wise the sliding scale of compensation contained in the act of 1873, nor does it enlarge the discretion of the Postmaster-General in any wise. The only thing it does is to say that the Postmaster-General shall not spend any portion of the $3,205,000 for the purchase or building of any postal cars, and that he shall make a reduction of not less than 10 per cent upon existing rates of compensation. That amendment leaves but one issue before the Senate, and that is whether the present rates of compensation to railroads for postal-car service shall be reduced not less than 10 per cent or left as they are at present. That is the only question here.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kentucky very properly interrupted me to argue as to the effect of his amendment, which amendment I have not yet reached. I am dealing with the suspicious amendment as it stood until the Senator said he would offer his amendment. We have not yet reached his amendment. When I say a "suspicious amendment" I do not mean an amendment that is suspicious so far as any members of the Appropriations Committee are concerned. I do not think they fully comprehend the scope and purpose of the amendment and the use that could be made of it as they propose it, any more than I think they comprehend the use that can be made of the amendment after it shall have been amended as proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, if it shall be so amended. But I say when an amendment comes in here which is liable to be used in the way I have already described, it is an amendment which ought to be viewed with suspicion and ought to be left out of an appropriation bill. It should be taken up at some other time, in some other way, and put upon a bill for the express purpose of accomplishing the result which is sought, and not be put incidentally upon the Post-Office appropriation bill, as is now proposed.

There is the danger in reference to this matter as it stands. The Postmaster-General already has a certain power. He is to have added power by the amendment as originally proposed either to give increased compensation for postal service or to diminish it. There are people in this country, coming from their offices in Washington or Buffalo or New York, who intend the moment the bill becomes a law to go to the Postmaster-General and put him in motion for the purpose of squeezing for their benefit the railroad corporations of the country.

That is my belief. I do not believe the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] contemplates anything of the kind; I do not believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] contemplates anything of the kind, and yet that in my belief is the very purpose for which so many people who are not members of the Senate of the United States or of the other branch of Congress desire the passage of the amendment. If it had been the object to draw an amendment for the purpose of putting the railroads of the country on the anxious seat, of putting all the railroads of the country in a position where every informer and every mischief-maker in the country could get after them and tell them that he would get their mail pay increased if they would employ him, or he would get their postal-car pay reduced if they would not employ him, a more appropriate amendment for that purpose could not have been devised.

There are other purposes for which money is sometimes needed. Great political committees sometimes seek for money, and in saying this I allude to both parties alike. In times of high political excitement, when such political canvasses are pending as we have in this country, both political parties seek to get money from all available sources, and they like to get it in large sums rather than in small sums. If they can find corporations which will give them money in large sums they prefer to get it from the large corporations rather than from small donations, popular subscriptions, as we may call them, from the great masses of the political party which needs the contribution.

If the amendment had passed as originally proposed I conceive there would be great danger that for the purpose of accumulating political funds in a political canvass some political committee might be tempted to approach the railroad companies of the country and call their attention to this process of squeezing which had been put upon an appropriation act, with the suggestion that if they would make large contributions for political purposes their mail-service pay might be increased, while if they failed to make those contributions there would be great reason to fear that their mail compensation might be reduced.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from New Hampshire has referred several times to the original proposition of the committee. I beg to call his attention to the fact that the new scheme of the committee does not in effect change the proposition as it was originally presented.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Rhode Island will be patient I will come to that question.

Far be it from me to say that any political purpose of this kind is intended in the framing of the amendment. I do not think there has been any such intention in framing the amendment, but I do say that all those results are liable to flow from the adoption of the amendment. I say that it is not wise to subject the Postmaster-General, whether he be the present upright and faithful officer or some new Postmaster-General who may be appointed within the next two years, to the very great temptation with which he will be surrounded in connection with this clause, if it shall become a law. I do not think it is wise to subject the Democratic national committee to the temptation to engage in the raising of funds from the railroads of the country by putting in operation the injunction of this clause, as it was proposed in the Senate up to yesterday when the motion was made to amend it.

Mr. President, if the party to which I belong controlled the present Administration, on the eve of a Presidential election I should not be willing to have this great power of the Postmaster-General invoked in this way. I should not be willing to put into an appropriation bill which contained the usual appropriations for the railway postal-car service, the money to be disbursed in accordance with a well-defined system and practice, a clause which the Postmaster-General can not read otherwise than as an injunction to him to reopen this whole question and to promise to railroad companies he chooses to favor additional compensation and to threaten railroad companies he does not happen to like with a reduction and punishment in pursuance of this extraordinary clause in the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am always glad to be interrupted by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will permit me to say so, ought to modify his statement. As I understand him (and I confess that we do not hear on this side of the Chamber every word he says, there being so much confusion) he states now in effect that the Committee on Appropriations have reported an amendment which will open the door and enable political parties or their agents to use the Postmaster-General for the purpose of raising political funds.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I say it subjects him to the temptation to do it.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he does not know it to be a fact that under the law as it stands now, the act passed in 1873, the Postmaster-General has absolute discretion, and he may be subjected, if it were possible to subject the Postmaster-General, to the same influences under that act which he would be subjected to under this amendment if agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think so; and I do not understand why this provision was put into the bill. I have not yet discovered the reason why it was inserted. I am trying to find out the reason. But I do say that if it was perfectly needless to put it in because the Postmaster-General has the same power to-day to reduce the compensation that he will have under any law which it is now proposed to pass, I can not understand why it is put in, unless it is because the present Postmaster-General is unwilling to be used for any improper purpose, and therefore is to be pushed on by this extraordinary provision in the appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I will tell the Senator from New Hampshire why it is put in. This provision fixing the maximum of compensation for the use of postal cars was incorporated in an appropriation bill in 1873. There have been Republican Administrations and Democratic so-called Administrations that have construed that law to mean that the maximum fixed by the law should be the minimum, and that is the rule of the Department. It was made so by a Republican Postmaster-General. It was followed (as the rules of the Departments have been always or nearly always by the succeeding heads) by the former Postmaster-General, now the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], and by the present Administration. Now, we sought to change it and put the responsibility upon the Postmaster-General of reducing the compensation by having no maximum fixed; but afterwards, to meet the objections made on the other side, and with a view of saving to the people of the country $300,000 per annum, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky who is in charge of the bill offered to make the limit of reduction 10 per cent.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President, he did not offer to make the limit of reduction 10 per cent. He proposed to enact that the railroads shall be squeezed 10 per cent and as much more as the Postmaster-General chooses to squeeze them.

Mr. GORMAN. Very good; that does not change the present law. That is not increasing the power of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kentucky proposes to limit the reduction, but it is not a limitation. The Senator from Kentucky proposes that the Postmaster-General shall be commanded to reduce not less than 10 per cent. He may reduce the other 90 if he chooses. That is the way I understand the proposed amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire is perfectly well aware that the act we propose to repeal was simply a provision on an appropriation bill, and the committee want merely to—

Mr. CHANDLER. I am making no accusation against either the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Maryland. I have the profoundest respect for them. But I say they do not seem to realize what bad men there are in the world, not only in their own party, but in the Republican party, not only in Washington, but, as I said, in Buffalo and New York; and while the Senators are pursuing the even tenor of their way as legislators and doing what they unquestionably believe to be in the interest of economy, the other people of whom I have spoken are swarming around here, waiting for this bill to become a law in order that they may go to the railroad corporations of the country and say, "Now, under the clause as it stands, we will get your pay raised if you will employ us; we will have it reduced if you do not employ us." Now, under the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, if that is adopted, while they can not say that they will get the pay raised if they are employed they can say that they will get it reduced if they are not employed.

In other words, if I may be allowed to state the case exactly as I look at it, the amendment as it was originally proposed was adapted to allow a lifting of pay or a squeezing of the railroads, whichever might be found best adapted to the purposes of the class of men whom I have described. The amendment was a lifter and a squeezer as it originally came in here. Now, the Senator from Kentucky moves to amend it by depriving it of its faculty as a lifter, but it still remains a squeezer.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire certainly understands that the object of the amendment is to prevent the people of the country from being squeezed by the railroads and to save three or four hundred thousand dollars of the money of the people.

Mr. CHANDLER. When I found the Senator from Kentucky laboring a little with the weight of this amendment, and the Senator from Maryland coming to his assistance to see whether it could not be got through either as it was or with suitable amendments, I was inclined to welcome the Senator from Maryland to the floor as being at last engaged in a genuine effort of economy and reform. But, Mr. President, timeo Danaos. I scrutinize with a great deal of care the measures of economy and reform which the Senator from Maryland proposes, to see whether there may not be concealed in them something which he did not intend should be there, but which wicked men elsewhere may use for the purpose of defrauding the Treasury of the United States. According to Senators every desire to carry out economy, giving implicit belief to their declarations that their only object is to reduce the postal-car service pay, I have ventured to call their attention to the fact that what they propose may be used for an improper purpose by designing men to whom they have no wish to give countenance.

The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, to which I now come, does not obviate the objection which I have made to the amendment of the committee. It does indeed provide that there shall be a reduction, and impliedly, I am bound to believe that there will be no attempt made to increase the post-office car service under the bill if it shall become a law as it is proposed to be amended. But even then there is the same objection to the amendment which I have endeavored to point out to the Senate. The law as it will read if the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is adopted will arbitrarily strike off 10 per cent of the existing pay for the postal-car service. That has been done, 10 per cent once; another time 5 per cent; and now the Senator from Kentucky proposes an arbitrary reduction of 10 per cent more. I know not under what circumstances the prior reductions were made. I am bound to assume that there was a careful, judicious, and prudent investigation made, and that the conclusion was reached by Congress deliberately that the maximum rate of pay ought to be reduced, as Congress enacted that it should be.

But here and now there has been no such investigation. There are no data upon which to say that there shall be a reduction of at least 10 per cent. The proposition is objectionable in that it invites a crowding of the railroad companies by designing men, who will go to them and say, "You see what we have done. We have got the compensation reduced 10 per cent already, and it is liable to be reduced either by the present Postmaster-General or by some other Postmaster-General still lower; and you must give us employment, you must satisfy us, or these reductions will be made."

Mr. President, I am very unwilling to see the Senate set in motion this machine. I am unwilling to see the Postmaster-General enjoined in the way, and after this fashion to pursue the railroads of the country as it is proposed that he shall pursue them. I have sincere and honest fears that this amendment, however it shall be finally framed, to whatever shape it may be finally brought, either by the motions of the members of the committee or by the Senate of the United States, will be used for improper and illegitimate purposes; and that either claim agents, or political strikers, or members of political committees will take advantage of this clause and, under the special circumstances and with the specific machinery provided for that purpose in this bill, squeeze the railroads of the country in a way in which they ought not to be squeezed.

I repeat that this amendment is entirely unnecessary. I can not believe that the Postmaster-General is not willing to do his whole duty under the law as it now stands. I can not understand why any Postmaster-General should pay any more than his judgment tells him he ought to pay for carrying the mails of the United States. I scout the idea that in our public life and in our governmental life of to-day there is any such principle as that when an officer of a Department is authorized to accomplish a certain result at a maximum of cost he feels under obligation to pay the maximum in every case and has not the courage or the public integrity to see to it that the public service is carried on at an economical rate of compensation.

Mr. President, I do not believe that that is a principle. I am bound to believe that all this time the maximum rates have been paid because the successive Postmasters-General have believed that those maximum rates ought to be paid. I see now in the Senate a distinguished Senator who was for four years Postmaster-General. I do not believe that he will admit upon this floor that he was bound to pay the maximum rate for the postal-car service when it was perfectly clear upon the statute of the United States that he was to pay such sum that he thought ought to be paid, not exceeding a certain sum. I do not believe when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] comes to speak upon this amendment that he will for a moment endeavor to persuade the Senate to believe that he had not the moral courage to reduce the postal-car pay if he honestly thought, as a public servant in the Post-Office Department, that it ought to be reduced.

Mr. President, the existing law is ample for the protection of the Government. The existing provision of law is ample for the promotion of economy. The existing law is ample for the reduction of these postal-car rates if the Postmaster-General, who is employed by the Government for the purpose of conducting the affairs of the Post-Office Department economically, chooses to put into effect a reduction. When Senators come in here, first with a proposition that the Postmaster-General shall have the right to increase or diminish the statutory rates according to his own discretion, notwithstanding the provisions of any existing law, and then, when they modify it so as to arbitrarily provide for a statutory reduction of 10 per cent, and just as much of an additional reduction as the Postmaster-General may choose to inflict upon corporations he does not like, or who do not happen to meet with his favor, I am led most earnestly to say that that kind of legislation, so unusual in its character, so radical in its effect, and so entirely unnecessary for the purpose which the Senators say they want to accomplish, ought to be left off of this appropriation bill and brought here in separate and independent legislation, if Senators think they can justify it to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. VILAS addressed the Senate. After having spoken some time—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4600) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask consent of the Senate that the unfinished business just stated from the desk may, without prejudice, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate continue the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[Mr. VILAS resumed and concluded his speech. See Appendix.]

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I sympathize very fully with the remarks that fell from the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] in favor of economy. There is no one in the Senate Chamber who will go further than I in the proper economic administration of this Government, but I am not in favor, without investigation, of singling out a certain class of people to visit our economy upon. The Senator from Maryland by his amendment proposes, without an investigation, without a report from the Postmaster-General or anybody else, to reduce the compensation paid to railways for transporting the mail 10 per cent. It may be that the railroads get too much; it may be that they do not get too much; but certain it is that the railway companies get no more than is provided for in the contract between the Postmaster-General and the railroad companies.

Mr. PLATT. How long does the contract last?

Mr. HUNTON. The contract lasts, I think, two years.

Now, Mr. President, the Postmaster-General is authorized by the present law to contract with the railroad companies at any price that he pleases provided he does not exceed a certain maximum. The whole power of the legislative department of the Government is now vested in the Postmaster-General so far as making contracts with the railroad companies for transporting the mails is concerned. The Postmaster-General has made these contracts with the railroad companies. We are to presume that he has made the best contract he could make for the Government.

It is to be presumed that the Postmaster-General believes that the contracts with the railroad companies are fair between the Government and the railroad companies, because, as we have learned in this debate and from the history of the case, the Postmaster-General has not complained in any of his reports to the Congress of the United States that he is paying too much for the transportation of the mails. He could not complain, because if he did he would complain of his own wrong, for he has the power under the law as it stands now to reduce that compensation.

So it seems to me the Postmaster-General is now clothed with all the power of the legislative department of the Government to reduce the compensation of railroad companies if they charge too much and to elevate them not beyond the maximum price in case he does not give them enough. And we are asked to go into this question and arbitrarily reduce the compensation of railroads 10 per cent without an investigation as to whether they are charging too much to the Government or whether they are charging too little.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin said that the Postmaster-General appeared before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. In the first place, I do not think that is the committee to investigate this question. If anything was required on the part of the Postmaster-General the matter should have been referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and let that committee, which is the appropriate committee, make the investigation. But the Postmaster-General has not said a word to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

I am a member of that committee, and not one line, not one word have we heard, so far as I know, from the Postmaster-General upon the subject of contracts with railroad companies for carrying the mails. So we are to enter upon this discussion and conduct our legislation on the idea that the Postmaster-General, who is now clothed with all the powers of the legislative department of the Government upon this question, is satisfied with the law as it stands.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin says that the Postmaster-General did appear before the Committee on Appropriations, or a subcommittee of that committee. Now, what did he appear for? What did he ask at the hands of that subcommittee? Nobody here knows. We know that the Committee on Appropriations changed the provisions of the bill as it passed the House, which was the regular routine appropriation for many years to carry the mail in these postal cars, and that committee reported an amendment to that provision by which the Postmaster-General was clothed with all the power to do as he pleased in regard to spending the appropriation; and a whole half page of sections in the Revised Statutes are repealed that he might be unlimited in his power in the spending of that money.

Mr. President, I have as much confidence in the integrity and honor of the Postmaster-General as any gentleman on this floor. I believe he is a man of high integrity, and I believe he is a good man in every particular; but I would not clothe a human being with such power as the amendment of the Senate committee proposes to clothe the Postmaster-General with. I do not believe in it, sir.

So far as the Postmaster-General appeared before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, we have reason to believe that his only object was to get that amendment which the Committee on Appropriations reported in the bill. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky who has charge of the bill, and who I presume was chairman of the subcommittee that reported it to the full committee, has gone back upon that amendment. If anything was asked by the Postmaster-General it was that amendment; but the Senator from Kentucky has asked that an amendment to the amendment shall be adopted by which no part of the fund named in the item of the bill shall be devoted to the purchase of postal railway cars. So we have a right to believe that the Appropriations Committee has not made the investigation necessary for that committee to enter upon this question of reform that has been debated so long in the Senate.

But the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin says that he is not satisfied with the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, and he proposes to introduce an amendment directing the Postmaster-General to buy all the postal cars that are needed to carry the mails.

Mr. President, this shows to my mind that this question has not been investigated. We are asked to enter upon a new line of reformation by legislation upon this appropriation bill which has not been investigated by any committee of the Senate charged with such investigation.

I frankly say to my friend the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that he mentioned the matter to the committee, but there was nothing said except what he stated as his view of the case, and there was never any investigation as to whether these postal cars should be purchased by the Government or owned by the railroad companies, and I submit that the Senate ought not to enter upon this line of reform unless there has been an investigation which will show to the Senate and to the country that the acquisition of those cars would be an advantage to the Government and would not specifically hurt the railroad companies.

Mr. President, I for one am not willing to see the Government of the United States enter into a partnership with the railroad companies in transporting the mails. I do not believe in the policy of the Government owning the cars in which the mails of the United States are transported. I do not think it would be as well done as if left entirely to the railroad companies.

In the next place, grave difficulties, it seems to me, would arise if this Government partnership was entered into. Take a Government car which is transporting the mails along one of these great railway routes and an accident happens to that car, and postal railway clerks are killed.

Who is responsible for that? If the car was defective the railroad company would not be; and yet you can not sue the Government, because the Government can not be sued in tort. Therefore if this provision, so earnestly and ably advocated by the Senator from Wisconsin, were adopted, if an accident happened by which postal clerks were killed by the negligence of the Government in furnishing a poor car in which to transport them, their heirs would be absolutely remediless, and no compensation for the negligence of the Government could be obtained. I might cite a great many instances of the inconvenience and hardship and wrong that would grow out of this Government partnership with the railroad companies in transporting the mails in its own cars.

I for one believe that the present system is the right system, and I believe that the law as it now stands affords sufficient protection to the Government against extortion on the part of the railroad companies; and that is all we ought to ask. We should not ask the railroad companies to carry the mails at a dollar less than it is worth to carry them, and we must take it for granted that the Postmaster-General has not in his contracts with the railroad companies agreed to pay them a dollar more than the transportation is worth.

Mr. President, the law as it now stands authorizes the Postmaster-General to contract with the railroad companies at any price he pleases, provided he does not exceed a certain limit fixed in the statute. He has a right to come down as far as he pleases, but not a right to go up beyond a certain point. It is said that this maximum rate of compensation is the rate always agreed upon between the railroad companies and the Postmaster-General. Why is that so? It can not be because the Postmaster-General can not force the railroads to come down if they charge too much, because if he can not force them to lower their rates I should like to know how a law of Congress could force them to do so; because the Postmaster-General now under the present law has all the power which the two Houses of Congress can exert over these railroad companies.

He can say to the railroad companies at any hour or minute he pleases, "Unless you will carry the mail over your line for a certain sum, you shall not carry it at all. I will give you so much a mile. If you do not take that you shall not carry the mail in those postal cars." That is all we can say; because I presume there is no reformer upon the floor of the Senate who will maintain that the two Houses of Congress can force a railroad company to accept any terms which they impose upon them in carrying postal cars. If that be true—and I take it for granted it will not be denied—the Postmaster-General has to-day the very same power to say to these companies, "Unless you carry the mail matter at a certain price, you shall not carry it at all."

Suppose the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] were adopted, and there was 10 per cent deduction in the compensation paid for carrying the mails, and the railroad companies of the country were to say in reply to that, "We can not afford to carry the mails at the price offered, 10 per cent off of what we have been getting," and at one single time the railroad companies of the country were to refuse to carry the mails, I ask what would be the condition of the country? Is there a Senator upon this floor who would put his constituents in the condition of getting no mail by railway, and trust to the old-time mode of transporting the mail on horseback or in stages?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose the railroad companies were all to refuse to take the mails at the present rates, then what?

Mr. HUNTON. They have a perfect right to refuse. I suppose the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask what would be the result?

Mr. HUNTON. But the railroad companies, I say in answer to my friend from Mississippi, are organized and conducted to carry freights of all descriptions, and the more freight they can get at fair prices the better they are pleased, the more the railroad companies will flourish and be enabled to carry out their contracts. So we can not force the railroad companies to carry the mails, and therefore we must give them a compensation which will induce them as a matter of business to carry the mails for the Government in the postal cars.

Mr. BATE. Does the Senator think the railroad companies have a perfect right to dictate the terms to the Government on which they will carry the mails?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. BATE. Are they not chartered as public carriers, and are they not amenable to the law of public carriers, and is it not their duty to carry the mails as such or forfeit their charters if they refuse to do so on reasonable terms?

Mr. HUNTON. I do not mean that the railroad companies can dictate to the Government terms for carrying the mails, nor do I mean to admit that the Government can dictate to the railroad companies that they shall carry the mails at a price which does not pay them the expenditure of carrying the mails. Railway companies are corporations incorporated by the different States through which they pass, and, although they are corporations, they are persons in the eye of the law, and as such entitled to all the rights and privileges of any natural person. Therefore I maintain that while a railroad company can not dictate to the Government, the Government can not dictate to a railroad company. It is a matter of bargain, of contract, between the Government and the railroad company by which the Government pays to the railroad company and the railroad company receives from the Government a sum of money sufficient to pay it for the services which it renders the Government.

Mr. BATE. If they differ about that how are you going to settle it otherwise than by legislation of Congress? We can fix upon a lower rate, 10 per cent if necessary.

Mr. HUNTON. That question of difference between the railroad companies and the Government must be settled like every other question of difference between two persons. The Government is an artificial person on the one side and the railroad company is an artificial person on the other. Those two persons meet to make a contract, and if they do not make a contract there is no human being who can force them to make it.

Mr. BATE. I think the courts have decided that railroad companies are liable and must carry the mail or forfeit their charters. They must, as common carriers, perform their duty to the public. I think this matter can be regulated in the same way that traffic is regulated under the interstate-commerce law. The railroads are not above that law, and we can regulate the rates for carrying the mail as well as the rates for carrying freight.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no trouble about the railway companies carrying the mail. They are not only glad, but anxious to do it. But they want to carry the mail at a price which will give them fair compensation for carrying it. While they may be public carriers, the Government has no right to say that they shall carry the mail at a certain price, because the statute which was proposed to be repealed by the amendment as first introduced by the committee makes provision in case the Government and the railroad companies can not agree upon the price of carrying the mails in the postal-railway cars.

Mr. President, I am a reformer to a certain extent, but I am not a reformer to the extent that I am going into a question of reform on a law which has been in existence since 1873, unless there is evidence before me to show that we are about inaugurating a system better than that which is sought to be repealed. The only evidence before the Senate in this matter is that the Post-Office Department is satisfied with the present law. It has asked no change; it has not complained of the amount paid to the railroad companies, and therefore we, a Senate, a deliberative body composed of 83 members, are not capable, without a committee of investigation or a report from the Postmaster-General, to say what would be a better system than that which we are about to repeal.

For these reasons I am opposed to the amendments offered all around, and I trust that the old law, which has worked to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department and about which we have heard from the Postmaster-General no complaint, will be allowed to remain the law of the land until the Postmaster-General comes before a committee of the Senate and explains the bad working of the present system and what would be a better one.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, do I understand the Chair has submitted the point of order to the Senate?

Mr. ALDRICH. What point of order?

Mr. GORMAN. On the pending amendment. Do I understand the Chair has submitted the point of order to the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was about submitting the point of order to the Senate when the Senator took the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. ALDRICH. On what?

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. On the ground that it was general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts raised the point of order against the proposed amendment that it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment, and I trust the Chair will decide the point of order and let us come to a direct vote upon the amendment itself. Before the Chair makes that decision, however, I only desire to say, in answer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] and other Senators who have made some comments on the amendment, that the Committee on Appropriations, following the precedent which has been universal, have reported an amendment to the pending bill such as has been always accepted by the Senate.

Congress has in nearly every case—not in all cases—in dealing with the Post-Office Department either increased the compensation or restricted the compensation for the service by provisions inserted in appropriation bills, and the very act which we propose to modify, the act of 1873, is simply a provision in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. To which amendment is the Senator addressing himself?

Mr. GORMAN. I am addressing myself to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which opens the whole question, the amendment restricting the expenditure of an appropriation. Senators have objected to the amendment in the form in which it comes from the committee because it gives the Postmaster-General too much power. That may be. That criticism, as I said yesterday, has great force in it. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] who has charge of the bill that to prevent the Postmaster-General having so much power in this matter we should require him to make a 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. CULLOM. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator if he can remember exactly what the Postmaster-General stated with reference to the amount of reductions he thought ought to be made in the compensation for carrying the mails?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]—and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] will permit me to answer his question in that way—made a suggestion that the Committee on Appropriations had reported this provision without having investigated the question. I beg to say to that Senator and to the Senate that there is no provision which has been reported from the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of reducing expenditures which has not been considered carefully, and considered in consultation with the head of the Post-Office Department.

The Postmaster-General, as the Senator from Illinois knows perfectly well, came to the Committee on Appropriations to supplement what he had said in his report which is before every Senator, and to urge a reduction in the expenses of the Post-Office Department. The present Postmaster-General has not dealt with this question with the courage and fairness with which, in my judgment, he ought to have dealt with it. He has avoided in his public statements, it is true, the main question which is up for the discussion of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I wanted to ascertain, and also if the Senator remembers, as I was not present, exactly what the Postmaster-General did say verbally in the presence of the subcommittee in reference to reductions and what amount of reductions should be made.

Mr. GORMAN. The Postmaster-General, in his report and in his statements before the Committee on Appropriations, was in favor of increasing the postage upon second-class mail matter, or to exclude from postal facilities certain prints or books, and so on, or else charge on them an increased rate of postage, and also to take from the fast-mail service on the ocean and elsewhere a considerable amount. Finding that that was impracticable in the framing of the bill in another body which sent it here, he came to us and said that in this matter we could make a decided reduction, to be made in the very item which is now under discussion, for the reason that the act of 1873 has fixed a compensation for the use of postal cars, which may have been at that time proper and right, but in view of the decreased cost of transportation and the decreased charges made by the railroad companies and everybody else in the last twenty years, the compensation is excessive, and that we could take from it a certain amount.

We asked him why, under the act of 1873, which fixed the maximum compensation, he had not, as Postmaster-General, reduced that amount, and his answer was a perfect one, that for twenty years the Post-Office Department and all the Postmasters-General who had filled the office in that time had construed that provision in the act of 1873 as being the minimum and not the maximum; that it had been so accepted by the public and by every Postmaster-General, and that he could not get away from it; but that if Congress would give him the power to use his discretion by such a provision as we have reported, then he would force a proper reduction, not an excessive one.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment reads:

Provided, That a reduction of not less than 10 per cent shall be made upon the present rates of compensation.

Did the Postmaster-General state that there could be safely and reasonably a reduction of 10 per cent made upon the cost of transportation in those postal cars?

Mr. GORMAN. I will not attempt to state from memory that the Postmaster-General fixed the exact amount at 10 per cent, but the statement made by him and the figures furnished convinced me as a member of that committee that we might make that reduction 15 or 20 per cent, and yet give to the railroad companies a compensation for this service greater than they receive from anybody else in the Union.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator unless it is agreeable to him—

Mr. GORMAN. It is entirely agreeable.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to know whether, in the judgment of the Senator himself, it would not be more like proper legislation for the Senate to put an amendment on this bill providing that the Postmaster-General shall investigate the whole question between now and the next Congress and report to the next Congress the testimony and the reasons why a reduction, if any, should be made?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], in the very exhaustive speech which he has made to-day, has shown to the Senate how much investigation we have had. Such an investigation has been made by the Postmaster-General, by committees of Congress, by a commission; and yet it all resolves itself into the one statement I made yesterday, which, in effect, was that the power of the railroad companies is so great that there has not been a Postmaster-General since 1873, under the act as it is now framed fixing the maximum rate of compensation, which has been construed to be the minimum, who has had the courage or the power to make the reduction.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator another question, and then I shall not trouble him further?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator, in the light of what I think has been his record heretofore, whether he believes that it is good policy on the part of the legislative department of the Government to place a vast sum of money, such as is proposed to be appropriated by this provision, entirely within the control and disposition of the Postmaster-General or any other public officer? I say this with the fullest confidence myself in the integrity and capacity of the present Postmaster-General.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I am, as a rule, as much averse to placing a large amount of money in the hands of any Cabinet officer, to be expended at his discretion, as is the Senator from Illinois or any other Senator. I think it is a bad rule, but in the conduct of the affairs of the Post-Office Department of necessity there must be placed in the control of the Postmaster-General large amounts of money. The Postmaster-General in the case which we now have under consideration under the act of 1873 was given the right to use a large amount of money, and my belief is that it was the intention of Congress to place the whole amount then appropriated, not quite $3,000,000 when the appropriation was first made, but it has since grown until now the amount of $3,000,000 is placed in the hands of the Postmaster-General to be expended in his discretion.

I do not believe the provision we have reported from the Committee on Appropriations extends his authority one iota, but I believe, in the light of this discussion, with the knowledge the Postmaster-General has of the affairs of the Department, that he will redeem his specific declaration to the Committee on Appropriations, that if he be relieved of the custom which has prevailed, of the rule which has been adopted, and of the decisions of his predecessors, he would use this power to save the people of this country four or five hundred thousand dollars per annum without impairing the service a particle.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will excuse me again.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. The Postmaster-General is governed by this law, or he ought to be:

The Postmaster-General shall request all railroad companies transporting the mails to furnish, under seal, such data relating to the operating, receipts, and expenditures of such roads as may, in his judgment, be deemed necessary to enable him to ascertain the cost of mail transportation and the proper compensation to be paid for the same.

Does the Senator know whether the Postmaster-General has complied with that statute? If he has, his opinion as to what might have been possible might be of some value, but otherwise I do not see how it would be.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Chair will decide the question of order, and let the Senate come to a direct vote on the amendment, which I have no doubt is perfectly well understood now from the discussion which has been had. The only question is, whether there shall be an opportunity to reduce this compensation to some fair extent, or whether we shall be compelled to pay the exorbitant rates we are now paying.

I ask the decision of the Chair on the question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, this discussion discloses a very singular condition of affairs. Neither the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who was Postmaster-General during the previous Administration of the present distinguished Chief Executive, nor any of his successors in office, nor any of the gentlemen who have served on the Post-Office Committees of the Senate or the House of Representatives, nor any of the Senators who have served on the Appropriations Committees of the Senate have heretofore discovered the necessity of changing our postal laws in the direction of the pending amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin seems suddenly to have awakened to the idea that some radical change must be made at once.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that the awakening I experienced was eight years ago.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt that awakening took place eight years ago, but the Senator has been silent, so far as I know, from that day to this as to the real interests of the Government in this matter. It is very singular, if the Government has been expending millions upon millions of dollars improperly all these years, when the law gives, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] himself admits, ample discretionary power to the Postmaster-General, that all these gentlemen have not been able to discover heretofore that there was anything wrong either in the law or in the manner of its administration.

Why is this? Why do they wait until the expiring hours of this Congress, when but fifteen working days remain of this session, to suggest a change of important legislation in this summary method through an appropriation bill? I should be glad if some Senator on the other side of the Chamber would answer that question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer, and tell the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be very glad to hear the answer.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The only change in the world proposed is a reduction of not less than 10 per cent upon existing rates, and no Senator on this floor has yet undertaken to say that those rates are not too high.

Mr. ALDRICH. If we judge by the evidence submitted by the Senator from Kentucky, no Senator can say whether they are too high or too low.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I undertake to say that the Committee on Appropriations thought the rates were too high; the Postmaster-General thought they were too high, and nobody has ever yet been found unbarred who said they were not too high.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Postmaster-General thinks they are too high, why does he not reduce them? If the Committee on Appropriations think they are too high, why do they increase the appropriation in this bill for this item $150,000 above that contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because that service is extending every day and more money will be needed every year, even though you reduce the rates.

Mr. ALDRICH. The appropriation made in the Post-Office appropriation bill of one year ago contained no provision of this kind, and the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Maryland, and the Senator from Kentucky occupied the same positions in relation to the public service then that they do now. The appropriation one year ago for this purpose was $3,000,000, without any offensive general legislation connected with it. It is now proposed to increase the appropriation to $3,250,000—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Three million two hundred and five thousand dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well, $3,205,000; and to connect with that a provision which practically repeals all legislation upon this subject—

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me to finish my sentence—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. And puts it in the power of the Postmaster-General to expend the whole sum at his discretion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Upon the amendment now pending before the Senate for adoption there is no proposition or intimation of any purpose to repeal any law.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment now submitted by the Senator from Kentucky, although it is different in words from that originally submitted by him, is exactly the same in effect.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does it repeal any law?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does repeal laws.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will ask the Senator to read it. It is only three lines long and it is in the RECORD of this morning. Let us see it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I had a copy of it here a moment ago.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it repeals or proposes to repeal any existing law or any portion of a law, then I am unable to comprehend the English language.

Mr. ALDRICH. The language used in the original amendment is as follows:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not what I want read.

Mr. ALDRICH. The one now offered by the Senator reads as follows:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

The words "and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed" are left out, but the force and effect of the language used will be the same. It will repeal all laws in conflict with its provisions pro tanto. There can be no question about that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am afraid the Senator would make the same objection if we were to incorporate in here one of the commandments included in the decalogue, which would have about as much relevancy as has his objection to this amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see, in the statement the Senator has just made, any relevancy to my criticism. I say the language used in both cases would have precisely the same effect.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I flatter myself that the Senator from Rhode Island is the only member of this body who has put such a construction upon the proposed amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think any Senator can put any other construction upon it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All right.

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is any force at all in the language that the Postmaster-General shall have unlimited discretion to spend the money as he pleases it must be that he shall have discretion by a repeal of existing legislation which limits his discretion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He has that discretion now.

Mr. ALDRICH. No, not in all cases. There is a number of provisions in the act of 1873 aside from the question of compensation.

Mr. VILAS. This is a reduction.

Mr. ALDRICH. A reduction of what? Of compensation, yes.

Mr. VILAS. A reduction of 10 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the act of 1873, and acts passed in amendment of that act, contain many other provisions of legislation affecting and limiting the discretion of the Postmaster-General besides the mere question of compensation. Does the Senator from Wisconsin contend that they would not be repealed by this language?

Mr. VILAS. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. They certainly would be repealed if you give the Postmaster-General discretion to spend this money as now proposed.

Mr. VILAS. With the direction that the reduction shall be not less than 10 per cent of what it is now.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the reduction applies only to the rate of compensation and the proviso does not apply to the other legislative provisions of the act of 1873, and other acts affecting the postal-car service. The Senator from Kentucky is now trying to do precisely what he tried to do in the first instance, except that he is doing it now by indirection instead of directly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I never do anything by indirection.

Mr. ALDRICH. That seems to be the effect, from the language used.

I heard the Senator from Kentucky contend the other day with great force and power and at considerable length that an amendment offered to the diplomatic and consular bill which had never received the sanction of any other standing committee than the Committee on Appropriations was not in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN (in his seat). I think so now.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky says sotto voce he thinks so now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; I say it openly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then this amendment is not in order by the Senator's reasoning.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I say it is in order. If consistency is what the Senator from Rhode Island admires, I should like him to spend about one hour, for I know he could not finish in less time, explaining to the Senate how a five-hundred-thousand-dollar appropriation to commence building a Hawaiian cable was in order and the amendment now pending is not in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Because the amendment to build the Hawaiian cable, which was placed on the diplomatic and consular bill, was special legislation and not general legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. It changed no existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; it changed no existing law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But it created a new one.

Mr. ALDRICH. This amendment is not in order as it is general legislation on a general appropriation bill. But if the contention of the Senator from Kentucky is correct, as it originated in the Committee on Appropriations, it is not in order unless it has the approval of a standing committee aside from the Committee on Appropriations, as is not the case here.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] this morning gave notice of a resolution providing for an earlier hour of meeting of the Senate. It is proposed that the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock. The Senator from Kentucky has been desirous that progress shall be made in the consideration of appropriation bills. I will say to both of those Senators that there will be no satisfactory progress in the consideration of these bills to a conclusion until they cease placing amendments of an offensive political character upon them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island let me ask him a question, because I am anxious in the interest of the public service to find out exactly what the Senator means by that statement?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly, I mean—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator let me ask the question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean that he is now uttering a threat, in which he tells us that no progress shall be made in passing the general appropriation bills for the support of the Government so long as any amendments are proposed that are obnoxious to his hypercritical judgment?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, I am not setting up my judgment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean that we shall not have a vote upon this amendment? Because if that be it, I answer the Senator and say that so far as I am concerned, whilst I am in charge of the pending bill I never will withdraw the amendment until it is voted on if the bill stands before this body until the clock marks high noon on the 4th day of March.

Several SENATORS. Good.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I meant to say, and what I repeat, is this. We are within fifteen days of the close of the present session. The members of the Committee on Appropriations know as well as any other members of the Senate that it will take almost all if not the entire time of the Senate to consider and pass the appropriation bills if no attempt is made to place obnoxious general legislation upon them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Without anything in them, I think, if this course is to be kept up.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Committee on Appropriations, or the Senator from Kentucky as their representative, persist in the policy which they seem to have adopted of attempting general legislation in this manner, legislation proposed for political purposes, they will imperil the passage of the appropriation bills, and the Senator from Kentucky is as well aware of this as anyone can be.

Why is it necessary at this stage of the session to try to disarrange the postal-car service? Why this newly discovered zeal upon the part of the Senators on the other side to save a few hundred dollars or a few thousand dollars in this matter, of which they have had knowledge for years and when the remedy is ample without legislation? Does the Senator from Kentucky think that this is a proper time and place, during the consideration of an appropriation bill, to change the laws of the United States in these respects? If he does not think so, why is this amendment here? Why does he persist in it, even to the extent, as he says, of defeating every appropriation bill? And I am surprised that in that statement his course is commended by Senators on the other side.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said I intended to insist upon the right of the Senate to determine and pass upon all amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. Nobody questions that right at all. I understood the Senator to say that if this amendment is not retained in the bill—

Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. GORMAN, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All I protest against is the employment of dilatory tactics to prevent the Senate from rejecting or accepting this and all other amendments. That is all.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky did not allow me to finish my sentence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg pardon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to say that the committee seemed determined to retain these amendments even if their discussion led to a failure of the bill. I did not mean to say the amendment would be retained, as I am certain that when a vote is reached it will not be retained.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, we will see about that when we get to a vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator to say that these amendments would be pressed, and if the Senate saw fit not to accept them, or I should see fit to discuss them within proper limits, that he was quite willing that the appropriation bill should fail.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure there is no person to be found either on this floor or in the gallery who ever did understand me to say any such thing.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, if that is not his purpose, or that of the Senator from Maryland, or the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, to press these and similar amendments to the appropriation bills even if their discussion should force an extra session they should say so at once, as the other course would certainly place us in great danger of an extra session.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We can not be frightened by that.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, I will make a suggestion to the Senator and the Senate, that to-morrow at 2 o'clock we vote on the bill without further discussion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should be very happy to have that agreement reached, or to have any other hour to-morrow fixed for a vote that may suit Senators.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be quite willing to consent to that arrangement, but there are two or three other amendments of this same character coming behind the one pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think there is, except this one.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know how many more amendments the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Maryland may offer before the final vote is reached.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Rhode Island will indicate any time, I shall be glad, by unanimous consent, to fix an hour for a vote on the pending amendments and on the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. So far as I am concerned, I am quite willing to fix any reasonable time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I ask unanimous consent that without further debate, at 3 o'clock to-morrow, a vote may be taken upon all pending amendments and the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Say 4 o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, at 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object, for the reason that it would prevent debate upon the subsequent amendment relative to the Southern fast mail.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us say 5 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. That amendment has not been debated at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to agree that there shall be a vote on the pending amendment at any time to-morrow that may be fixed.

Mr. HALE. Let us agree to vote on the pending amendment or any amendment to it at 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. And then proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. And then, under the five-minute rule, proceed to debate the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will that be satisfactory to the other side?

Mr. HALE. I think so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I am more than glad to ask that that order be entered, that at 3 o'clock to-morrow debate shall cease upon the pending committee amendment and all amendments to it.

Mr. HALE. And that voting shall then begin.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And that voting shall then begin upon the amendments pending to this amendment and on this amendment, and that then under the five-minute rule we shall proceed to consider any other amendments that may be pending to the bill.

Mr. HALE. I think that is fair. I will state that if we had in the Senate more of the five-minute debate and less of the unlimited debate we should get better consideration of the provisions in appropriation bills.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thoroughly agree with that view. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to go this far? I am sure we understand each other up to the point I have stated. Is it to be understood that beginning after the vote shall be taken at 3 o'clock, then going on under the five-minute rule as to all other amendments, we are to reach a vote on the bill to-morrow?

Mr. HALE. I did not say anything about that. I will leave that to the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope it may be agreed to that at 5 o'clock or 6 o'clock—

Mr. HALE. Let us get an agreement as to the pending amendment first. Let the Chair put that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ALLEN. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky will again state his request.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is that at 3 o'clock to-morrow the Senate, without further debate, will come to a vote upon this amendment and all amendments pending thereto.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And that after those votes shall have been taken the Senate will proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. To consider the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To consider the bill and such other amendments. That is the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. That means amendments that may be offered to this amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Any amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. Or to committee amendments pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. One moment. Is it understood that we are to vote at 3 o'clock on this amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the pending amendment and amendments pending to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. And debate upon all other amendments is to proceed under the five-minute rule?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ALLEN. With no agreement as to a vote on the bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, I would add this request: That, beginning after the vote shall have been taken upon the pending amendment and amendments to the amendment at 3 o'clock, we shall then proceed under the five-minute rule to discuss other amendments which may be reached or submitted; and I ask unanimous consent that we shall reach a vote upon the bill before we adjourn to-morrow evening.

Mr. CULLOM. Say at 5 o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. At 5 o'clock, say.

Mr. HALE. On the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, and all pending amendments, not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. VILAS. Dispose of the whole bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me there is no need of fixing a time for adjournment. I for one should be willing to stay here to-morrow until the bill is finished, but I do not like to agree that no possible amendment that may be offered to the bill shall be debated later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. HALE (to Mr. BLACKBURN). Let that go.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not press that.

Mr. BERRY. We are to finish the bill during the day, then, before adjournment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand the order already entered by unanimous consent obligates the Senate to continue to proceed under the five-minute rule of debate until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. That is the first agreement. That has been agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. And we are to finish the bill to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And that is to be done to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is there objection to that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again submit the question.

Mr. HALE. That has been agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But it has not yet been agreed that we shall finish the bill to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. I shall object to a final vote upon the bill to-morrow. I have no objection to fixing 5 o'clock on day after to-morrow for the final vote; but there are important amendments to be considered in connection with this measure and the bill ought not to be concluded to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. BLACKBURN). Let it go then.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Objection is made, and I withdraw the suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to hear the statement of the Senator from Nebraska. Does the Senator from Nebraska object?

Mr. ALLEN. I object to a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the bill to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. Nobody is asking that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have withdrawn that. The order stands then.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is, to dispose of the pending amendment at 3 o'clock to-morrow and thereafter to proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To proceed under the five-minute rule until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PATERSON, N. J.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 27) to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Paterson, N. J.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the amount heretofore fixed as a limit of cost for the public building at Paterson, N. J., to $200,000, which is fixed as the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of the building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4952) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:
"Sec. 2455. It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market and sell for not less than $2.50 per acre any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain less than one quarter section which in his judgment it would be proper to expose to sale after at least thirty days' notice by the land officers of the district in which such lands may be situated: Provided, That lands shall not become so isolated or disconnected until the same have been subject to homestead entry for a period of three years after the surrounding land has been entered, filed upon, or sold by the Government: Provided, That not more than 160 acres shall be sold to any one person."

Mr. BERRY. I move, in line 8, to strike out "$2.50" and insert "$1.25," so as to read "$1.25 per acre."

Mr. HALE. There is not a Senator who can tell from the reading of the bill what the original statute is. It is not recited, and no man can tell unless he has an opportunity to examine it. Therefore I must object to the further consideration of the bill. I ask that the bill go over, so that some of us can look at the statute.

Mr. BERRY. This is a House bill, and it is very easily understood. It simply proposes that where there are isolated tracts of less than 160 acres of land which for three years have been subject to homestead entry and not taken, they may be offered at public sale, and if they fail to sell at public sale that thereafter they may be offered at $1.25 per acre.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the section of the Revised Statutes proposed to be amended may be read.

Mr. HIGGINS. I should like to ask if the bill includes public lands in all the States of the Union where public land is for sale?

Mr. BERRY. It provides that wherever there are isolated tracts of less than 160 acres which have been subject to homestead entry for three years and have not been taken the Secretary of the Interior may offer them at public sale.

Mr. HALE. Wherever the land is?

Mr. BERRY. Wherever it may be.

Mr. HALE. It is a general law?

Mr. BERRY. It is a general law except as to towns. Thereafter it may be sold at not less than $1.25 per acre. The bill was passed by the House of Representatives, and it has been considered and unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

Mr. HIGGINS. What public policy is to be conserved by reducing the price of the land when land is now going up in the West?

Mr. BERRY. I will state what is the public policy. No one will homestead these isolated tracts because of the small quantity. They are lying there doing no good; the timber is being stolen off them all over the United States, and it is better that the Government should have $2.50 or $1.25 or whatever the land may bring than that it should lie there and the timber be taken off by timber thieves. The bill will enable a great many men who have homesteads to add to their farms 40 acres or 80 acres, it may be, by paying the Government this amount of money. It is much better than to have the land lie there and not serve any purpose whatever.

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask the Senator why it is proposed to reduce the price? Why not keep it where it is now and give the power to offer it at public sale?

Mr. BERRY. Simply because it is supposed that at public sale the land will bring as much as it is worth. It may bring $50 an acre, and the Government will get the advantage of it. If there is a failure to sell the land at public sale anybody, if the amendment I offer is adopted, can get the land at $1.25 an acre, which has always been the price.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether anybody is going to compete in a public sale if he can afterwards get the land at $1.25 an acre without competing?

Mr. BERRY. If there are two or three parties who want the land I imagine they will compete at public sale.

Mr. STEWART. Has the Senator any estimate of the amount of the land affected by the bill? Is there any report from the Department?

Mr. BERRY. The Department reported on the bill favorably.

Mr. STEWART. I know.

Mr. BERRY. I do not think there is any estimate as to the amount of land involved.

Mr. STEWART. Did the Department report the amount?

Mr. BERRY. I do not suppose they were called upon to report the amount. They made a favorable report to the House of Representatives on the bill.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HOAR. All right. We will all vote for that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALE. That will displace the unfinished business. Let us have the yeas and nays on the question.

Mr. BERRY. I do not propose to displace the unfinished business. If that will be the effect of the motion I will withdraw it.

Mr. HALE. That will be the effect.

Mr. BERRY. I have no disposition to displace the unfinished business, but I simply notify the Senator from Delaware that it is not fair treatment. Senators on the other side of the Chamber get unanimous consent to pass bills from day to day—

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Mr. BERRY. And when an application is made on this side objection is interposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. The question of order is that on a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill debate is not allowed.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BERRY. I stated that if my motion would have the effect to displace the regular order I would withdraw it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The trouble is the Senator from Arkansas proceeded to scold Senators.

Mr. BERRY. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that I say whatever I think it is proper under the rules of the Senate to say, and I do not propose that he shall interfere with that right.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Arkansas asked the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill which he was very anxious to have acted upon. There was considerable debate upon the bill, and at last there was objection to its further consideration. The Senator from Arkansas then moved to take up the bill. He was informed that it would displace the bankruptcy bill. He then proceeded to say that he was unwilling to press his motion, but he proceeded to scold Senators upon this side of the Chamber for interposing the objection. Now, that was all I said. If the Senator from Arkansas was not scolding I never heard scolding in this Chamber. He is at liberty to scold me or any other Senator whom he chooses to scold if he thinks it does him any particular credit at home or here.

Mr. BERRY. I had nothing to say about the Senator from New Hampshire; and I shall not say now what I was about to say. I have such an opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire that it would not be proper for me to express it on this floor.

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF UNOBTAINED BILLS.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, as has been stated half a dozen times by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and other members of the Committee on Appropriations, the consideration of the great appropriation bills that are now pending in the Senate and to be reported within the next ten days and two weeks will take up the greater part of the session. It will require nearly all the time we have to press them through in the present condition of those bills. But there are on the Calendar an immense number of bills, Senate bills and House bills, which ought to be considered in the meantime, and I suggest to the Senate that we do what is frequently done in a short session, that on Friday from 1 until 2 o'clock, and Saturday from 1 until 2 o'clock, we consider the unobjected bills on the Calendar to be called up.

Mr. HALE. Why not devote the time from the end of the routine morning business until 2 o'clock? That would be better.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest, then, that from the end of the routine morning business until 2 o'clock on those two days the unobjected bills on the Calendar be considered, adopting the rule which has always been adopted, giving each Senator an opportunity to call up a bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the Senator from Maryland make his request for the consideration of such bills after 2 o'clock. There are quite a number of resolutions pending and others are likely to be offered.

Mr. GORMAN. I make the request for the consideration of unobjected bills before 2 o'clock. After 2 o'clock we will be compelled to press the appropriation bills. I know how it is from personal experience. There are one or two local bills on the Calendar affecting my own State which I have not had time to call up and have passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection if it is understood that morning business includes business in the way of resolutions that shall be disposed of.

Mr. GORMAN. As a matter of course, but that the time shall be devoted from 1 o'clock to 2 o'clock to the exclusion of resolutions.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Or earlier.

Mr. GORMAN. Or earlier if we can get through with the routine morning business.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator from Maryland understand by routine morning business?

Mr. GORMAN. The presentation of petitions, reports, bills, and resolutions that come in.

Mr. HOAR. There are some Senators who wish to say something upon the pending resolution as to the financial situation of the country. Does the Senator understand that a resolution presented by the Senator from Rhode Island or any other Senator and going over is a part of the routine business?

Mr. GORMAN. Under the suggestion I make such resolutions will be displaced from 1 until 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator had better not fix any hour.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is only for two mornings.

Mr. GORMAN. It is only for two mornings, Friday and Saturday. The Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Massachusetts know perfectly well that unless we get the Senate bills on the Calendar through this week it will be impossible to get them through elsewhere. It is merely to facilitate business and gratify all Senators in the body that I suggest this arrangement.

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose we take them up Saturday afternoon after 2 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to suggest, with reference to the remark of the Senator from Rhode Island, that nobody would be present. One trouble about considering the Calendar when it is taken up late in the day, as at 6 o'clock, is that there are not a sufficient number of Senators here. It seems to me the Senator from Maryland is right in asking that for one day or two days the Calendar shall be taken up for the consideration of unobjected cases when all Senators are here.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the time from 1 until 3 o'clock on the two days I have indicated shall be devoted to the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make one suggestion to the Senator from Maryland: Here is the bankruptcy bill as the unfinished business. It is a matter which has been in one form or another considered by the people of the country very extensively. Boards of trade, great business meetings, business men of all kinds have memorialized Congress and presented their views, and important bodies of men have come to Washington on that errand year in and year out. Now, the bankruptcy bill before the Senate (I do not wish to enter in the least into the discussion of its merits) is very objectionable, I think I have a fair right to say, to that class of persons who are usually described by the term "the business men of the country." North, South, East, and West, in New Orleans, Mobile, and St. Louis, from Oregon to New York and Boston and Baltimore, there is a great unwillingness to have that bill passed without amendments which can not be discussed and made at the present session. There is no provision in it for bankruptcy itself, as understood in the old times, which means involuntary bankruptcy, protection against wrong.

Now, why is that bill to be kept here as a menace, so that when every Senator on the other side has anything to do he comes up and says, "I want you to consent that everything else you have at heart shall be laid aside; we must not meddle with that measure," as the Senator from Arkansas did just now? Why not let it be laid aside and let us understand it?

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Massachusetts will not press that question now on this matter concerning smaller bills.

Mr. HOAR. I am not going to do so, but I am going to press it at the proper time, which is now.

Mr. GORMAN. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that we must come to a direct vote on that bill, and I trust that will be done within six hours after it comes before the Senate again.

Mr. HOAR. My suggestion is that we can not come to a direct vote on it at the present session.

Mr. GORMAN. We can in some form, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. It is impossible.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator that no bill can stand in the way of the general appropriation bills, and we must reach that a little later on. But I now renew my request that for two days the unobjected bills on the Calendar may be called up, as I have indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TELLER. We do not know what the request is. We have not been able in this part of the Chamber to hear anything that has been said for half an hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Maryland again state the request to which he desires the Senate to accede?

Mr. GORMAN. I will, sir. I ask that on Friday morning and Saturday morning, at 1 o'clock, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of any unobjected bills on the Calendar—

Mr. HALE. In their order.

Mr. GORMAN. No; but so as to give each Senator, as has been the universal rule, an opportunity to call up some one bill, the agreement to apply to every Senator in the body. I make the request for the reason which I have stated, that that is the only time when we can pass a Senate bill with any hope of having it considered elsewhere.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Maryland includes in his request consent that resolutions as well as bills may be called up I shall be content, but if he proposes to exclude—

Mr. GORMAN. It includes unobjected bills and resolutions.

Mr. CALL. That would place a resolution which a great many people in the United States desire to have passed entirely at the mercy of an objector.

Mr. GORMAN. It includes bills and resolutions unobjected to.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will agree that the resolution to which I refer shall be voted on to-morrow morning I will have nothing to say. Otherwise I object to the arrangement proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to understand from the Senator from Florida whether he interposes an objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CALL. I said unless it is agreed that I shall have the privilege of calling up my resolution and having it voted upon without being displaced by the objection of the Senator from Maryland or the Senator from Kentucky I will not consent. If I can have the resolution considered—

Mr. GORMAN. Of course the suggestion I made was that un-objected cases should be taken up; but if the Senator from Florida or any other Senator objects to it, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COKE. Pending that motion I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland withdraw his motion?

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 14, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate February 13, 1895.

MARSHAL.

W. M. Campbell, to be marshal for the district of Minnesota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 13, 1895.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

EXPLANATIONS OF VOTES, ETC.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call yesterday upon the question of annual clerks for members I answered "present," refraining from voting, because I believed I was paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE]. On looking at the RECORD of this morning I find that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] was paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SORG]—whether on this particular question or as a general pair I do not know.

In explanation of my failure to vote and making the announcement I did I merely want to say that on the day before yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. APSLEY] asked me if I would pair on the question of annual clerks with his colleague, Mr. MORSE. I said that I would; and during the roll call on yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. APSLEY] turned to me and asked me whether I considered myself as paired with Mr. MORSE. I replied that I did; and for that reason I did not vote. It now appears that although I supposed I was paired with Mr. MORSE, I in fact had no pair on yesterday. I make this statement to explain why I believed I was paired and why I refrained from voting. I was opposed to the proposition, and should have so voted had I not thought that I was paired.

Mr. DENSON. I desire to make a correction. The RECORD states that on the vote yesterday upon the question of annual clerks for members I was paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GRESHAM]. That gentleman, however, voted in the negative, not knowing anything about the pair, as he has informed me. I wish to say that if I had been present I should have voted against that amendment.

Mr. GRESHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am reported in the RECORD as having been paired yesterday with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENSON]. I was not paired; and I understand that the erroneous statement in the RECORD arose from mistaking the name GRAHAM in the written pair for my name.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask consent that to-morrow the House meet at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the object?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes it is to give more time for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

BUREAU OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a communication from the Secretary of State, covering the report of the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics for the year 1894.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Washington, February 13, 1895.

DECISIONS UNDER THE TARIFF AND NAVIGATION LAWS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a joint resolution to provide for the printing, binding, and distribution of the decisions under the tariff and navigation laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House copies of the findings of the Court of Claims in the following cases; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed: Indiana Miami Indians vs. The United States; George W. Marlar vs. The United States; and John Hightower vs. The United States.

MINERAL LANDS IN MONTANA AND IDAHO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments and with a request for a conference.

Mr. McRAE. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. McRAE, Mr. CAMINETTI, and Mr. ELLIS of Oregon as conferees on the part of the House.

BASIL MORELAND.

Mr. HEARD. I shall have to call for the regular order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. HEARD. I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] desires to call up some matter which went over yesterday uncompleted.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday a bill called up by the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] went over until to-day by agreement. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4704) for the relief of Basil Moreland.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asked consent yesterday for the consideration of this bill, and by agreement the matter went over until to-day so that some gentleman might look into the question. Is there now objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOWERS of California, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, and there were no reports presented.

The SPEAKER. This day is set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

JAMES LINSKEY.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up at this time for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8624) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to James Linskey, of said District, prior to the passage of this act, be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887, and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act are, in respect of such real estate, hereby remitted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MARLBORO ELECTRIC RAILWAY OF MARYLAND.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, in order to resume business where we left off on the last District day, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to complete the consideration of the bill H. R. 8698, and to consider such other bills as the Committee on the District of Columbia may call up.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8698) to authorize the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia.

The motion of Mr. HEARD was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that when the committee rose on the last District day general debate had been closed on the bill the title of which had been read and several amendments had been adopted to section 1 of the bill.

Mr. HEARD. That is correct.

Mr. HAINES. But the consideration of that section had not been concluded at the time the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The consideration had not been concluded. The reading of section 2 had not begun.

Mr. HEARD. Then the first section is still under consideration and open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1, line 41, by striking out the words "be made" in that line and inserting the words "shall be," so as to read:

"That such extension of the road shall be within one year after the opening of Pennsylvania avenue to the Bowen road. These routes may be modified or extended at the will of Congress, and the said railway company shall comply with such modifications or extensions."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the bill were read.

The Clerk read section 6 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. That if the said railway be operated by overhead wires the corporation shall furnish and maintain such lights along its line as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may direct, without cost to the District of Columbia; but no overhead wires shall be constructed or used within the limits of the city of Washington.

Mr. HAINES. I move to strike out of this section lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, and down to and including the word "but," in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"That if the said railway be operated by overhead wires the corporation shall furnish and maintain such lights along its line as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may direct, without cost to the District of Columbia; but"

Mr. HAINES. I do not know why Congress should compel a railroad company to furnish electric lights on the line of its road. It is not in that line of business. It is only fair to any such corporation that it should be excluded from such an imposition; and therefore I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. If the gentleman will allow an interruption I would like to ask him if, in the same line of his argument, there is any reason why Congress should grant this road this right of way, or to any company, and that one-half of the widening of any street or alley that shall be required should be paid half by the company and half by the District of Columbia?

Mr. HAINES. I do not.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. One is just as broad as the other.

Mr. HAINES. I think not. There is no reason why they should be required to furnish electric lights.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, that is a condition on which the bill was reported by the House committee, and it also met the approval of the District Commissioners. That is one of their requirements, and I think, with the gentleman from New Hampshire, that it has probably affected the judgment of the District Commissioners, and probably the committee, in agreeing to report favorably on the bill. That is to say, that these people would render this equivalent or partial equivalent for the franchise.

This bill is entirely satisfactory, as far as I have heard, to the friends of the measure. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COFFIN] says it is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. COFFIN of Maryland. It is.

Mr. HEARD. And I do not see why we should not keep that provision in.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. HAINES. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman from Missouri stated, no longer than two or three days ago, that he knew of no railroad corporation, with one or two possible exceptions, that were paying institutions in the District of Columbia at this time.

Mr. HEARD. None of the suburban roads.

Mr. HAINES. None of the suburban roads.

Mr. HEARD. There is no question about that being true.

Mr. HAINES. In the same bill you are requiring this company to pay 4 per cent of their gross receipts. Can they hope to do that? Is there any hope of their being able to do it? Certainly not. People introduce bills here asking us to grant franchises for the purpose of selling them, and they go to people who have the means and sell their bonds, and those people, buying the securities in good faith, do not look into the franchise granted by Congress here. Otherwise they would not invest their money. In the city of New York the Broadway line, which is worth millions of dollars, only pays 3 per cent of its gross receipts; and out of eleven hundred electric railways in the United States there are possibly four or five exceptions where such a requirement is made by the States. I do not know why Congress should sanction a bill here which must result in a railroad corporation going into the hands of the bondholders or receivers after large sums of money have been invested in it. I claim it is a wrong precedent for us to establish here, and I ask that my amendment be agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. In response to what the gentleman has said I desire simply to submit that it is true, as the reports of these different suburban roads show, that none of them have been operated at a profit, but all of them have been operated at a loss; but at the time this bill was reported and was before the Commissioners the Commissioners had not taken action upon a bill asking that such roads be relieved from the burden of paying 4 per cent of their gross earnings, and that the amount be reduced to 1½ per cent. Since that time, as I understand, the Commissioners have reported favorably upon a bill advising that Congress reduce the tax upon their gross earnings from 4 per cent down to 1½ per cent. That matter was discussed in the committee in connection with this bill and it was suggested that the tax be fixed at 1½ per cent, the amount which it was known these other suburban roads intended to ask that their tax be reduced to, but the committee thought there was no reason why this particular road should be given that reduction unless it was also given to the others.

Now, the Commissioners having reported favorably on the reduction of that 4 per cent tax to 1½ per cent, as far as I am concerned, I am perfectly content that this bill shall be amended so as to make it 1½. I do not believe in all probability that this road will pay a dividend in ten years; but, as I said a while ago, the bill in its present form is acceptable to those who ask the franchise, as I understand, and it was their purpose to accept the franchise with the 4 per cent conditions, taking the chance of Congress putting them on a footing with other suburban roads in case it reduced the tax already assessed by the charters granted to other suburban roads.

Now, so far as the people who will put their money into this enterprise, not examining the franchise, I am quite surprised to hear that statement from a man of practical experience in railroad matters, as I understand my friend from New York [Mr. HAINES] to be. I do not think this Congress needs to constitute itself a guardian to preserve the interests of men who invest their money in these enterprises. I think the men who have sense enough to make money to build these railroads are very apt to thoroughly understand the conditions which are imposed by their charters, and they make up their minds whether or not the enterprise is a good one under those conditions. I do not think there is any danger of their being taken by surprise.

Now, in conclusion, the bill as reported is acceptable to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COFFIN], whose people are specially interested in it, and, as I understand, it is satisfactory to those people who expect to be benefited by it. Therefore I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES] will not insist upon an amendment which they do not ask, and which I doubt whether the House might cheerfully give.

Mr. HAINES. I ask for a vote on my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COFFIN of Maryland. In regard to this amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES], while we are willing to accept the bill as it is printed and as it comes to us from the Commissioners, of course if this House wants to relieve us of the burden of putting up these lights we are willing to accept the relief. At the same time we do not raise that point. We are willing to take the judgment of the House upon the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I only ask time to say a word. I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES] ought to be adopted. I do not think the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COFFIN] ought to ask to have it adopted, and I do not understand that he does.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask if this provision is not found in the charters of all the suburban roads?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was going to say that it is, and for a very good reason, Mr. Chairman. These roads, run by the overhead trolley in the District outside of the city, run their cars very rapidly, at great speed. Now, the only object in this provision in the bill is to provide some protection to the people who live along the line.

It gives a light. It requires the road to put a light there, in order that lives and limbs may be protected.

Mr. HAINES. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not think you ought to insist on the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 11. That the main line of the said railway company shall be commenced within one year and completed within two years from the passage of this act; the Fourteenth street branch of said road shall be completed within three years from the passage of this act.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment there. In section 11, line 1, strike out the word "main," and in lines 3, 4, and 5 strike out the words "the Fourteenth street branch of said road shall be completed within three years from the passage of this act."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, section 11, strike out the word "main" in line 1, and in line 3, section 11, strike out the following: "The Fourteenth street branch of said road shall be completed within three years from the passage of this act."

Mr. HEPBURN. The object of this amendment is to require the commencement of the line of road within one year and its completion within two.

Mr. HEARD. What section?

Mr. HEPBURN. Section 11.

Mr. COFFIN of Maryland. I would like to state to the gentleman from Iowa that the road will have to build a bridge, and I think it ought to have the time given in that section.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is wise policy to extend to three years the construction of any of these railroads. If they are not of sufficient importance to make it profitable in the estimation of the people who are to construct them to complete them in two years, it is a wise thing to postpone the authorization of them until a later period. Three years is a long time.

Mr. HEARD. So far as that is concerned, it is a question for the exercise of the judgment of the House, but as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COFFIN] has stated, this company will be required to build a bridge across the Eastern Branch for their exclusive use. The road runs almost entirely in Maryland, across the Eastern Branch, and it was thought that three years was a reasonable time; but that is a matter on which each member will exercise his own judgment. It is not material to the framing of the bill, but I think that time ought to be allowed.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 16. That said company shall, on or before the 1st of February of each year, make a report to Congress, through the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December 31, and such other facts as may be required by any general law of the District of Columbia, which report shall be verified by the affidavit of the president and secretary of said company, and, if said report is not made at the time specified or within ten days thereafter, such failure shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of the privileges and rights herein granted, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to cause to be instituted proper judicial proceedings therefor; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes upon personal property, including cars and motive power, each year, 4 per cent of its gross earnings within the District of Columbia, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of personal taxes upon its property used solely and exclusively in the operation and management of said railway: Provided, That the payment of the said 4 per cent of its gross earnings shall not be required during the period of five years after the commencement of the operation of said railway, or any part thereof. Its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That its tracks shall not be taxed as real estate.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In section 16, line 18, I move to strike out the word "four" and insert the words "one and a half;" also, in line 29 of the same section I move to strike out the word "four" and insert the words "one and a half." I hope that will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk state the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 13, strike out the word "four" and insert the words "one and a half," and on page 11, line 29, strike out the word "four" and insert the words "one and a half."

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who has made a study of these suburban roads, states that none of them are paying, as I understand, operating expenses even.

Mr. HEARD. The reports show that.

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman says the reports show that. Now, the District Commissioners, who have investigated that matter, have proposed a bill which will be considered later, requiring that the percentage of the gross earnings be reduced from 4 to 1½ per cent. Now, if we have been wrong in imposing these terms in the other charters, let us commence right in this instance. I do not know the parties who are asking for this franchise; but I suppose it is some one, possibly, who has some real estate that they want to dispose of.

Mr. HULL. I understand there is to be a bill brought up in the line of your amendment applying to all suburban roads?

Mr. HAINES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. Why not let this bill go as it is and let all of them stand or fall together.

Mr. HAINES. We want to do right; we want to be fair.

Mr. HULL. You are not doing right in this case if this road is only required to pay 1½ per cent of the gross earnings and the others 4. It is only right for them all to go one way or the other.

Mr. HAINES. I will ask the chairman of the committee if it is expected that such a bill will be passed at this Congress?

Mr. HEARD. I think it can, Mr. Chairman. It is now before our committee and has been favorably recommended by the Commissioners. I think it will become law. Therefore the committee thought the text should remain the same as the others, and let them all be affected by the same general law.

Mr. HAINES. Now, I would ask the gentleman from Iowa if he would be in favor of a law which would make them all pay 1½ per cent?

Mr. HULL. I am not going to commit myself. I will meet that question when it arises. But I will consent to sign a recommendation that the bill be reported from the committee, but whether I shall vote in favor of it or not, if it be so reported, will be a matter for determination at the time.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, that amendment, according to my recollection, was proposed in the Committee on the District of Columbia, and was voted down on the ground that we have a general regulation which imposes this tax of 4 per cent on gross earnings in lieu of personal-property tax on all railroads. Now, on this kind of railroad we have a bill before the committee proposing to reduce it in the case of suburban railroads to 1½ per cent, but that bill has not so far been acted on by the committee.

When this amendment was offered in the Committee on the District of Columbia the committee voted it down, because they thought that if we were going to alter the rate of taxation we ought to do it in a systematic way and make the change applicable to all the roads. If the gentleman from New York insists on a vote on his amendment I hope that it will be voted down as an amendment to the present bill, because it is against the judgment and the vote of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I will not contradict the statement of my friend from Florida, because his recollection on this subject is probably better than mine. As I stated a while ago, this matter was discussed in the committee. If an amendment was offered and voted down, I do not remember it, but I have no doubt that the statement of the gentleman is correct, and I remember that after discussion the text of this bill was left to stand in conformity with the text of other suburban railroad bills. I expressed the hope a few moments ago that the amendment would prevail. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Florida as to the action of the committee, I now withdraw that remark. I hope that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COFFIN] will be content to let the amendment be withdrawn and let this road take its chance with the others, for I have no doubt that Congress will see the justice of passing a general law applicable to them all.

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman states that this is not a just provision which compels this railroad company to pay 4 per cent, and yet—

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I have made no such statement, and it is not necessary that I should make any such statement. On the contrary, I think it would be an improper thing for me to say under the circumstances. I do, however, think that 4 per cent is an unreasonable rate of taxation, and I therefore expect to vote and to do all I can for the relief of this and the other roads which are taxed more than their earning capacity will justify.

Mr. HAINES. If it is unjust why not begin to correct the evil now by adopting this amendment?

Mr. HEARD. The reason has been very forcibly stated by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. COOPER]. He says and I believe that the sense of the Committee on the District of Columbia was that it would be better to let this road stand with the others and let them all be relieved, if at all, by a general law.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, there may be a reason, and a good one, for this form of taxation of the tracks and franchises of a railroad company, but there is certainly no good reason for this form of taxation of the personal property of a railroad company. This form was adopted at the instance of the corporations, and the rate of 4 per cent was fixed because they knew that it would inure to their advantage, it being a less rate of taxation than the ordinary one of 1½ per cent on the valuation of their personal property.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will permit me to correct him, he is entirely mistaken when he says that this originated with the corporations. It originated with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Rowell, when he was a member of the District Committee, and it was incorporated in these bills as they came up from time to time for consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is talking only about this city. I am talking about this form of taxation generally as having been procured by the railroad companies.

Mr. HEARD. I understand that, and I say it was proposed here by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Rowell, one of the best members the committee ever had. He proposed it as a means of making them, in a sense, pay for their franchises.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is a form of taxation that has been in use for years, and it was in use years before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] was a member of the District Committee.

Mr. HEARD. Well, it was not suggested by the corporations, as the gentleman states; it originated in the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is in some of the oldest charters in this city, and it was originated in the interest of the railroad companies, to secure a less rate of taxation than the ordinary rate. That was the purpose of it. They knew that this 4 per cent tax upon their gross earnings would yield a less sum to the city than the ordinary rate of taxation. Now the proposition is to cut it down to 1½ per cent, and a general law for that purpose is suggested. It will be time enough to discuss that proposition hereafter. As I understand it, this bill puts this road on a par in this respect with all the other roads. Is not that correct?

Mr. HEARD. It is.

Mr. HEPBURN. And I see no reason why there should be an exception made in favor of this road.

Mr. COFFIN of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, we do not ask to have any advantage over any other road, and I therefore hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES] will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HAINES. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HAINES, the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HAINES. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—yeas 4, noes 26; so the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That the said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of the roadway, and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unlawfully obstruct or impede the passage of cars of said railway company with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway, or depot stations, or other property belonging to the said railway company, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than $25 nor more than $100 to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District; and shall remain liable, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their act as aforesaid; but no suit shall be brought unless commenced within sixty days after such offense shall have been committed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia why this peculiar language is found in section 18 in relation to fines. It provides that "if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unlawfully obstruct or impede the passage of the cars of said railway, etc., the person or persons so offending shall forfeit for each such offense not less than $25 nor more than $100 to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District." As I understand it these fines are to inure to the benefit of this company. In other words, after a fine has been assessed by a magistrate, or by the police court, it is to be turned over to the corporation. Is not that a new departure?

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, as I recollect, this provision has been incorporated in every bill that I have had knowledge of for ten years. According to my understanding there is no purpose in the use of that language to make these fines a source of revenue to the company. The provision is intended simply as a means of protecting the property of the company in its safe operation, a matter which concerns the entire public, and the idea is to have somebody interested to prosecute offenders. That is why the fine is made to inure to those against whom the offense is committed. In other words, the railroad company, while protecting its property against destruction or interference, is at the same time protecting the comfort and lives of its passengers and employees. That, I understand, is the reason for inserting the language in the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. The language of the bill is, "or in any way molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit." Now, let us see how this will operate. Some man, we will suppose, makes an assault upon a passenger in one of these cars. Then a prosecution is instituted and a fine of $100 is levied; but that fine, under the terms of the bill, inures to the benefit of the company. I am not objecting to the company having proper control over their road and proper means for protecting themselves in its operation. But for us now to provide that the ordinary fines and penalties which may be collected in the police courts for offenses of this character shall be turned over to the railroad company would be, it seems to me, an innovation in the administration of criminal justice.

Mr. HEARD. It is no innovation; it corresponds with the provisions which have been inserted in charters granted here during many years past. The justification for such a provision is that it tends to make the company interested in the prosecution of persons who thus offend by interfering with the operations of the road. This is no new feature in our legislation. It is not peculiar to this charter. If the gentleman will examine the various charters of this kind which have been granted in this District during many years past he will, I believe, find a provision of this kind in every one of them. I have made some examination; and to my personal knowledge such a provision has been inserted in all the various charters of this kind which have been granted during at least ten years past.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has the gentleman any objection to striking out the words "to said company," in line 11, page 13?

Mr. HEARD. If the judgment of the House is that those words shall go out I shall not object. The only reason for inserting them is, as I have stated, that the company may be interested in prosecuting these offenses, which are in many cases offenses against the public as well as against the property of the company.

Mr. HULICK. Have these corporations availed themselves on any occasion of such a provision as this in their charters? Has the provision operated practically as a protection?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know whether the companies have had occasion to avail themselves of the provision; but I am sure they would do so if necessary.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out, in line 11, page 13, the words "to said company."

Mr. HEARD. I have no further suggestions to submit. I have stated the reason for inserting those words. The matter is one for the House to determine.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to, there being—yeas 23, noes 20.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEARD. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEYOR OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. I desire now to call up Senate bill No. 444, which proposes to make a change in the law in regard to the surveyor of the District of Columbia. When the bill shall have been read (and the report, if called for) I propose to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], who reported the bill, and who is more familiar with the subject than I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act the surveyor of the District of Columbia shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum in lieu of fees, and shall be under the direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the surveyor shall give bond to the United States in the penalty of $20,000, with two sureties, to be approved by the Commissioners, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, and shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before the Commissioners that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office, which bond and oath shall be deposited with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the surveyor, be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint one assistant surveyor, at a salary of $1,800 per annum; one draftsman and computer, at a salary of $1,400 per annum; one clerk, at a salary of $1,200 per annum; two rodmen, at $720 each per annum; two chainmen, at $650 each per annum; and such additional employees as may be, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, temporarily required for the surveyor's operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $2,000 in any one year.

SEC. 4. That the surveyor shall, as speedily as possible, execute any order of survey made by any court or private individual of any lot or square within the cities of Washington and Georgetown, or of any land within the District of Columbia outside of said cities, and shall make due return of a true plat and certificate thereof.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the surveyor to execute any surveying work for the District of Columbia, without charge, on the order of the Commissioners; and all fees for surveys made by the surveyor or the assistant surveyor shall be paid over to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be covered into the Treasury of the United States as other revenues of the District are now; and the field notes of the surveyor and his assistant shall be preserved and shall be a part of the public property of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That the assistant surveyor shall take the same oath his principal is required to take, and may, during the continuance of his office, discharge and perform any of the official duties of his principal, and any default or misfeasance in office by the assistant surveyor, or other assistant or helper of the surveyor, shall be deemed a breach of the official bond of his principal.

SEC. 7. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby empowered and directed to prescribe a schedule of fees to be charged by the surveyor for his services in lieu of the fees now charged, which schedule shall be printed and conspicuously displayed in the office of the surveyor.

SEC. 8. That all laws and parts of laws in the District of Columbia relating to the surveyor now in existence, as far as the same are applicable and not in conflict with this act, are hereby continued in full force and effect.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case is voluminous; and I think I can briefly explain the measure so as to set out the main points to the satisfaction of members.

There is a rather peculiar situation of affairs in this District. The surveyor of the District has never been a public officer, but simply a man employed under a law which does not preserve public records. The fees fixed by the District for business of this kind are below those which private parties will pay; and in many cases no funds are provided to pay for public work. The result is that the business of the District, so far as this officer is concerned, is compelled to wait his pleasure.

The Commissioners report (and an investigation bears out their statement) that under the present law the surveyor's office is absolutely independent of all supervision by the Commissioners; and the field books, notes, and preliminary records are claimed as the private property of the surveyor or his deputies. In such a state of affairs, the surveyor owning the field notes, the District Commissioners are compelled to employ in this office from time to time members of the same family; and one of the District Commissioners stated that members of a particular family have held the office practically for one hundred years. At one time a man not connected with this family was employed to do this work; but it was found impossible for him to do it because of the fact that, without the field notes which his predecessors had made, he had not sufficient data to enable him to efficiently perform the duties of the office.

The Commissioners report further that in many cases of plats, subdivisions, and surveys the report is made in such a way that you must go back to the same surveyor who made the original subdivision or plat in order to secure accurate work. The public business is compelled to wait, as a rule, on private business, because people pay more for the work than the city does; and the special-assessment division reports that the work of that office is seriously inconvenienced and greatly hindered by the nonreceipt from the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia of the plats and subdivisions of lots in the various squares, as required by the existing orders of the Commissioners, and because of the nonreceipt of the plats and subdivisions it is impossible to make correct assessments.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question—

Mr. HULL. I will come to the question of expense in a moment.

Mr. SAYERS. The question to which I refer does not affect the expense. I notice in the report of the committee the statement that—

In case of the death of the surveyor the possession of the field books and notes and official memoranda might be retained by his heirs or executors, and be the subject of embarrassing legal contention before the municipal authorities could secure them, if they should be able to get possession of them at all.

Mr. HULL. That has been the case heretofore.

Mr. SAYERS. But how could that possibly happen, if the man is an officer of the Government?

Mr. HULL. He is not, however, a public officer in the sense that gives the public possession of his field notes. He is paid by fees and is not a public officer as usually understood.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, even if employed by contract he is under the District authorities.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. He is appointed by the Commissioners.

Mr. HULL. Yes; under a contract to do the work as provided by law, but the law is so faulty that it should at once be amended.

Mr. SAYERS. To that extent, at least, he is a public officer. Now, why should not all of the records, notes, books, and memoranda relating to the surveys made by him while discharging his duties as a public officer go, under the contract, into the District offices and become public property?

Mr. HULL. Well, that is the very question I asked the Commissioners themselves, and they said they could not require sufficient data from the surveyor to complete the record.

Mr. HEARD. I answer the gentleman from Texas that there is no law compelling it.

Mr. HULL. The Commissioners replied, when the inquiry was suggested, that they were not able to get any concessions out of the surveyors because of the small amount of service they rendered to the District. You will notice that the amount paid to them as compensation by the District for public work is very insignificant as compared with the amount they receive from private parties. The District expenditure is small, only about $1,000, while private parties pay between seven and eight thousand dollars a year for the surveys, and I was surprised when informed that the District had no record of these things. The answer was that there is no law requiring the preservation of the records, and in some cases where surveys have been made, or desired to be made, under the control of the District they have been compelled, although it was advantageous to employ a new surveyor, to go back to the same family who made the original survey in order to get access to the field notes, etc.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Do the committee concede that the plat books, maps of subdivisions, and field notes are the private property of the surveyors themselves?

Mr. HULL. They are regarded as the property of the surveyors.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And yet there is hardly a deed executed here that does not refer to these plats as "recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia."

Mr. HULL. They tell me that the records are so incomplete that as a matter of fact they do not constitute what could be considered a public record, and that in many cases it is impossible to continue the service without going to the office of the surveyor in order to get this information.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. As a matter of fact, I repeat that there is scarcely a deed to any property in this District that does not refer to the plats "in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia." They must, then, be regarded as public plats and surveys.

Mr. HULL. The Commissioners of the District informed me that there is no full official record of the surveys. They have a memorandum to some extent, but no full official record as we have in our States and cities throughout the Union.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. There are about fifty great volumes of public records in the office of the surveyor.

Mr. HULL. I am simply giving what they said.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand that for all work done for private parties the charge will be made and the expense met by them in the shape of fees?

Mr. HULL. That is correct.

Mr. SAYERS. And these fees are to go into the Treasury?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Into the Treasury for the benefit of the District of Columbia only?

Mr. HULL. They will go into the Treasury just as all other taxes do, that is, one-half to the credit of the District and one-half to the General Government.

Mr. SAYERS. But all other taxes and fees do not go that way, I think.

Mr. HULL. All for the support of the District do.

Mr. SAYERS. Certain court fees, as I understand, do not go into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They form a part of the revenues of the District.

Mr. SAYERS. The court fees assist in supporting the Government.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The fees of the police court are, I think, put into the Treasury the same as other taxes. Of course, the distribution of the other fees are determined by the judicial acts.

Mr. HULL. But, if the gentleman will allow me, it is easy to obviate that. I understand that there was no question about it; this bill covers that point; but it is easy to provide that they shall be paid into the public Treasury, if the provisions of this bill are sufficiently explicit, as other taxes are under the arrangement with the General Government.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, with reference to the bill itself, I object to the establishment of additional offices. The bill provides for two rodmen, at $720 each per annum, and two chainmen, at $650 each per annum. I think those items should be stricken out.

Mr. HULL. The important point I have in my mind is to have this officer made a public officer, full public records kept. If the gentleman from Texas believes that these subordinates ought not to have the salaries named in the bill, it is very easy to amend it by striking them out. There is no question in my mind as to the central idea of the bill, that this surveyor should be a public officer and all his work, including field notes, shall be under the control of the District Commissioners.

Mr. HEARD. That is right.

Mr. HULL. That is the central idea that I have in my mind. All the departments of the District government which rely upon these records for the prompt transaction of their business are unanimous in the opinion that it is absolutely necessary to change the method which they have had heretofore, namely, practically the contract system, with the surveyor. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] will look at the report of the surveyor he will see that under the present law, under the fees provided, he collected the sum of $7,500 last year, when the work was not done for the District that should have been done in order to expedite the public business.

Mr. HEARD. I ask that general debate be closed, and that the bill be read by sections for amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the surveyor of the District of Columbia shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum in lieu of fees, and shall be under the direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "three," in line 4, and insert the word "two," so that it will read: "A salary of $2,000 per annum."

Mr. HULL. I move to amend that by making it $2,500. I regard the salary as fixed by the bill none too much.

Mr. SAYERS. Make it $2,250.

Mr. HULL. Very well, if the gentleman insists upon it, I will let it go at $2,250. He made $2,700 last year, and I do not think $2,250 is enough.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "three thousand" and insert the words "two thousand two hundred and fifty."

Mr. HULICK. I want to ask a question of the gentleman who has charge of this bill. I am advised that the office of surveyor does not now exist in this District.

Mr. HULL. Not as a public officer.

Mr. HULICK. That is what I mean.

Mr. HULL. There is a law for a surveyor to be appointed by the District Commissioners.

Mr. HULICK. I understood that there was no surveyor.

Mr. HULL. The law does not require him as a public officer to keep records and to have an office, and all that.

Mr. HULICK. The inquiry occurred to my mind whether this first section should not provide for the establishment of the office of public surveyor?

Mr. HULL. There is a man who holds an appointment as surveyor from the Commissioners, but under the present law his duties are so lamely defined that he claims a large part of the data as his private property.

Mr. HULICK. He certainly is not a public officer unless his records are public property. Ought we not in this bill to establish the office in the first place and provide for his appointment, and provide that the records shall be public records and subject to public inspection?

Mr. HULL. This bill is prepared by the District Commissioners, and they claim that under this bill they will have that right.

Mr. HULICK. I understand there is no public surveyor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HULL. There is a District surveyor appointed by the Commissioners.

Mr. HULICK. There may be many surveyors, but I understand there is no public surveyor.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Oh, yes; there is a public surveyor appointed under law.

Mr. HULL. Yes; but there never has been any law properly framed to make his records public property.

Mr. HULICK. That is what I understood.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But he is a public officer.

Mr. HULICK. Ought we not at this time to so frame the law that the records of that office shall be public property?

Mr. HULL. That is what this bill does do.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman if the very fact of his being a public official does not make his acts and his records public?

Mr. HULICK. But they say he is a private surveyor.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That has been a question of contention for years, and the fact has been that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have never been able to control these records.

Mr. HULICK. Then we ought to have a law that will.

Mr. HULL. It is claimed that that will be done by this bill.

Mr. HEARD. That is what we propose to do by this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This bill makes the records public.

Mr. HULICK. I do not see the authority here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will read the closing part of section 5, on page 3, he will see that it reads as follows:

And the field notes of the surveyor and his assistant shall be preserved and shall be a part of the public property of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HULICK. Ought we not to pass a law to establish the office first?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It is already established.

Mr. HULL. The officer has already been appointed by the Commissioners. He claims that under the law his field notes and plats are private property; but he is appointed by the Commissioners. I think the bill covers that point sufficiently.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If the gentleman will pardon me, the situation is simply this: There is an office of surveyor of the District of Columbia. There is no law which requires him to do the work of the District, and therefore for all the work which he has performed heretofore for the District he has claimed the fees from the public Treasury just as if he had been working for a private individual. The result has been a large claim against the funds of the District of Columbia on behalf of this surveyor for work done for the public, such as surveying streets and the like. Now, this bill proposes to strike down all that claim and put him under the control of the District Commissioners, so that when his time is required it will be used by them.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I send to the Clerk's desk part of the existing statutes relating to the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and ask to have them read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 472. The office of the surveyor of the District is the legal office of record of the plats of all property in the city of Washington, and all records of the division of squares and lots made between the public and original proprietors, or otherwise authorized by law, shall be kept in said office.

SEC. 473. All transcripts from such records certified by the surveyor shall be evidence equally valid with certified transcripts from the land records of the District.

SEC. 474. The surveyor, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, shall take an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully and impartially perform the duties required of him by the provisions of this chapter.

SEC. 475. The plats of the squares in the city of Washington shall be drawn upon a uniform scale of not less than 1 inch to 50 feet, and shall show the lines of all subdivisions of the squares as the same existed at the date of the completion of each square.

SEC. 484. The surveyor shall ascertain and certify, and put on record at the request and expense of any person interested therein, the fact of the occupation of land by a party wall as mentioned in the preceding section.

SEC. 487. Whenever the President shall deem it necessary to subdivide any square or lot belonging to the United States, within the city of Washington, not reserved for public purposes, into convenient building lots or portions for sale and occupancy, and alleys for their accommodation, he may cause a plat to be made by the surveyor in the manner prescribed in this chapter, which plat shall be recorded by the surveyor, and the provisions of this chapter shall extend to the lots, pieces, and parcels of ground contained in such plat as fully as to subdivisions made by individual proprietors.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If the gentleman will allow me a moment. By reading the whole law he will find there is a large amount of work done year by year by the District surveyor which does not become public property and matter of record in the office of the Commissioners, or at least that has been the contention; and now, to remove that contention, the law provides here that all these field notes shall be public property, duly recorded and kept in the office of the Commissioners.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, my contention is that all the field notes, or official transcripts of them, all the plats or plans from the field notes in the surveyors office, passing into plats of the District of Columbia, and all books or records kept by the surveyor as such are public records, and that they are such public records as are received in courts as valid evidence just the same as records of deeds; and for anyone to suggest that those records, paid for in part by the District of Columbia and part by the Government, and paid for in the remainder of instances by individuals for the purpose that they may become public records and remain such through all time, are the property of an individual is too absurd, in my mind, to be stated here in earnest by any man who has examined the subject.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reply to the gentleman from New Hampshire that the Commissioners of the District were before the committees at different times, not only the House committee, but the Senate committee, and they stated repeatedly that the records were not complete, that while the surveyor was a public officer in the sense of being appointed by them under the law, yet that the public business was delayed frequently because there was no appropriation to pay for his work.

Mr. HEARD. Public work ordered by the Commissioners.

Mr. HULL. Public work ordered by the Commissioners. They said the surveyor held that he was not obliged to do any work for the public unless the money was provided to pay for it as it was done. As to the point of the records not being absolutely public records, I have only the statement of the three Commissioners that the records are incomplete; that the surveyor holds that they are largely his private property, and that the Government had been compelled for years to keep the same family in office as surveyor of the District of Columbia. Now, I suppose the Commissioners knew exactly what records they had and whether they were complete or not, and the reports in writing of the different divisions of the District government go to bear out the contention of the Commissioners that the surveyor should be made a public officer and paid a salary, the public business being given a preference and all fees turned into the Treasury.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. What would be done with the records of this surveyor's office if he should die or be removed?

Mr. HULL. That is a question which I suppose would have to come up at the time when it became necessary to negotiate for them; but it seems to me that it is our duty, regardless of whether this man is or is not in possession of records that the District government must have, to put the office on a public basis, make him a public officer, and require him to give a preference to the public business.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will allow me to read an extract from the report of Captain Fieberger, it will throw some light upon this question. He says:

It must be conceded that it is of the greatest importance to the government of the District of Columbia and its property owners—

1. That all surveys upon subdivisions of lands shall be promptly and accurately made;

2. That errors in previous surveys shall be corrected and adjusted;

3. That accurate official records shall be deposited with the proper authorities for reference at any time and for use in making assessments;

4. That all field notebooks and other notes shall form part of the public records to correct errors inadvertently made in the plats.

The defects of the present system are:

1. It is impossible for the surveyor to make all surveys required in the District of Columbia, accurately and promptly, with the force now employed by him. Most of the subdivisions recently made outside of the city have been made by other surveyors.

2. Errors in previous surveys can only be discovered, adjusted, or corrected when all the surveys are made under the supervision of a single office. That such errors exist is apparent from the fact that in determining the limits of the tracts in Rock Creek Park, surveyed under the executive officer of the Rock Creek Park Commission, it was absolutely impossible to make the previous surveys agree with each other.

The difficulties could only be solved by the property owners going upon the ground and, guided by a few generally recognized landmarks, fixing the boundaries of their several tracts.

Instead of correcting errors, the present system is probably only adding to them, as the different surveyors are working independently. In a recent examination of the reservoir tract belonging to the United States, it was discovered that the plat of this tract and the adjacent one belonging to private parties overlapped each other by about 60 feet. These surveys were made not long ago by two different men, and not under the supervision of the surveyor of the District of Columbia. Had both been made by the surveyor he would have been compelled to correct the errors at once before making the plats.

3. Accurate official records can not be kept, as some of the surveys are now recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and others with the recorder of deeds. Only the former are recognized by the assessor. This must necessarily lead to confusion.

The necessity of keeping accurate records up to date is fully explained in the accompanying letter of the officer in charge of the special assessment division.

4. All field notebooks of surveys now belong to the parties who made the surveys, and can not be used, without their permission, to correct errors which may be discovered in official records. In time they will probably be lost or destroyed.

The object of the bill is not so much to have the work of subdividing property in the District done more cheaply, but to have it done more accurately and systematically.

However, it is probable that the receipts of the office of the surveyor will be largely increased when all the work in the District is done by him.

In addition to the work for private parties the following should be done for the District of Columbia:

1. An official plat of Georgetown, of which no reliable one now exists.

2. Official surveys of streets, alleys, etc., which are being encroached upon by private parties.

The annual appropriations for contingent expenses are not now sufficient to cover the cost of having much surveying done for the District of Columbia. This accounts for the small amounts hitherto paid the surveyor.

Very respectfully,

G. J. FIEBERGER,

Captain, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.

The ENGINEER COMMISSIONER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

It is upon these facts that we have based our statements and our contention that the legislation proposed in this bill by the Commissioners themselves ought to be enacted. This statement of Captain Fieberger sets forth the facts upon which we are acting.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read, in the same connection, a portion of the report of the special assessment division:

I have the honor to report that the work of this office is very much inconvenienced by the nonreceipt from the office of the surveyor District of Columbia of the plats of subdivisions of lots in the various squares, as required by existing order of the Commissioners District of Columbia.

The last copies of subdivisions from the surveyor's office were received last January, and it is impossible to make correct assessments without correct plats as the subdivisions may exist at the time the assessment is to be made.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New Hampshire to the next paragraph of this report, which says:

In this connection I take the liberty of inviting your attention to the peculiar state of existing circumstances in that the surveyor District of Columbia, who is presumed to be a District official, does not appear to consider it at all incumbent upon his office to perform any work, however necessary, for the District, upon the order of the Commissioners District of Columbia, without compensation therefor, and such work so ordered is ignored unless some appropriation can be utilized to make payment of his bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I think the statements that have been read and the statement which I have made are entirely consistent.

Mr. HULL. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The whole point is this: The surveyor contends that he should not be required to perform public duties without compensation, and, as there is no fund under which the Commissioners can compensate him, he claims that he is under no obligation to perform the duties which they demand of him and make a public record of such proposed action. In that

I wholly agree with the surveyor, and I believe in the purpose of this bill. I have only been combating the idea that the surveyor is not an officer of the District of Columbia, and that the records of his office are not public records, and I do not find that my view is controverted by anything in the reports that have been read.

Mr. HEARD. But it is stated by the Commissioners and by Captain Fieberger that they are powerless to control the surveyor's actions without tendering him his fee; and, that being the case, whether he is theoretically a District officer or not, he is in fact entirely independent of the Commissioners.

Mr. HULL. And they make the further statements to the committee that the records are very incomplete, that the present law does not give them the proper standard that a public record should have, and that the field notes of the surveyor ought to be filed with the plats that are made, to serve as a starting point for the next surveyor.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I agree to all that.

Mr. HULL. The surveyor does not file his field notes now, but under this bill he would be compelled to do so.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I have no knowledge as to whether the compensation provided in this bill is sufficient, insufficient, or excessive. I know that the bill came to us from the Commissioners with their indorsement and recommendation, and I assume that they have honestly and judiciously fixed the compensation. If, however, it appears to the House that these fees are excessive, let them be changed. My own opinion is that a man competent to be intrusted with running the lines and fixing the boundaries of property in this District of the value of hundreds of millions of dollars could not be employed for less than $3,000 a year; but if the House concludes that the fees are excessive, but that the general provisions of this bill should be carried out, let them reduce the fees. All I ask is what the Commissioners contend for, that they should have complete records and the means of making such records.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HULL. I hope the whole amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SAYERS. But you offered an amendment to it just now.

Mr. HULL. I know; but I do not think the amendment ought to pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Allow me to make a suggestion which will probably obviate this difficulty.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suggest that instead of reducing the salary below $3,000, which the Commissioners assure me they think is neither inadequate nor excessive, we add a proviso at the close of the section that this amount shall not be paid unless the fees accruing warrant the expenditure.

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman is mistaken in suggesting that proviso, because this does increase the expenses somewhat.

Mr. SAYERS. Four or five thousand dollars a year.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The simple effect of the proviso is that the salary would not be paid unless the fees received should warrant it.

Mr. HULL. By this bill we cut off all public fees, and the private fees will not cover the amount of the salary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not think a salary of $3,000 is excessive, and I think the fees will pay it.

Mr. SAYERS. I think we can reach an agreement on this point. I do not see the necessity for having a surveyor, an assistant surveyor, a draftsman and computer, a clerk, two rodmen, two chainmen, all recognized and paid as officers of the city government. If gentlemen think that $3,000 should be paid to the surveyor and $1,800 to an assistant surveyor, that may be all right; but I suggest that either the draftsman or the clerk ought to be eliminated from the bill. The trouble is that the bill provides for too many officers.

Mr. HEARD. I do not profess to have any personal knowledge in regard to the need for a draftsman and a clerk; but I assume that the Commissioners who drew this bill knew what officers were necessary, and they have expressed their judgment on the subject in drafting the bill. If a clerk and a draftsman are necessary I see no more propriety in eliminating the provision for those two officers than in striking out any other necessary part of the bill.

Mr. HAINES. Allow me to state that there is no necessity for a clerk in this business. This is on the same line as railroad surveys.

Mr. HULL. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Texas to section 7, which provides—

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby empowered and directed to prescribe a schedule of fees to be charged by the surveyor for his services, in lieu of the fees now charged.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is to be done with the fees provided for in that section?

Mr. HULL. As I understand, they go into the Treasury.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there any such provision in this bill?

Mr. HULL. They are covered, as I understand, by the provisions of this law into the Treasury.

Mr. HEPBURN. Under this language of the bill these fees will certainly go to the surveyor:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby empowered and directed to prescribe a schedule of fees to be charged by the surveyor for his services, in lieu of the fees now charged.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the provision in section 5:

And all fees for surveys made by the surveyor or the assistant surveyor shall be paid over to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be covered into the Treasury of the United States as other revenues of the District are now.

Mr. HEPBURN and others. That covers the case.

Mr. HULICK obtained the floor.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Ohio will yield a moment, I wish to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HULL. And I withdraw mine.

The CHAIRMAN. That will leave the section as reported by the committee.

The Clerk read section 2.

Mr. HULICK. I wish to address myself to the first section of the bill. I gave way only for the purpose of allowing the amendments to be withdrawn. Before section 2 is considered I want to address myself to the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard section 1 as still open to amendment. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HULICK. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas proposed to reduce the salary of this surveyor from $3,000 to $2,000.

Several MEMBERS. That has been withdrawn.

Mr. HULICK. But I will renew the amendment, if necessary. As a basis for my remarks I renew the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to strike out "three" in line 4 of section 1 and insert "two," so as to read "that from and after the passage of this act the surveyor of the District of Columbia shall receive a salary of $2,000," etc.

Now, Mr. Chairman, an examination of section 3 will show, adding up all of the sums covered by that section together—that is to say, an assistant surveyor, at $1,800; one draftsman and computer, $1,400; one clerk, $1,200, and the other employees named in that section—that if the bill passes as it is now framed an aggregate expenditure of $12,140 is authorized.

I am not in favor of making an office of that kind in the face of the fact that the fees have not heretofore amounted to that sum. As I understand it, the gentleman who makes the report has stated that they amounted to about $7,000.

Mr. HULL. The statement was that they have reported fees of only about $7,500 last year.

Mr. HULICK. That means the total amount of fees arising from the services of all these assistants who are named here.

Mr. HULL. The surveyor reports $7,500 in fees.

Mr. HULICK. That is to say for the surveyor and all the rest of these officials mentioned here?

Mr. HULL. That is for the whole office. He paid out for help $4,848. But it must be remembered that he did but little work for the public, only about $1,000 in all for the District, because they had no funds to draw on out of which to pay him. The presumption is that with an adequate force, and the records all show that it is inadequate, there would be a considerable additional amount of work done for the city, and it is estimated that the additional work, if paid for as heretofore, would amount to about as much as the bill carries.

Mr. HULICK. Is this official prohibited from doing private work?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. HULICK. Then I understand he will get over $12,000 for fees and salary out of the public Treasury, and his assistants will do all of the work, while at the same time he will be able to go out and do private work for his own benefit.

Mr. HEARD. Not at all. All the fees derived from that work will go into the Treasury.

Mr. HULICK. You mean the private fees?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. It is provided that they shall be paid to the treasurer of the District of Columbia and the amount covered into the Treasury; and the additional amount covered in the bill is to be made up in a new schedule of fees adopted by the Commissioners, they having authority under the bill to establish a new schedule of fees.

Mr. HULICK. Very well; I will accept that statement.

Now, it seems that there is an increase here of over $5,000 beyond the amount of the receipts under the present arrangement.

Mr. HULL. Not as much as that; something over four thousand. The fees last year were $7,500.

Mr. HULICK. Well, that makes over $5,000 difference.

Mr. HAINES. Oh, no; aggregate the sum total and you will find that the amount of fees last year deducted from the sum total leaves something over $4,000. This proposition authorizes the employment of such additional persons as may, in the judgment of the Commissioner, be temporarily required, at an aggregate expense not exceeding $2,000.

Mr. HULL. As a matter of fact, the absolute increase will amount to practically nothing when that is taken out. Take $3,400 off, as is proposed in an amendment to be offered, and it will only leave about $1,800 difference.

Mr. HULICK. I expressed my surprise at the bill because of the amount of the increase which this section carries, but accept the explanation given by the committee.

But the law, as I understand it, does not provide for the office of surveyor. I ask the question of the committee: When is this officer appointed and what is the length of his term of office?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is provided for in the law now existing.

Mr. HULL. There is no fixed term, I will state to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HULICK. We have been told, in response to the question heretofore, that this was a sort of family concern which has been in the same family for a generation or so, and the records of the surveyor's office belong not to the public, but to this individual or family. Now, we propose to give money, making an appropriation in this bill, to an officer and allow him to employ assistants to the extent of about $12,000, while there is not a provision of law in the bill making it a public office at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, with the understanding (that I was not aware of when I rose to address the committee) that it is proposed by the committee to strike out some of the features in this third section, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Section 2 was read.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the surveyor, be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint one assistant surveyor, at a salary of $1,800 per annum; one draftsman and computer, at a salary of $1,400 per annum; one clerk, at a salary of $1,200 per annum; two rodmen, at $720 each per annum; two chainmen, at $650 each per annum; and such additional employees as may be, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, temporarily required for the surveyor's operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $2,000 in any one year.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of section 3, beginning with line 5 and ending with line 13, and insert what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"One draftsman and computer, at a salary of $1,400 per annum; one clerk, at a salary of $1,200 per annum; two rodmen, at $720 each per annum; two chainmen, at $650 each per annum; and such additional employees as may be, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, temporarily required for the surveyor's operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $2,000 in any one year," and insert, "and such employees as may be, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, required for the surveyor's operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $4,000 in any one year."

Mr. HULL. I think the committee is willing to accept that. It is a slight change in the phraseology, and cuts down the expense some. The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the surveyor shall, as speedily as possible, execute any order of survey made by any court or private individual of any lot or square within the cities of Washington and Georgetown, or of any land within the District of Columbia outside of said cities, and shall make due return of a true plat and certificate thereof.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Congress has already passed a bill abolishing the city of Georgetown, and I think it has probably by this time become a law. Therefore I move to strike out the word "cities" in line 3, section 4, and to insert "city," and in line 4 strike out the words "and Georgetown," and in line 5 strike out the word "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city."

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 4 so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the surveyor shall, as speedily as possible, execute any order of survey made by any court or private individual of any lot or square within the city of Washington, or of any land within the District of Columbia outside of said city, and shall make due return of a true plat and certificate thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the surveyor to execute any surveying work for the District of Columbia, without charge, on the order of the Commissioners; and all fees for surveys made by the surveyor or the assistant surveyor shall be paid over to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be covered into the Treasury of the United States as other revenues of the District are now; and the field notes of the surveyor and his assistant shall be preserved and shall be a part of the public property of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 5, line 11, insert the following:

"And all records, plats, plans, and other papers or documents now existing, or hereafter made or secured by the office of the said surveyor, shall be delivered by each surveyor to his successor in office."

Mr. HULL. How are these records to be delivered to his successor? Are they not simply left in the office?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The incoming officer gives a receipt for everything when he assumes the duties of the office.

The amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was agreed to. The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent to return to the amendment which I offered, and to insert after the word "office" the words "and operations."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "annum," in line 4, the words "and such employees as may, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District, be required for the surveyor's office and operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $4,000 in any one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent that we return to section 1 to consider an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to hear the amendment before consent is given.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "shall be," in line 5, page 1, insert the words "appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the term of four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall be."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the section?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. HULICK. I have been unable to find any statute that establishes the office of surveyor of the District of Columbia. If there is no such law, we ought to establish the office before we adopt the amendment suggested. If there is a statute establishing that office and appointing that officer, and giving the authority that appoints him, and the term of his office and the control of the records, if there is a law which gives character to his official acts, we ought to see it before we vote upon this.

I have here the Revised Statutes, and there is not a word said in them except in the statute that was enacted on page 57 of the acts of 1873-75, referred to by the gentleman from New Hampshire. There is no provision in this statute for the establishment of that office, and I take it for granted that there is no office, because the men who have been performing that duty for two or three generations are doing it on their own motion and without any authority whatever. Now they come in and claim the right as against the United States and as against the District of Columbia to control the records that they have been making. If there is no office of that kind we must establish it by this bill. We must have the office designated, and the time when the term shall begin, and the amount of the bond, and the authority that shall make the appointment, and we should define his qualifications and all that kind of thing. The amendment that is offered is not full enough. The amendment says that there shall be an officer appointed by the District Commissioners. When will his term begin?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Immediately after the passage of this act.

Mr. HULICK. I think we should designate the day when his term of office shall begin.

Mr. HEARD. From and after the passage of the act.

Mr. HULICK. It ought to be a fixed date. I claim the amendment is not complete enough. I am in favor of the amendment except that I think it ought to be made more complete.

Mr. HEARD. This bill provides for all the points suggested by the gentleman. It provides for the surveyor giving bond and provides how he shall be appointed; provides that he shall be a regular salaried officer and that he shall be surveyor of the District of Columbia.

I do not see that the gentleman's amendment relieves the difficulty, because the very purpose of it is provided for in the body of the bill; and the committee think it is as sufficiently guarded as we could make it in the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I desire to offer an amendment just as a verbal correction. I move, in line 6, after the word "the," to insert the word "said."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "the," insert the word "said."

Mr. HULL. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

UNION PASSENGER STATION ON B STREET NORTH.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8262) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to have established a union street-car passenger station on B street north, between Sixth and Seventh streets. It is on the Union Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That B street north, between Seventh street west and the public grounds occupied by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, be widened to the line of the prolongation of the south side of B street north, between Seventh and Twelfth streets west, and that the Commissioners be authorized to have established a union street-car passenger station on the said widened part of B street.

Mr. HEARD. The object of this bill is to authorize the Commissioners of the District to widen B street north here by the Center Market, for one block, to correspond with the width of the same street between Seventh and Twelfth streets, the object being to give permission to the five different street railways that center there now or chartered to come there to establish a union street-car passenger station there. The bill was prepared by the Commissioners, and the committee has agreed to it, and I believe that there is no objection to it. It does not propose a dollar of expenditure by the Government. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] will offer an amendment to the conclusion of section 1 to the effect that the work shall be done at the expense of these railroad companies, so as to make it perfectly clear that it is to be done at their expense.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, then, general debate will be considered as closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer the amendment that I have sent to the Clerk's desk, to come in at the close of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following at the conclusion of the section:
"At the expense of the street railroads using said station."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 8427) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed to extend its tracks, and run its cars thereon, through and along the following-named streets: Beginning at the intersection of North Capitol street and Michigan avenue, thence easterly along Michigan avenue and Bunker Hill road to its intersection with Fourth street northeast, so as to connect with the line now running to Brookland.

SEC. 2. That said railway company is directed to build and operate the extension herein granted within six months after the North Capitol street branch shall be in operation to Michigan avenue.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill simply makes a link between the terminus of the Eckington line here, right at the point where Michigan avenue is intersected by North Capitol street, just south of the Soldiers' Home, and with this line where it now lands passengers, near the south gate at the Catholic University. There are only a few hundred yards of space in there, and the property holders of Michigan avenue ask for the extension. It is of great service to the people of Brookland and neighborhood. I ask that general debate be closed.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there.

That said railway company is directed to build and operate the extension herein granted within six months after the North Capitol street branch shall be in operation to Michigan avenue.

Now, when is that North Capitol street branch to be established?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has been delayed by the delay in opening the Prospect Park Cemetery, and because of that delay we have not got up to Michigan avenue, but will in a short time.

Mr. HAINES. Why not amend by striking out that section, and making it that they shall construct, build, and operate that road within one year of the passage of the act?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Because the District may not open North Capitol street through there. It will be done immediately after North Capitol street is opened. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WOMEN AS PUBLIC SCHOOL TRUSTEES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public school trustees in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint women as members of the board of trustees of the public schools of the District of Columbia in addition to the present membership of said board.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "board," in line 7, the following:

"And for this purpose the number of trustees of said board shall be increased from 9 to 11, not more than 2 of whom shall be women."

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to say in regard to this bill that it has been favorably recommended by the Commissioners and has passed the Senate, and that a similar bill pending in the House was favorably considered by our committee. A bill for this purpose was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS]. It was referred to the District Commissioners, and the Commissioners sent up a substitute for it, which I introduced at their request. The Senate bill provided that the District Commissioners should be authorized to add women members to the board of trustees without specifying the number, but your committee have recommended the amendment which has been read, fixing the number at two.

Mr. HAINES. Does this increase the expenses of the board?

Mr. HEARD. Not a dollar. The bill simply authorizes the Commissioners to put not to exceed two women on the board.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, general debate will be considered closed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee's amendment so as to strike out all of it after the word "eleven."

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that amendment, for I am quite sure the House will not accept it. The Commissioners have not approved the bill in the form in which it would stand with that amendment and neither has the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. HEARD. To allow the whole school board to be composed of women.

The amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was rejected, and the amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia was then agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And it has been debated for two days in the House already.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEARD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SWANSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration various bills and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry recommendations.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to call up for action by the House the bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole,

WASHINGTON AND MARLBORO RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2601) authorizing the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole be voted upon in gross.

There was no objection.

The amendments were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was a bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were adopted.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "laws," in the first line of section 8, amend by adding the words "inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed," so that the provision will read: "All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. HEARD. I see no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

UNION PASSENGER STATION.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was a bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to have established a union street-car passenger station on D street north between Sixth and Seventh.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 8427) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WOMEN AS SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public school trustees in the District of Columbia.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the District of Columbia bills were just passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. I now desire to call up the bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company. I apprehend it will not be necessary to read this bill. It has been before the House on two previous occasions. It has been read at length; and general debate was closed. We were considering the bill by sections under the five-minute rule when it was last before the House. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who had the bill in charge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWANSON). The bill will be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When this bill was last under consideration, on June 12, 1894, an amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] upon which the yeas and nays were ordered. On the roll call no quorum voted, and thereupon the House adjourned. So that the pending question is now upon that amendment on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, and I presume there is nothing in order now but to call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, after the word "that," in line 6, on page 1, and lines 1 and 2, on page 2; the words "and assigns are hereby created," in line 2 of page 2; and insert after the word "company," in line 4, page 2, the following:

"Is hereby created, to consist of such person or persons as shall, at public auction, to be held at such time and place as shall be prescribed by the District Commissioners, after notice of not less than thirty days by publication in a Washington (D. C.) newspaper, bid the highest percentage of the annual gross proceeds of said railway business for a term of not exceeding fifty years."

Mr. TRACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the calling of the yeas and nays be vacated, and that the vote be again taken on the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I presume a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered would be in order. I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the question recurring on ordering the yeas and nays, they were not ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, it was rejected.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the second section of the bill, when—

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] or some other gentleman will explain to us, before we leave section 1, the route of this road.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When this bill was last under consideration the first section of the bill as originally introduced was published in the RECORD; but the amendment reported by the committee, which was pending, changed somewhat the route as originally proposed; so that the section as published was somewhat misleading.

The route as now called for in the amended bill begins at the District line on the Bladensburg road, and strikes the boundary at its intersection with the Bladensburg road, which is at Fifteenth street northeast. That is one of the suburban lines. The other suburban line comes down Twelfth street extended from Trinidad, and runs over the hill there to Brookland and to the suburban village of Langdon. This line, coming down Twelfth street northeast extended, crosses the boundary; crosses H street, the line of the Columbia Railroad, and comes to Maryland avenue. Thence the line extends by double track down Maryland avenue in the direction of the Capitol to E street east; thence west on E street east to Fourth street west; thence south on Fourth street west to D street west; thence along D street over the tracks of the Metropolitan Railroad to Louisiana avenue, thence southwesterly on Louisiana avenue to a point to be located by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia east of Seventh street west.

So that brings it along E street northeast until they strike Judiciary Square. It then goes south of the square until it strikes the tracks of the Metropolitan Railroad on D street, and thence along the track of that road just south of Judiciary Square to Louisiana avenue, near the police headquarters there, where it leaves D street and runs down Louisiana avenue. That is the way it now runs and covers all of East Washington, as I said, and then the suburban lines begin.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information. I do not know the route of this road. Does it not parallel other lines for quite a distance?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; it parallels the Columbia road and the Eckington and Soldiers' Home road from where it intersects that road until it strikes the Metropolitan road; that is to say, it is on E street, the Eckington is on D street as it comes into the city, while the Columbia road is on H street.

Mr. COOMBS. They are some little distance apart.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, there is one block's difference between that and the Eckington, and three from the H street line.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee recommend an amendment to this section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, after the word "road" in line 11 in section 1, page 2, all of lines 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and insert, "and running thence along said road to Florida avenue; thence southwesterly, by double track, on Maryland avenue to E street north; thence west on E street north to Fourth street west; thence south on Fourth street west to D street north; thence west on D street, in part over the."

Strike out, after the word "east" in line 3 in section 1, page 3, all of lines 3 and 4, and insert "to its intersection with Maryland avenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 12, as follows:

SEC. 12. That said company is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock to an amount not to exceed $250,000, in shares of $100 each. Said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash to the treasurer appointed by the corporation the amounts severally subscribed by them as follows, namely: Ten per cent at the time of subscribing and the balance of such subscription to be paid at such times and in such amounts as the board of directors may require; and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless 10 per cent thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing as hereinbefore provided; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as aforesaid, or as required by the resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as shall pay said installments, and the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due shall be taken to be the highest bidder, and such sale shall be conducted under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable, or said corporation may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move the following amendment to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no stock certificate shall be issued until the full face value of the same shall be paid for in money, and no bond shall be issued by said company until all the stock herein authorized shall have been paid for and issued as above directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 20, as follows:

SEC. 20. That the said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of its roadway, and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of cars of said railway company with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operators while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway or depots, stations, or other property belonging to said railway company, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than $25 nor more than $100 to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall remain liable, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their act as aforesaid; but no suit shall be brought unless commenced within sixty days after such offense shall have been committed.

Mr. HEPBURN. I offer an amendment to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from line 14, section 20, on page 17, the words "to said company."

Mr. HEPBURN. This is another of those provisions directing that fines recovered for a public offense shall be paid to the railroad company.

Mr. COOMBS. That amendment ought to be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, the question being upon its passage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is agreed that this bill as passed defines the route in accordance with the amendments recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia and not as heretofore published in the RECORD. It was published without the proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the present bill is the one reported from the committee as amended, and not the one heretofore published in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering House bill 8714 and other bills to which we may call the attention of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DICKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8714) to incorporate the Capital Railway Company.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is a proposition to construct a railroad, beginning about Shepherd's Point, across the Eastern Branch, and build it into the city; but it is proposed to extend it only about six or seven blocks from the Eastern Branch up to a point where it will intersect the Anacostia road.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill as it is in the exact form prescribed by the Commissioners for all of these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no desire for general debate it will be considered as closed by unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John B. Stetson, Augustus Burgdorf, Clarence F. Norment, Arthur E. Bandle, Harry Upson Sims, Henry C. Longnecker, W. Frederick Snyder, Joseph B. Lewis, and William Henry Bandle, of —, their associates and assigns, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate under the name of the Capital Railway Company, and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all courts of law and equity within the United States, and may make and have a common seal. And said corporation is hereby authorized to construct and lay down a street railway, with the necessary switches, turn-outs, and other mechanical devices in the District of Columbia, and run cars thereon for carrying passengers, parcels, milk, and truck by and along the following route: Beginning at a point on the District line near the Potomac River, southeast of Shepherd's Ferry, thence north by such route as shall be approved by the District Commissioners: to the south side of the Eastern Branch or Anacostia River, thence across the same by transfer ferry to First street or South Capitol street, as may be approved by the District Commissioners, to M street, over the same route to the beginning; also commencing at Anacostia Railroad tracks and Harrison street, Anacostia; thence along Harrison street and Good Hope road extended, to the District line, and return over same route. These routes may be modified or extended at the will of Congress, and the Capital Railway Company shall comply with such modifications or extensions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand there has been some modification of that route. As I understand it, the Clerk read the original text of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read the bill as printed.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. After conversation with my colleagues I withdraw the suggestion. Let the Clerk proceed with the reading.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the said railway shall be constructed in a substantial and durable manner, and all rails, electrical and mechanical appliances, conduits, stations, etc., shall be of approved pattern.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend section 4 by striking out the words "of approved pattern" and inserting the words "shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District."

Mr. HEARD. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 3, section 4, strike out the words "of approved pattern," and insert the words "approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the government and direction of affairs of the company shall be vested in a board of directors, nine in number, the majority of whom shall be residents of the District of Columbia, who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until others are duly elected and qualified to take their places as directors; and the said directors, a majority of whom shall be a quorum, shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall also be president of the company, and they shall also choose a vice president, a secretary, and a treasurer, who shall give bond with surety to said company, in such sums as the said directors may require, for the faithful discharge of his trust. In the case of a vacancy in the board of directors by death, resignation, or otherwise of any director the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the remaining directors.

Mr. HAINES. In section 16, page 10, line 3, I move to strike out the words "the majority of whom shall be residents of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 10, section 16, line 3, strike out the following language: "The majority of whom shall be residents of the District of Columbia."

Mr. HEARD. I have no objection to striking out those words. The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 19. That said company is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock to an amount not to exceed the estimated cost of the construction and equipment of the road in shares of $50 each, and to issue bonds not to exceed the cost of construction of the road, but such stock and bonds shall not exceed in the aggregate more than 10 per cent above the actual cost of the right of way, construction, and equipment of said road. Said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash to the treasurer appointed by the corporation the amounts severally subscribed by them, as follows, namely: Ten per cent at the time of subscribing and the balance of such subscription to be paid at such times and in such amounts as the board of directors may require; and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless the 10 per cent thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing, as hereinbefore provided; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as aforesaid, or as required by the resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as shall pay said installments, and the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due shall be taken to be the highest bidder, and such sale shall be conducted under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company, but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable, or said corporation may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HAINES. In section 19, page 12, line 4, I move to strike out the word "fifty" and to insert in place thereof the words "one hundred."

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 12, line 4, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "one hundred;" so that it will read "$100 each."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope my friend will not insist on that amendment. The promoters of this enterprise prefer to have the amount left at $50. That being so, it seems to me, we ought not to insist on the change. There are such poor people going to take this stock that they want to make the shares $50 each. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINES. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out of line 7, page 12, the words "ten per cent above."

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 12, line 7, strike out the words "ten per cent above."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to add to the section the following proviso:

Provided, That no certificate of stock shall be issued until the same has been paid for in money at its face value, and no bonds shall be issued until the stock herein authorized shall have been issued and the proceeds exhausted in construction.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, on this question of bonds I want to say a word. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution that I ask to have read in my time as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on Friday last the President entered into a private contract in writing with certain persons to borrow $62,000,000 of gold upon 4 per cent thirty-year bonds of the United States at a rate equivalent to 4½ per cent premium; and

Whereas bonds exactly similar, issued eighteen years ago and having only twelve years to run, were selling in the New York market on that day at a premium of 10½ per cent, and at that rate these thirty-year bonds are worth 119½; and

Whereas a cablegram from London, published in the Washington Post this morning, shows that English capitalists are ready to pay a premium of 12 per cent on said bonds; and

Whereas the Ways and Means Committee of this House, not comprehending the reason which actuated the Executive in selling so many millions of bonds at a premium of 4½ per cent, when a premium of 12 per cent could be, and much more ought to be, obtained, on yesterday had the Secretary of the Treasury before it, and examined him in relation thereto, and obtained a copy of said written contract, and all the information which the Secretary of the Treasury could give on the subject; and

Whereas the information thus obtained has not been communicated to this House; and

Whereas at this stage of this Congress, in a matter of such momentous importance, it is desirable, and the right of this House, to know what information the Ways and Means Committee has received in relation to this loan,

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means of this House report immediately to this House all the testimony and evidence and statements furnished to it by the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to that loan, including the contract made with any person or persons concerning the same.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. All I have to say is that as soon as I can be recognized in the House I shall offer that resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I have the contract here in my hand, and it will be appended to the report that I shall make this evening, so the gentleman's resolution amounts to nothing.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. The resolution has brought out the contract anyhow.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. No, sir; the contract was here before the gentleman's resolution was heard of, and I am going to append it to my report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the proviso offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. If I may be permitted to withdraw that, I will do so, and offer the following:

Add to the end of the section the words:
"Provided, That no certificate of stock shall be issued until the same has been paid for in money at its face value."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the end of the section the words:
"Provided, That no certificate of stock shall be issued until the same has been paid for in money at its face value."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That said company shall, on or before the 1st of February of each year, make a report to Congress, through the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December 31, and such other facts as may be required by any general law of the District of Columbia, which report shall be verified by the affidavit of the president and secretary of said company; and if said report is not made at the time specified or within ten days thereafter such failure shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of this charter, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to cause to be instituted proper judicial proceedings therefor; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes upon personal property, including cars and motive power, each year 4 per cent of its gross earnings, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of personal taxes upon its property used solely and exclusively in the operation and management of said railway: Provided, That the payment of the said 4 per cent of its gross earnings shall not be required during the period of five years after the commencement of the operation of any part of said railway. Its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia: Provided, That its tracks shall not be taxed as real estate.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 21, page 14. On page 14, line 29, in place of the word "five," insert the word "ten."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 29, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

Mr. HEPBURN. In order to balance the views of gentlemen here, I move to strike out the proviso commencing in line 27.

Mr. COFFIN of Maryland. I hope both gentlemen will withdraw their amendments.

Mr. HEPBURN. Here is a proposition to exempt the personal property of this corporation from all taxation except the 4 per cent tax upon its gross earnings. The bill as now drawn postpones the operation of this for five years after the operation of the road begins. And yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES], in his spirit of extraordinary liberality, proposes to extend that period of exemption from taxation for ten years. I am at a loss to know why gentlemen should intervene in this way in favor of this class of corporations. These men go into these operations with the expectation of making money. If they do not make money in the first year or the second year, they are still content to go into the operation, knowing that at a later period a larger return will come and an excellent investment is found for their money, and I can see no reason in the world why they should be exempt from taxation. I see no reason why they should not pay their taxes as other people are required to pay theirs. Let the taxation be put on the ground of personal taxation. One and a half is what other people have to pay, and it seems to me there ought not to be any discrimination. Why, the gentleman is not content that they shall pay 4 per cent, but wishes to provide that they shall pay nothing for ten years. Now, I should like to have some good reason why that should be done.

Mr. HAINES. I agree with the gentleman that they should be taxed as other corporations are taxed in other cities; but I state, as I have already previously done to-day, that corporations of this character can not live and expect to pay 4 per cent of their gross earnings. It is impossible for them to do so. The history of all this character of legislation demonstrates that they can not afford to pay such a percentage.

Mr. CATCHINGS. In this particular case the gentleman will certainly keep in view the fact that the corporation has only asked for five years, and they are perfectly content to take that.

Mr. HAINES. I understand what you mean. If this was a corporation that intended in good faith by their own money to build the road it would be another matter. But they simply have a bill introduced and passed so as to get other people on the outside interested. They procure it with the intent of selling the road or franchise. This one restriction makes it impossible for these suburban roads to pay. People having real estate that they want to improve or sell simply introduce a bill authorizing a road, with a view of getting some one foolish enough to invest their money in these roads upon statements made by the original incorporators and without their investigating these charters.

Mr. HULL. What authority have you for the statement that that is the purpose or intent of these parties?

Mr. HAINES. I do not make that statement with reference to this company. That is generally the case.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not the case in this instance; and the gentleman has no authority for such a statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. Who was it that was asking for the extension of the time to ten years?

Mr. HAINES. I was.

Mr. HAUGEN. On your own motion?

Mr. HAINES. On my own motion. That they should be taxed as they are in other cities.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope both gentlemen will withdraw their amendments.

Mr. HAINES. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in page 14, line 27, the words: "Provided, That the payment of the said 4 per cent of its gross earnings shall not be required during the period of five years after the commencement of the operation of any part of said railway. Its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia: Provided, That its tracks shall not be taxed as real estate."

Mr. HEPBURN. There are four or five of these suburban roads now in operation in this District, and our experience would seem to indicate that there are a good many gentlemen in the community who think franchises of this kind are valuable, for much of our time on District day is consumed in considering and passing this class of bills. It is evident, therefore, that somebody disagrees with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES] as to the value of these franchises, and they are the men who are here clamoring to have these charters passed. I do not know that all of these charters are very valuable just now, but they are expected to become so. There was a time, probably, when the Washington and Georgetown Railway charter went a-begging, but to-day the stock of that company is worth three or four hundred per cent, and is one of the best investments that a man can have, and I take it that the men who are seeking for these charters are looking to the prospective value and not merely to the value at this time.

Mr. BRETZ. I desire to ask the gentleman whether it is true that we are granting this franchise without requiring the parties to pay for it, as we have been granting other franchises in this District?

Mr. HEPBURN. My understanding is that all the other charters of this class have required the payment of this 4 per cent tax.

Mr. HEARD. That is correct.

Mr. HEPBURN. And my understanding is that these roads, with the possible exception of one, are required to begin that payment with the beginning of the operation of the road.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suggest to gentlemen who favor this bill, particularly to my friend from Mississippi, that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa ought to prevail. There is a bill reported from the District Committee which we intend to call up as soon as we can, reducing the tax on these suburban lines from 4 per cent to 1½ per cent. If that bill passes it will apply to this road as well as to the other suburban roads, and it seems to me that the better course would be to agree to this amendment now and let this road be dealt with like the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That the said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of the roadway, subject to the rights of the public, and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unlawfully obstruct or impede the passage of cars of said railway company with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway, or depots, stations, or other property belonging to the said railway company, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than $25 nor more than $100 to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall remain liable, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their act as aforesaid; but no suit shall be brought unless commenced within sixty days after such offense shall have been committed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in lines 11 and 12, page 15, by striking out the words "to said company;" so as to make the clause read:

"The person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than $25 nor more than $100, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8714), to incorporate the Capital Railway Company, and had directed him to report the same to the House with amendments.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole be now considered in the House, and that the amendments recommended by the committee be agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2521) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and require the said company to lay down from the intersection of Four-and-a-half and L streets southwest, along Four-and-a-half street to P street south, a single track of underground electric road for the propulsion of its cars, thence west along P street with said single track to Water street, thence northwesterly along Water street with said single track to L street, thence east along L street with said single track to its double tracks at the intersection of Four-and-a-half and L streets southwest, and thence north by said company's double tracks as now located into its depot on Seventh street extended.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall locate the said track on Four-and-a-half, P, Water, and L streets so as best to subserve the public convenience, and may in their discretion locate the same on Water street for such distance as they may deem best on the east track of the Belt Line Railway Company, so that the two companies may mutually and profitably use the space of street occupied by the said east track. The said Belt Line Railway Company and the Metropolitan Railroad Company shall each have the right to apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia to fix a just and equitable compensation for any rights which may be affected by this law, and said court shall have power to issue execution to enforce its judgment.

SEC. 3. That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized and required to lay down and continue its underground electric construction of single track from the intersection of P and Thirty-fifth streets northwest, thence running west along P street to Thirty-sixth street, thence south on Thirty-sixth street to Prospect avenue, thence east on Prospect avenue to Thirty-fifth street, thence north on Thirty-fifth street to O street, thence east, continuing its route as now located.

SEC. 4. That the number of directors of said company shall be increased from seven to nine members.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Brightwood Railway Company, the Rock Creek Railway Company, and the Georgetown and Tennyaltown Railroad Company be, and they are hereby, respectively, authorized and required to sell 4 coupon tickets for 25 cents, good for one continuous ride in the District of Columbia over the lines of said companies, respectively, and the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, and the said suburban roads shall redeem the tickets collected by the Metropolitan Railroad Company at the rate of 2½ cents for each coupon ticket presented by the said Metropolitan Railroad Company. Any of the aforesaid railroad companies which shall refuse to make sale of tickets or to accept tickets so sold as herein provided for, shall be liable to a fine of $50 for each such violation, to be recovered in the police court of the District of Columbia as other fines are recovered: Provided, That the proceeding for the collection of such penalty shall be commenced within thirty days from the date of the alleged refusal. The supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have, and it is hereby given, authority and jurisdiction to enforce the requirements and provisions of this section in respect of the sale of tickets on the petition of either of the aforesaid railroad companies or any citizen of the District of Columbia. And power is hereby given to the Metropolitan Railroad Company and the Rock Creek Railway Company to contract with each other for the purchase, sale, lease, or joint operation of the line of said Rock Creek Railway Company on Florida avenue and U street, or any part thereof.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect in thirty days after its passage.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire with reference to the matter of transfers. As I understand the amendment, the transfers are to be granted only upon payment of an additional fare, or special tickets are to be sold in such a way as to require the payment of an additional fare. I would like to hear some explanation of that. All of the railroad companies here now sell 6 tickets for 25 cents, but in this case only 4 tickets are to be sold for 25 cents.

Mr. HAINES. But the passenger gets a ride over two roads instead of one.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This relates only to suburban roads.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLEARING THE POTOMAC OF ICE.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to meet expenses that may be necessary for the purpose of clearing the Potomac River of ice within the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

THREE PER CENT GOLD BONDS.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 275) authorizing the issue of $65,116,275 gold 3 per cent bonds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, it was understood that when this report was presented the minority of the committee should have opportunity to file their views by to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I hope that gentlemen of the minority will file their views to-night.

Mr. BRYAN. We will try to get the document to the Printing Office to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] asks that the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means may have leave to file their views by to-morrow morning on the joint resolution just reported. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suppose it would be proper to have it understood that if the House should not be in session when the minority report is completed it may be forwarded to the Public Printer at once for printing.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Ways and Means just submitted be printed in the RECORD. I have spoken to the chairman of the committee, Mr. WILSON, about it, and he is quite willing that that should be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will not the report be printed as a document and be in our hands in the morning?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. It will, but we shall get the RECORD a good deal earlier than we shall get the document.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How long is the report?

Mr. PAYNE. Very short, only two pages.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The request is unusual, but I shall not object.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States communicated to Congress on the 8th day of February, having had the same under consideration, herewith report a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, sell, and dispose of bonds of the United States to an amount not exceeding $65,116,275, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, principal and interest payable in gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness, said bonds to be made payable not more than thirty years after date.

The message of the President, which is herewith appended, communicates to the House the condition of the reserve of gold in the Treasury available for the redemption of the Government's legal-tender notes and the maintenance of the parity of its coin circulation, and the reasons which compel at the present time an issue of bonds to replenish and maintain that reserve; also the general terms of a contract, made under authority of section 3700 of the Revised Statutes, for the purchase and delivery to the Treasury of a sum slightly in excess of $65,000,000 of gold coin, to be added to the stock in the Treasury, which amounts to only $42,217,081.95 at the present time.

The committee have had the benefit of a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury, who exhibited to them the original contract entered into by himself on the 8th day of February and explained its details to them. A full and complete copy of said contract is hereto added. From a reading of this paper it will be seen that the arrangement of the Secretary with the parties to this contract effects the purchase of 3,500,000 ounces of standard gold coin of the United States (amounting to $65,116,275), at least one-half of which shall be obtained in and shipped from Europe.

For this gold coin he has contracted to issue to the parties furnishing it, under authority of the act for the resumption of specie payments, approved January 14, 1875, 4 per cent thirty-year coin bonds of the United States, at a price which realizes to them interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. But the Secretary of the Treasury has reserved the right, if authority be given him by Congress, to substitute at par any bonds of the United States bearing 3 per cent interest, of which the principal and interest shall be specifically payable in United States gold coin of the present weight and fineness, said substitution, however, to be made within ten days from the date of the contract.

It is the object of the joint resolution herewith reported to give to the Secretary of the Treasury authority to substitute such bonds to the amount of the contract.

The saving to be effected to the Government, as set forth in the President's message, will be $530,150 per year for every year the 3 per cent bonds run, and of the amount of $16,174,770 should they run thirty years. As it is not believed by the committee that the issue of bonds specifically payable in gold will impose any additional burden or liability upon the Government than if they are made payable in coin, under its pledge and policy to preserve the parity of the coins in the two metals, the saving of this large amount becomes a matter of substantial moment and advantage to the Government; and as the parties to take the bonds are under contract to furnish gold coin for them it seems no hardship on the Government to contract to pay them back in the same coin that they furnish to it.

APPENDIX.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

To the Congress of the United States:

Since my recent communication to the Congress, calling attention to our financial condition and suggesting legislation which I deemed essential to our national welfare and credit, the anxiety and apprehension then existing in business circles have continued.

As a precaution, therefore, against the failure of timely legislative aid through Congressional action, cautious preparations have been pending to employ to the best possible advantage, in default of better means, such executive authority as may, without additional legislation, be exercised for the purpose of reinforcing and maintaining in our Treasury an adequate and safe gold reserve.

In the judgment of those especially charged with this responsibility, the business situation is so critical and the legislative situation is so unpromising, with the omission thus far on the part of Congress to beneficially enlarge the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury in the premises, as to enjoin immediate executive action with the facilities now at hand.

Therefore, in pursuance to section 3700 of the Revised Statutes, the details of an arrangement have this day been concluded with parties abundantly able to fulfill their undertaking, whereby bonds of the United States, authorized under the act of July 14, 1875, payable in coin thirty years after their date, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to the amount of a little less than $62,400,000, are to be issued for the purchase of gold coin, amounting to a sum slightly in excess of $65,000,000, to be delivered to the Treasury of the United States, which sum, added to the gold now held in our reserve, will so restore such reserve as to make it amount to something more than $100,000,000. Such a premium is to be allowed to the Government upon the bonds as to fix the rate of interest upon the amount of gold realized at 3½ per cent per annum. At least one-half of the gold to be obtained is to be supplied from abroad, which is a very important and favorable feature of the transaction.

The privilege is especially reserved to the Government to substitute at par, within ten days from this date, in lieu of the 4 per cent coin bonds, other bonds in terms payable in gold and bearing only 3 per cent interest, if the issue of the same should in the mean time be authorized by the Congress.

The arrangement thus completed, which, after careful inquiry, appears in present circumstances and considering all the objects desired to be the best attainable, develops such a difference in the estimation of investors between bonds made payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold in favor of the latter as is represented by three-fourths of a cent in annual interest. In the agreement just concluded the annual saving in interest to the Government, if 3 per cent gold bonds should be substituted for 4 per cent coin bonds under the privilege reserved, would be $530,150, amounting in thirty years, or at the maturity of the coin bonds, to $16,174,770.

Of course there never should be a doubt in any quarter as to the redemption in gold of the bonds of the Government which are made payable in coin. Therefore the discrimination, in the judgment of investors, between our bond obligations payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold is very significant. It is hardly necessary to suggest that, whatever may be our views on the subject, the sentiments or preferences of those with whom we must negotiate in disposing of our bonds for gold are not subject to our dictation.

I have only to add that in my opinion the transaction herein detailed for the information of the Congress promises better results than the efforts previously made in the direction of effectively adding to our gold reserve through the sale of bonds; and I believe it will tend, as far as such action can in present circumstances, to meet the determination expressed in the law repealing the silver-purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, and that, in the language of such repealing act, the arrangement made will aid our efforts to "insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1895.

CONTRACT.

This agreement entered into this 8th day of February, 1895, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and themselves, and Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves, parties of the second part.

Witnesseth: Whereas it is provided by the Revised Statutes of the United States (section 3700) that the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase coin with any of the bonds or notes of the United States authorized by law, at such rates and upon such terms as he may deem most advantageous to the public interests; and the Secretary of the Treasury now deems that an emergency exists in which the public interests require that, as hereinafter provided, coin shall be purchased with the bonds of the United States, of the description hereinafter mentioned, authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, being bonds of the United States described in an act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt."

Now, therefore, the said parties of the second part hereby agree to sell and deliver to the United States 3,500,000 ounces of standard gold coin of the United States, at the rate of $17.80441 per ounce, payable in United States 4 per cent thirty-year coupon or registered bonds, said bonds to be dated February 1, 1895, and payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years from date, issued under the acts of Congress of July 14, 1870, January 20, 1871, and January 14, 1875, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly.

First. Such purchase and sale of gold coin being made on the following conditions:

1. At least one-half of all coin deliverable hereunder shall be obtained in and shipped from Europe, but the shipments shall not be required to exceed 500,000 ounces per month, unless the parties of the second part shall consent thereto.

2. All deliveries shall be made at any of the subtreasuries or at any other legal depository of the United States.

3. All gold coins delivered shall be received on the basis of 23.5 grains of standard gold per dollar, if within limit of tolerance.

4. Bonds delivered under this contract are to be delivered free of accrued interest, which is to be assumed and paid by the parties of the second part at the time of their delivery to them.

Second. Should the Secretary of the Treasury desire to offer or sell any bonds of the United States on or before the 1st day of October, 1895, he shall first offer the same to the parties of the second part; but thereafter he shall be free from every such obligation to the parties of the second part.

Third. The Secretary of the Treasury hereby reserves the right, within ten days from the date hereof, in case he shall receive authority from Congress therefor, to substitute any bonds of the United States, bearing 3 per cent interest, of which the principal and interest shall be specifically payable in United States gold coin of the present weight and fineness for the bonds herein alluded to; such 3 per cent bonds to be accepted by the parties of the second part at par, i. e., at $18.00466 per ounce of standard gold.

Fourth. No bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part, or either of them, except in payment for coin from time to time received hereunder; whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall and will deliver the bonds as herein provided, at such places as shall be designated by the parties of the second part. Any expense of delivery out of the United States shall be assumed and paid by the parties of the second part.

Fifth. In consideration of the purchase of such coin, the parties of the second part, and their associates hereunder, assume and will bear all the expense and inevitable loss of bringing gold from Europe hereunder; and, as far as lies in their power, will exert all financial influence and will make all legitimate efforts to protect the Treasury of the United States against the withdrawals of gold pending the complete performance of this contract.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands in five parts this 8th day of February, 1895.

J. G. CARLISLE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

AUGUST BELMONT & CO.,

On behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, London, and themselves.

J. P. MORGAN & CO.,

On behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., London, and themselves.

Attest:

W. E. CURTIS.

FRANCIS LYNDEN STETSON.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Owing to the limited time allowed for preparing a report (it being necessary to file the report within a few hours after the bill was agreed upon) the undersigned dissenting members of the committee are precluded from presenting their views with that elaboration which the importance of the subject would otherwise justify; but they beg to state briefly the most important reason which leads them to disapprove of the measure recommended by the majority of the committee.

First. The issue of bonds of any kind is only needed to replenish the gold reserve; and the gold reserve only needs replenishing because the Secretary of the Treasury redeems United States notes and Treasury notes in the kind of coins selected by the note holder. The note holder has no legal right to choose the coin in which the obligation shall be redeemed, but has been permitted to exercise that right by a policy inaugurated by the Treasury Department at or soon after the date of the resumption of specie payment. The opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle, recently given, is clear upon this point. On the 21st of January, 1895, a statement was made before the House Committee on Appropriations by Secretary Carlisle, in a printed report of which will be found the following question and answer:

Mr. SHREVE. I would like to ask you (perhaps not entirely connected with the matter under discussion) what objection there could be to having the option of redeeming either in silver or gold lie with the Treasury instead of the note holder?

Secretary CARLISLE. If that policy had been adopted at the beginning of resumption—and I am not saying this for the purpose of criticizing the action of any of my predecessors, or anybody else—but if the policy of reserving to the Government, at the beginning of resumption, the option of redeeming in gold or silver all its paper presented, I believe it would have worked beneficially, and there would have been no trouble growing out of it, but the Secretaries of the Treasury from the beginning of resumption have pursued a policy of redeeming in gold or silver at the option of the holder of the paper, and if any Secretary had afterwards attempted to change that policy and force silver upon a man who wanted gold, or gold upon a man who wanted silver, and especially if he had made that attempt at such a critical period as we have had in the last two years, my judgment is, it would have been very disastrous. There is a vast difference between establishing a policy at the beginning, and reversing a policy after it has been long established, and especially after the situation has been changed.

No one contends that the executive department of the Government can bind the Government or pledge its faith and credit by the adoption of such a policy. To so hold would be to assert that the Executive can make and repeal laws without the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives. Believing that the Secretary of the Treasury has now by law the right to redeem legal-tender notes by the payment of either gold or silver coin, whichever is most convenient for the Government; and believing that the exercise of this discretion by the Secretary of the Treasury is absolutely necessary to protect the Government from organized and unorganized raids upon the coin reserve, we are not willing to indorse, directly or by implication, the administrative policy which has precipitated the present financial conditions. Neither are we willing, by authorizing bonds for the purchase of gold, to pledge the Government to a policy which discriminates against silver as a standard money and recognizes gold as the only money of ultimate redemption. So long as the note holder is allowed to choose the coin in which he is to be paid, so long will it be futile to attempt to maintain a gold reserve.

Recent experience shows that gold secured by the issue of bonds is at once drawn out by those who are interested in having more bonds issued, and thus the public debt is increased to the detriment of the taxpayer and for the benefit only of those who desire a safe investment for surplus funds. We do not believe that any real advantage will be gained by securing the gold abroad.

It is urged that a change of policy at this time will cause embarrassment. If that be true the blame must be borne by those who first inaugurated the policy and by those who have adhered to it in spite of the clear intent and letter of the law. We have only to consider whether it is wiser to resume an exercise of rights preserved by existing laws or to aggravate our present difficulties by delaying relief and entering upon new experiments. We have no hesitation in declaring it as our conviction that there is no remedy, permanent in character or promising in results, except an immediate exercise by the Secretary of the Treasury of the right to redeem United States notes and Treasury notes in standard silver coin whenever it is more convenient for the Government to do so, and we further believe that the greatest dangers which can possibly attend such a course are infinitely less than the evils which are certain to follow an adherence to the present policy.

Second. If we were willing to authorize the issue of bonds at this time to purchase gold, we would still be opposed to bonds payable specifically in gold, because an issue of such bonds would either pledge the Government to the redemption of all obligations in gold or make a discrimination against coin obligations now outstanding. There is no question that the issue of gold bonds now would at once be followed by a demand for an act making existing bonds payable in gold, and it would be urged that it would be disastrous to depart from the policy of gold bonds when once inaugurated, just as it is now urged that it will be disastrous for the Government to resume a discretion which has been temporarily surrendered to the note holder.

It is impossible to overestimate the evil influence which would be exerted by the issue of gold bonds by the Government, because such action would naturally and necessarily encourage, if not actually compel the issue of gold bonds by all public and private corporations and the making of gold contracts by individuals generally. Such an increased strain upon gold would manifest itself in a further rise in the purchasing power of the dollar and in a further and distressing addition to the load of debt now borne by the people.

Third. If we were in favor of an issue of gold bonds we would still be opposed to the issue of bonds running for thirty years. According to the terms of the contract the bond purchasers agree to accept 3 per cent gold bonds without mentioning the date of payment, but it can not be doubted that the purchasers will insist upon a thirty-year bond if discretion is given to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue such a bond.

Fourth. If we were willing to authorize the issue of thirty-year gold bonds we would still be opposed to recognizing or ratifying a contract as harsh in its terms and as imperious in its demands as the contract insisted upon by the bond purchasers.

Fifth. If we were willing to approve of such a contract under ordinary circumstances we would still be opposed to approving it when made by a sovereign Government with foreign financiers under circumstances which suggest a desire upon the part of the subjects of another country to purchase a change in the financial policy of this nation for a sum stated.

These are some of the reasons which lead us to withhold our support from the measure recommended by a majority of the committee, and they are, in our judgment, sufficient to justify our dissent. If further reasons were necessary they might be found in the fact that the contract provides for the sale of bonds at about 104, which would sell in the market at about 119; in the fact that the contract agrees to sell thirty-year gold bonds, drawing 3 per cent interest, for less than the Government three months ago sold twelve-year coin bonds, and in the additional fact that foreign investors are by the contract given a preference over American investors in the purchase of any bonds which may be issued before next October, and are also given a preference now over the American investors who but a short time ago stood ready to purchase more bonds than were then offered.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

JUSTIN R. WHITING.

Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. WHEELER, while dissenting from the majority of the committee, reserve an expression of their views until they have an opportunity to present them more at length upon the floor of the House.

BERING SEA CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in regard to an appropriation for the payment by the United States of claims to be made by Great Britain arising out of the Bering Sea controversy; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN UNIVERSITY.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8696) to amend the act to incorporate the American University. This bill has received the approval of the District Commissioners, but has not been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], and proposes an amendment (which that gentleman will explain if necessary) to the charter of the American University.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to incorporate the American University, approved February 24, 1890, be amended by striking out the following words, namely: "to choose a board of trustees, consisting of not more than fifty, of whom fifteen shall constitute a quorum to do business," and by inserting in lieu thereof the following words, namely: "and the incorporators aforesaid, their associates and successors, who shall possess the qualifications herein required, shall constitute a board of trustees, by which the business of said corporation shall be transacted, which board shall hereafter consist of not less than 40 nor more than 50 persons, 11 of whom shall constitute a quorum to do business."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROMOTION OF ANATOMICAL SCIENCE.

Mr. HEARD. I now call up the bill (H. R. 4693) for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia.

The bill, with the amendments proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any public officer or officers, whether directors, trustees, superintendents, wardens, keepers, or managers, having lawful charge of or control over any hospital, prison, jail, or morgue within the District of Columbia, may, with the approval of the health officer of said District, deliver to the duly authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the District of Columbia the bodies of such deceased persons as are required to be buried at the public expense, said bodies to be distributed among the several colleges in proportion to the number of students in each: Provided, however, That if the deceased person, during his last illness, requested to be buried, or if within forty-eight hours after his death any person claiming to be, and satisfying the health officer that he is, a relative by blood or marriage or friend of the deceased, asks to have the body buried, or if such deceased person was a stranger or traveler who suddenly died, the body shall not be so delivered, but shall be buried.

Sec. 2. That before the bodies of such deceased persons as are mentioned in the first section shall be delivered to the authorized agents of any medical college in the District of Columbia notice shall be given by the person or persons having lawful charge of said bodies to the relative or friend of the deceased, if known; if not known, the death of the deceased shall be published at least once in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, in which publication the full name of the deceased person shall, if possible, be given, and if such name be not known a description of the person and apparel of the deceased, with information of the place where they may be seen, the expenses of such publication to be paid as other expenses of the District of Columbia are paid: Provided, That the persons named in the first section shall not deliver the body of the deceased, as provided in this act, until at least thirty-six hours shall have elapsed since the death of said deceased and giving of said notice or the publication of the same.

Sec. 3. That every person who shall have been duly authorized by the faculty of any medical college in the District of Columbia to receive such dead bodies shall, before so receiving them, give to the health officer of said District a bond in the sum of $200, with surety satisfactory to said health officer, and conditioned that each dead body shall be used only for the promotion of anatomical and surgical knowledge within the said District of Columbia, and that after having been so used the remains thereof shall be decently buried; and whosoever shall use such body or bodies for any purpose other than that aforesaid, or shall remove the same beyond the limits of the District of Columbia, and whosoever shall sell or buy such body or bodies, or in any way traffic in the same, or who shall disturb or remove bodies from graves in which they have been buried, or who shall disregard the expressed wishes of the deceased, or of his or her friends, where such wishes may be disclosed, as provided for in section 1 of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term not less than two nor more than three years, at hard labor, in the jail of said District.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EAST WASHINGTON BELT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. HEARD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. SWANSON in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with, as has been done in the cases of several bills of this character. The bill is in the exact form which the Commissioners have adopted for bills of this character.

There being no objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to authorize the building of a street railway in East Washington. The route of this road, as described in the bill, is as follows:

Beginning at a point at or near the junction of M street and Florida avenue northeast, and extending thence along M street to Third street east, thence along said Third street southerly to Virginia avenue southeast, thence along said Virginia avenue southeasterly to I street, thence along said I street easterly to Thirteenth street and Georgia avenue southeast, thence along Thirteenth street northerly to Tennessee avenue, thence along said Tennessee avenue northeasterly to Fourteenth street, thence along said Fourteenth street northerly to Florida avenue, and thence along Florida avenue northwesterly to M street, the point of beginning.

This line of road is almost unanimously approved by the people of East Washington. The bill has been approved, substantially in its present form, by the Commissioners of the District, and has been unanimously agreed to by the District Committee, who believe that no proposition made at this session of Congress for the building of a street-car line in this District has had more merit than this.

Before the bill is read by paragraphs, I ask the reading of the report in order that the House may see the importance of the construction of this road to the people of East Washington. The schools, churches, and other institutions there will be greatly served by it, and the project is almost unanimously approved by them.

The report (by Mr. COOPER of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company, have had the same under consideration and recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment.

The section of the city of Washington known as East Washington contains, according to the last census, a population of between 70,000 and 75,000 people. In this entire section there is not at present a single railroad line running north and south, although there are some four or five roads which traverse it from east to west. The railroad proposed to be incorporated in this bill is to be a belt line crossing these east and west lines. It will parallel no other track, but will afford quick and convenient transportation to the large number of persons who reside in the northeast and southeast part of the city and who are at present deprived of this accommodation.

The demand for the construction of a road of this nature is almost universal. The committee has received petitions from hundreds of residents and property owners in East Washington, recommending prompt and favorable action, while the protests have been confined to a few names. Under the present conditions it is impossible to cross from the Deaf and Dumb Institute on the north to the navy-yard on the south, for instance, or from intermediate points, without making a long and circuitous journey into the western part of the city, at the expense of considerable time and several car fares. With the construction of the proposed road the connection between these extreme north and south points in East Washington will be made in a few minutes and for a single fare.

The project has received the indorsement of the Citizens' Association of Northeast Washington; of President Galludet of the Deaf and Dumb Institute; of the medical director in charge of the Marine Hospital, and of representatives of all the leading commercial, educational, and religious interests in the section which this road will benefit. Mr. A. T. Stuart, the supervising principal of the school division which includes the East Washington schools, writes that it will be a great public convenience, and will materially add to the usefulness and growth of the Eastern High School by enabling the scholars to reach the building in which that school is located. Hon. James P. Willett, the postmaster of the city of Washington, in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, says:

"This road is intended to be run from the northeastern to the southeastern part of the city, and by so doing it will be of immense advantage to the postal service of Washington."

"In East Washington, where our most important station is located, the assistance received by us from the railways is very small, as the lines run only from east to west, and vice versa. Hence, should a carrier be in the extreme northeastern part of the District and desire to make a quick trip to the East Capitol station, he would be unable to do so except by a circuitous route."

"On the contrary, should the projected road be built, the benefit that would accrue to the East Capitol station would be very great and would obviate what will otherwise be the inevitable outcome (as the volume of business is constantly increasing), an increase in the force of the East Capitol station, which will be necessary to properly dispose of current mail matter."

The committee believe that the bill, which has been framed upon the form adopted by the committee for incorporations of this nature, is surrounded with sufficient safeguards to protect the interests of the District government and of the District people, but realize that the road will fall short of the full measure of its proposed benefit unless reciprocal transfers for one fare with roads crossing its tracks are made obligatory. An amendment to this effect is therefore incorporated in the bill.

The committee also append a list of the schoolhouses, churches, and other public and private buildings directly upon or adjoining the projected line which can not be reached at present from the north or south by any railroad, as indicating the widespread necessity for the construction of the belt-line roads.

Mr. HEARD (before the reading of the report was concluded). I ask special attention to that portion of the report which shows that all the street railways which this belt line will touch are required to make reciprocal free transfers with this road. The managers of these different roads have expressed their willingness to do this; and this bill requires them to carry out that agreement.

A MEMBER. They are to make free transfers?

Mr. HEARD. Free transfers.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. HEARD. I ask for the reading of the bill by sections.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Henry L. E. Johnson, Henry L. West, Calderon Carlisle, William P. C. Hazen, Frank P. Weller, Robert M. Larnor, and Oscar Luckett, all of the city of Washington and District of Columbia, and their associates, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate and politic under the name of the "East Washington Belt Line Railway Company," and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and make and have a common seal and the same alter at their pleasure; and houses, boiler house or houses, and all other buildings necessary for the successful operation of a horse, cable, or underground electric-motor railway. Said corporation shall receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for each continuous ride between all points of its line, and shall sell 6 tickets for 25 cents, and make arrangements with all existing railway companies in the District of Columbia for the interchange of tickets in payment of fare on its road. Said railway shall be constructed in a substantial and durable manner, and all rails, electric and mechanical appliances, conduits, stations, etc., shall be of approved pattern.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Insert after the word "road" in line 9:

"And shall enter into reciprocal transfer arrangements with all street railways with which its lines connect or intersect for one fare for each continuous ride, and on failure of any such roads to so agree, said road may apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia to enforce said agreement; and said court is hereby granted power and jurisdiction to compel such transfer arrangement and to determine the rights of the several parties as to division of fare or any other controversy growing out of such reciprocal arrangement."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. That section has just been read.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 9 and 10, on page 2, the words "thence along said Third street southerly to Virginia avenue southeast."

Mr. HAINES. How do you propose to fill the gap?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not propose to fill the gap.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska what other street he would suggest as a substitute for Third street? The amendment, of course, would strike out the provision of the bill giving authority to make the west side of this line. I ask if it is his design to offer a substitute for this portion of the bill, placing the line on some other street, or simply if it is his wish to destroy that feature of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I will explain to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Missouri the reasons I have for offering the amendment.

I am informed that the people who own property along Third street are not only not in favor of allowing the construction of this road in front of their property, but are very bitterly opposed to it because of the injury that it would do to their property, and also that some of these persons whose names have been signed to the petition in favor of the line have given no authority whatever to anyone to sign their names. I do not care, therefore, to put anything in place of the provision I strike out, because those who are constructing the line, if this goes out, can tell on what other street it should be located.

But the point I make is this, that the people who live on the street where it is proposed to allow this road to run certainly have some right to consideration in the matter, and that without their consent, or at least a majority of them, this street should not be taken. And I will state to the House that the reason I happen to know anything of this is because the gentleman with whom I room owns property on that street and called my attention to the fact that the majority of owners were opposed to the construction of the line there.

This is a very narrow street. Perhaps the gentleman from Missouri can tell me the distance between the curbs.

Mr. HEARD. I can not; but I am informed that it is the usual width of streets in Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. My impression is that it is 36 feet.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Can they go into the street anyway without the consent of the body of the owners of property?

Mr. BRYAN. Now, my proposition is to strike out the authority given here for the construction of this line on Third street between the points mentioned, and for the reasons stated, but also because of the fact that a street which is 36 feet wide between the curbs, if there be two railroad tracks allowed in the middle of it, will practically be destroyed in value, at least for residence purposes.

A gentleman there took the trouble to make a memorandum based upon inquiries, and finds that the owners of 1,604 feet of property fronting on this street are opposed to the construction of the line there—

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman state on what part of the line they live?

Mr. BRYAN. I think I have that statement here, too, and will give it presently. This gentleman also stated that there are but 1,027 feet of property owned by persons who are in favor of the line; and I have here the letters or statements from two or three persons whose names appear on the petition who deny that they are in favor of it. Mrs. Mary S. Eckels says that she is the owner of No. 300 Third street, and that her name was affixed to the petition against the cable road; that she is violently opposed to it, and gave no authority whatever to any person to sign her name to a petition favoring the road.

Mr. PENCE. Are you sure her name appears on the petition?

Mr. BRYAN. I have not compared it, but I presume so from the statement. Here is another man who writes stating that the petition in favor of the said road was not signed by him and was not signed by his authority. Another, Mary A. Phelan, says her name was signed there improperly, and she is violently opposed to the proposition.

Now, I do not know how the House may feel about this, but it seems to me that if you are going to put a street-car line over there, and against the protest of the people living on either side of it, and whose property is to be affected by it, that it ought not to be done, at least with as small a House as we have at the present time.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, all I can say in reply to the gentleman from Nebraska is that of course if he insists on this amendment, or any other of the same kind, he could probably block the proceedings here to-day. If it is the purpose to insist upon the amendment I shall feel obliged to let this matter go over.

I want to say, however, in justification of the acts of the committee, that it has been represented to us by the East Washington Association, the president, Mr. Tucker, Mr. Frizzell, and others, that the people of East Washington are almost a unit in favor of this road. They said that there were a few protestants on Third street, whose property lies between the roads running east and west, they being supplied with railway facilities by the Washington and Georgetown, the Metropolitan, and the Eckington, and perhaps some other roads, and that they are not in favor of this bill. But the representations that come to us indicate that there is an overwhelming majority of the people there who are in favor of the road. That I believe to be a fact.

Mr. BRYAN. I have no doubt that the people on the east side here, on the hill, desire some such street-car line, but the question is whether the people who do not live on the street should be allowed to secure the line to the disadvantage of the people who do live on the street. Is it not possible to find some place to cross where the streets are wide enough so that the value of the property will not be destroyed by the taking up of the streets?

Mr. HEARD. If the question is addressed to me, I will say that I deny absolutely that it will destroy or, in my judgment, impair the value of the property. I have been on this committee for ten years and I have never yet known a street railway to be laid out on any street in the city where it was not contended by some of the parties that it would destroy their property, although the result has been generally, I believe, if not universally, to advance the value of the property.

But whether that be the case or not, there is nobody living on any street in a residence portion of the city who, however much he may desire a street railway, would not prefer to have it on the next block instead of on his own; but the question is whether or not these people in East Washington, who have considered this matter and know the needs of that community, are not better qualified to decide the question of where it would be for the greatest public convenience and the least personal inconvenience to have the line located. I think they are better qualified even than the committee, or this House, and it is greatly on their representations that we base our action in recommending this bill.

I do not know whether there are any other streets over there which are wider than this or not. That is about the average width inside the curb, because, as the gentleman probably knows, years ago the District government, in order to save the expense of keeping up wide streets, narrowed the streets by widening the sidewalks, and they have made the streets very much narrower between the curbs than they originally were. But the application of that rule is universal, especially in that section.

Mr. BRYAN. If the street is not wide enough to allow two tracks without injury to the property, it is possible they might do as is done in some cases in this city, go down on one street and go back on another. While it is true that a street-car track is an advantage to a neighborhood, yet if the street is so narrow that practically the entire street is taken up by the track, so that the people can not drive along the street without fear of running into a street car, there is no question but it does injure the value of the property. The gentleman has said that the people up in that end of the town know best whether they want the track or not. They may be very anxious, living on other streets, to have the track put on this street. You know the old saying that the best place for a boil is on somebody else. They may be willing to have the tracks laid on this street if they have no property there.

Mr. HEARD. I am satisfied that they would prefer of course to have the line run along their neighbors' block instead of their own; but the East Washington Association, I believe, embraces a large proportion of the business men and most of the property owners over there, and they represent that this would give by all odds greater satisfaction than any other location.

Mr. BRYAN. If these people live on some other street, undoubtedly they think so.

Mr. HEARD. I concede that it is very often a question of selfishness, to some extent.

Mr. BRYAN. We ought to consider the wishes of the people on the street, whose property would be affected by this line.

Mr. HEARD. If that was done absolutely in every case there never would be another street railroad, because there would always be some objectors.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] to the route proposed in the bill. The line extends from Florida avenue north to Virginia avenue south, a distance of certainly a mile and a half.

Mr. HEARD. About 2 miles.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Nearly 2 miles, and the gentleman has presented protests from only 1,600 feet of the ownership of that 2 miles. To my mind that seems to be conclusive that the protestants are not very numerous in comparison with the whole distance to be considered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The objection of one person ought not to stop this.

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly not; but these people live on Third street, between Maryland avenue and Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. HEARD. Right between these other railroads, where they have got three railroads now. They have plenty of accommodation and have no need for this new line.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri believe that this road ought to be put down on that particular street, to the injury of the property there, against the protests of the people who live there?

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman that we never could find a place to run the line that would satisfy everybody, but I do not know that in my whole lifetime I have known a bill to be presented to this House where there was a distance of frontage of probably 20,000 feet with only 1,600 feet protesting, as is the fact in this case. As has been stated, the protestants live between the Pennsylvania avenue line (the Washington and Georgetown line) and the Eckington road.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And the Metropolitan.

Mr. HEARD. Within a distance of a few squares, where they have three lines running near them. They have first-class accommodations, and do not need this line, as the great body of the people over there do who have petitioned in favor of it.

Now, as is found in the report, this road will reach eleven or twelve schools and a number of churches. I think there are about 10,000 people interested in the schools alone that will be benefited by the establishment of the road, as there will be eleven or twelve schools reached by this line. It presents to the House strong claims for consideration on its merits as being a public benefit of decided character.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the matter being settled at this time. Let it come up upon the next District day.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There will be no more District days. I would suggest to my friend that two weeks from now would bring us to the 27th, and that would only be four or five days before adjournment, when it will be utterly impossible to get another District day on account of the pressure of public business at that time. It strikes me that the gentleman ought not to do any more in the matter than I confess he has done very properly in making his protest. But in view of the lateness of the session and the importance of the measure we ought to take a vote upon it and let it go through.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall insist on a vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—yeas 15, yeas 40.

Mr. BRYAN. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of no quorum?

Mr. BRYAN. I think it had better go over for a day or two. I shall not object to gentlemen asking for unanimous consent for its consideration in two or three days from now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If it goes over to-day, it goes over for fourteen days.

Mr. BRYAN. What was the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The yeas were 15; the yeas 40.

Mr. BRYAN. I withdraw the point of no quorum. I will call the matter to the attention of Senators if I find the majority of property owners are opposed to this line, as I am informed they are.

Mr. HEPBURN. In line 20, page 2, I move to strike out the word "horse," and wherever else it occurs in the bill.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 20, page 2, strike out the word "horse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the said railway herein authorized to be built shall be completed and in operation within three years from the passage of this act, and in default of such completion within the time in this section specified, all rights, franchises, and privileges granted by this act shall immediately determine.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I move to insert, after the words "shall be," line 6, section 6, the words "commenced within nine months and be;" and in the same line strike out the word "three" and insert "two."

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "be," in line 6, section 6, page 11, insert the following: "Commenced within nine months and be;" and in the same line strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read, "shall be commenced within nine months and be completed and in operation within two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to offer the following as section 7, and then I will ask to have section 7 changed to section 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That an additional one year is hereby given to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company for the removal of the overhead trolley wires on New York avenue.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I just want to say that that road is putting down the underground electric system, and intends to put it on all its system, as I am informed; but they can not in the time now allowed them put it down along New York avenue and its suburban portion, and they ask this extension in order to complete putting down the underground line, and then apply it to the whole system.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I now ask that section 7 be changed to section 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, in order that the bill may conform to the amendments that have already been made, these words, in lines 24 and 25, page 2, should be stricken out, namely: "A stable or stables for horses and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment which has been reported in section 1.

Mr. HEARD. What is that?

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "road," in line 9, page 3, insert the following: "And shall enter into reciprocal transfer arrangements with all street railroads with which its lines connect or intersect for one fare for each continuous ride, and on failure of any such roads to so agree said road may apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia to enforce said agreement; and said court is hereby granted power and jurisdiction to compel such transfer arrangement and to determine the rights of the several parties as to division of fare or any other controversy growing out of such reciprocal arrangement."

Mr. HEARD. That is the amendment to which I called the attention of the committee. It is an important one, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SWANSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8057, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and that as amended it do pass.

Mr. HEARD. I move that the amendments be voted on in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7899) to bridge the Newark Bay; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 261) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of the appropriation made in the river and harbor act of 1894 for St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 116) for the erection of a public building at Brookline, Mass.; and

A bill (H. R. 7731) for the relief of certain Winnebago Indians in Minnesota.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 4658) granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea; and

A bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution providing for the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions during the last ten days of any Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 5300) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5740) incorporating the Society of American Florists.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8234) "making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. HALE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HARMER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for five days, on account of illness of his son.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MAHON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Charles F. Gillies, major Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, there being no adverse report by the Committee on Military Affairs.

JURIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, but relating to the District of Columbia, a bill which the Judiciary Committee have requested us to try to secure the passage of to-day. It relates to juries in this District, and is regarded by the bar and by the courts as very important.

The bill (H. R. 8724) to provide for the striking of juries in the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any party to an action at law pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia may demand a struck jury for the trial of an issue of fact therein by filing a precept with the clerk of said court. Thereupon the said clerk shall take to his assistance the marshal of the said District, and the said clerk and said marshal shall select from persons who are qualified to serve as jurors in the said District the names of forty persons, impartial between the parties, who, from their intelligence and sound judgment, are believed to be well qualified to try the cause. The said clerk shall preserve a list of the persons so selected, and shall give four days' notice to both parties or the attorneys of record of the time of striking the jury, and shall furnish to each person so notified at the same time a true copy of such list. At the time designated in the said notice to the parties or their attorneys as aforesaid the clerk shall attend at his office for the purpose of striking the jury, when the party demanding the jury, or his agent or his attorney, shall strike off one name from the list, and the opposite party, his agent or attorney, another, and so on, alternately, until each shall have struck off twelve. If either party fail or refuse to attend or strike, the clerk shall strike for him. When 24 names shall have been stricken off, the clerk shall make a fair copy of the remaining 16 names, they to be the list of jurors struck for the trial for the cause, and deliver a certified list of the same to the marshal, together with the venire facias commanding him to summon such persons named in the said list as jurors, and shall annex the names contained in said list to the said venire, and the said marshal shall thereupon summon the persons named as commanded in the said writ, and shall return the said list with the venire. Upon the trial of the cause the names of the jurors shall be called as they stand upon the panel, which order must be the same as that of the list at the time of striking the jury, and the first twelve of those who appear and are not challenged for cause or set aside by the court shall be the jury and shall be sworn as such; but if the jury be not made up from such 16 jurors, the marshal shall, under the direction of the court, fill up the panel from the bystanders, or, on motion of either party, the court shall select the persons to fill the panel and issue a special venire returnable therefor forthwith. The party so calling for a special jury shall pay the expenses occasioned by the obtaining and trial of the cause by such special jury, and the same shall not be allowed to him as part of the costs in the case unless the court shall immediately after the trial of the cause certify upon the record that the said cause was proper to be tried by a special jury. The court, in its discretion, may order the payment of costs of striking and summoning a special jury, or any part thereof, before the trial of the cause wherein such jury shall be summoned.

Mr. HEARD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is reported by the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously, and I do not think any explanation is necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of another measure reported by the Judiciary Committee, a Senate bill to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District, and to regulate proceedings before them.

The bill (S. 655) was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 655) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and to regulate the proceedings before them.

Be it enacted, etc. That justices of the peace of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all civil pleas and actions, including attachment and replevin, when the amount claimed to be due or the value of the property sought to be recovered shall not exceed $300, except in cases where the title to real estate is in issue, actions for malicious prosecution, actions against justices of the peace or other officers for misconduct in office, and actions for slander, verbal or written, and actions for damages for breaches of promise to marry.

SEC. 2. That such jurisdiction shall be exclusive original jurisdiction where the amount claimed to be due or the value of the property sought to be recovered shall not exceed $100, and original and concurrent with the supreme court of the District of Columbia where the amount claimed to be due or the value of the property sought to be recovered is more than $100, but does not exceed $300; and where the sum claimed exceeds $30 either party shall be entitled to a trial by jury.

SEC. 3. That no appeal shall be allowed from the judgment of a justice of the peace in any common-law action unless the matter in demand in such action or pleaded in set-off thereto shall exceed the sum of $5, nor unless the appellant, with sufficient surety, approved by the justice, enters into an undertaking to pay and satisfy whatever final judgment may be recovered in the appellate court.

SEC. 4. That writs of attachment shall be issued by justices of the peace whenever the plaintiff, his agent, or attorney shall file with said justice of the peace, whether at the commencement or during the pendency of a suit, an affidavit, supported by the testimony of one or more witnesses, showing the grounds upon which he bases his claim, and also setting forth that the plaintiff has a just right to recover against the defendant what he claims in his said affidavit, and also stating, either first, that the defendant is a nonresident of the District, or, second, that the defendant evades the service of ordinary process by concealing himself or by withdrawing from the District temporarily, or, third, that he has removed or is about to remove some of his property from the District so as to defeat just demands against him, and shall file his (plaintiff's) undertaking with sufficient surety, to be approved by said justice of the peace, to make good all costs and damages which the defendant may sustain by reason of the wrongful suing out of the attachment.

SEC. 5. That if the defendant, his agent, or attorney shall file an affidavit traversing the plaintiff's affidavit, the justice of the peace shall determine whether the facts set forth in the plaintiff's affidavit are true, and whether there was just ground for issuing the writ of attachment, and if the facts do not sustain the affidavit the justice of the peace shall quash the writ of attachment or garnishment, and this issue may be tried by said justice of the peace summarily.

SEC. 6. That the thing attached shall not be discharged from the custody of the officer seizing it until the defendant shall deliver to the said justice of the peace, to be filed in the cause, his undertaking, with sufficient surety to satisfy and pay the final judgment against him: Provided, however, That the principal and surety on such undertaking shall not be liable in a greater sum than the value of the thing discharged from such attachment as aforesaid, and for costs and disbursements.

SEC. 7. That if the defendant fail to execute such undertaking provided for in the last preceding section, and it shall appear from the testimony of disinterested witnesses that any of the property is of a perishable nature, or if the parties to the cause file their consent in writing therefor, the justice may issue his order directing the officer having custody thereof to dispose of the same as upon execution, and the money realized therefrom shall be paid over to the justice and applied as other money realized from the sale of the property attached is applied.

SEC. 8. That in case the defendant be found liable to the plaintiff's claim, in whole or in part, the final judgment shall be that the plaintiff recover against the defendant and his sureties.

SEC. 9. That publication may be substituted for personal service of process upon any defendant who can not be found in suits by attachment.

SEC. 10. That no order for the substitution of publication for personal service shall be made till a summons for the defendant shall have been issued and returned "not to be found."

SEC. 11. That the order of publication shall be in the following or equivalent form:

IN JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Before ———, esq., a justice of the peace.

A B, plaintiff, vs. C D, defendant. No. —

A summons in due form having been issued out of this court to a lawful constable of this District for the said defendant, and the same having been by said constable returned "not to be found," it is hereby ordered that said defendant cause his appearance to be entered herein on or before the first Tuesday —, 189 —, otherwise the cause will be proceeded with as in case of default.

SEC. 12. That the declaration in replevin shall be in the following or equivalent form:

The plaintiff sues the defendant for (wrongfully taking and detaining) (unjustly detaining) his, said plaintiff's, goods and chattels, to wit: (describe them) of the value of ——— dollars. And the plaintiff claims that the same be taken and delivered to him; or, if they are eloiigned, that he may have judgment of their said value, and all mesne profits and damages, which he estimates at ——— dollars, besides costs.

SEC. 13. That at the time of filing the declaration in replevin, the plaintiff, his agent, or attorney shall file an affidavit, sworn to before the said justice of the peace, stating:

First. That according to affiant's information and belief the plaintiff is entitled to recover possession of chattels proposed to be replevied, being the same described in the declaration.

Second. That the defendant has seized and detains, or detains, the same.

Third. That said chattels were not subject to such seizure or detention, and were not taken upon any writ of replevin.

SEC. 14. That the plaintiff shall at the same time enter into an undertaking with surety, approved by said justice of the peace, to abide by and perform the judgment of the said justice's court in the premises.

SEC. 15. That if the officer's return of the writ of replevin be that he has served the defendant with copies of the declaration, notice to plead, and summons, but that he could not get possession of the goods and chattels sued for, the plaintiff may prosecute the action for the value of the same and damage for detention, or he may renew the writ in order to get possession of the goods and chattels themselves.

SEC. 16. That if the officer's return be that he has taken possession of the goods and chattels sued for, but that the defendant is not to be found, the said justice of the peace may order that the defendant appear to the action by some fixed day, and of this order the justice of the peace shall cause notice to be given by publication in some newspaper of the District at least three times, the first of which shall be at least twenty days before the day fixed for the defendant's appearance.

SEC. 17. That if the defendant fails to appear the court may proceed as in case of default after personal service.

SEC. 18. That if the defendant appear he may plead not guilty, in which case all special matters of defense may be given in evidence, or he may plead specially.

SEC. 19. That whether defendant plead and the issue thereon joined is found against him, or his plea is held bad on demurrer, or he make default after personal service or after publication, the plaintiff's damages shall be ascertained on the trial, and the damages shall be the full value of the goods, if eloiigned by the defendant, including in every case the loss sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the detention, and judgment shall pass for the plaintiff accordingly.

SEC. 20. That if the issue be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff dis-miss or fail to prosecute his suit, the judgment shall be that the goods, if delivered to the plaintiff, be returned to the defendant, with damages, or, on failure, that the defendant recover against the plaintiff and his surety the damages by him sustained, to be assessed by the jury trying the issue, or by the justice trying the case without a jury, or, where the plaintiff dismisses or fails to prosecute his suit, by the justice.

SEC. 21. That if the defendant has eloiigned the things sued for the justice or the jury trying the case may assess such damages as may compel the defendant to return the things.

SEC. 22. That the judgment in such cases shall be that the plaintiff recover against the defendant the value of the goods as found, to be discharged by the return of the things with damages for detention, which shall also be assessed by the justice or jury trying the case.

SEC. 23. That when personal property is taken on execution or attachment issued by a justice of the peace, and such property is claimed by a person other than a defendant therein, or is claimed by the defendant to be property exempt from execution, and such claimant shall give notice in writing to the constable of his claim to such property, or that it is exempt as aforesaid, the constable shall notify the plaintiff in such writ, or his agent or attorney, of such claim, and shall also notify such plaintiff and the claimant before what justice and at what time and place a trial of the right of property shall be had.

SEC. 24. That the trial of the right of property in such cases shall be before the justice of the peace who issued such writ, unless removed by change of venue, as now provided by law; or, if he should be unable to attend to such trial, before some other justice of the peace in the said District.

SEC. 25. That the justice shall enter such cases on his docket, and the trial shall be had therein in the same manner as in other trials before justices of the peace; and a change of venue may be taken as in other cases.

SEC. 26. That in case the property shall appear to belong to the claimant, or to be exempt from execution, judgment shall be entered against the plaintiff in the execution or attachment for costs, and the property levied upon shall be released. If it shall appear that the property does not belong to the claimant, or is not so exempt as aforesaid, judgment shall be entered against said claimant for costs, including such additional costs as shall have been made by the delay in the execution of such writ.

SEC. 27. That an appeal may be taken as in other cases, providing the same is prayed on the day of the entering of judgment, and the bond shall be given within six days, Sunday exclusive, from the time of entering of the judgment.

SEC. 28. That the judgment in such cases shall be a complete indemnity to the constable in proceeding to sell or return any such property; and in case of appeal the constable shall return such property unless the party claiming, or the defendant in the execution, or his agent, shall enter into an undertaking with sufficient security to be approved by the justice for the delivery of such property to the officer if the judgment of the court shall be against the party entering into such undertaking.

SEC. 29. That the supreme court of the District is hereby authorized to make and establish such additional rules of practice and prescribe forms of process and proceedings rendered necessary by this act, and to alter and amend the same as it may from time to time deem advisable.

SEC. 30. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein shall be construed to take away and limit the jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace by chapter 19 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and there has been no protest against it by anybody in the District as far as I have heard.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The House then, on motion of Mr. HEARD (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m. Thursday.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 14, 1895.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. WALSH presented the credentials of Augustus O. Bacon, chosen by the legislature of the State of Georgia a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1895.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 4658) granting a pension to Hiram B. Rhea; and

A bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 18, 1891.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 655) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and to regulate the proceedings before them; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 128) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1667) to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver, Colo.;

A bill (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in the State of Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 113) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the flags of certain regiments of Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th instant calling for information as to what foreign nations, if any, have adopted or refused to adopt the regulations for preventing collisions at sea, etc., certain correspondence relating to the subject; which, on the motion of Mr. VEST, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant calling for all reports as to surveys for improving Columbia River, Oregon and Washington, at Three Mile Rapids, and the construction and equipment of a boat railway from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, etc., a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with letters from Maj. James C. Post, Corps of Engineers, respecting the survey for locating the proposed boat railway; which, on the motion of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes, a list embracing the names of the clerks and other persons employed in the several bureaus of that Department during the calendar year ended December 31, 1894.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see that the communication transmits simply a list of names contained in the roll of paper on the Secretary's desk. I suggest that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be printed and that the roll of names be referred to the Committee on Printing to determine whether it shall be printed or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered.

THE TREASURY RESERVE FUND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 31st ultimo calling for information as to what portion of the reserve (so called) of $100,000,000 in the Treasury on January 1, 1893, has been used for current expenditures, and how much of the fund realized from the recent sale of bonds has been so used, and the amount required to replace the money so used, etc.; statements of the assets of the Treasury on January 1, 1893, in excess of the liabilities on account of gold certificates, silver certificates, currency certificates, and Treasury notes of 1890.

The Secretary proceeded to read the communication.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that by unanimous consent the further reading of the communication be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD and in document form as well.

Mr. COCKRELL. And referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORMAN. And referred to the Committee on Finance.

Let it be printed in document form, with a special order to have it printed and on the desks of Senators to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The communication from the Secretary of the Treasury is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY. Washington, D. C., February 13, 1895.

To the President of the Senate:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following Senate resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what portion of the reserve (so called) of $100,000,000 in the Treasury on January 1, 1893, has been used for current expenditures, and how much of the fund realized from the recent sales of bonds has been so used, and the amount required to replace the money so used."

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate the actual available cash balances in the Treasury applicable to current expenditures of the Government on January 1, 1894, giving specifically the amount, respectively, of gold coin and bullion, less all outstanding gold certificates and standard silver dollars, less outstanding silver certificates and current subsidiary silver coin, United States notes, less currency certificates outstanding, and Treasury notes of July 14, 1890, and national bank notes less national bank 5 per cent fund, and showing the aggregate of such available cash balances not including but stating the actual amount of the gold in the Treasury as the reserve or redemption fund, and the actual amount of the national bank-note redemption fund, and the outstanding checks and drafts; and also a like statement respecting all the foregoing items on the 1st day of July, 1893."

"Second. The actual amount of revenue received from customs, internal revenue, and miscellaneous sources in separate items, and also the amounts received from the sale of United States bonds from the 1st day of January, 1894, to the 31st day of December, 1894, both days inclusive."

"Third. A statement showing in detail all payments from the Treasury on every account except the redemption of United States and Treasury notes from the 1st day of January, 1894, to the 31st day of December, 1894, both days inclusive, and stating specifically the amount paid during that time for interest on the public debt, and the amount of payments on account of the sinking fund, the amount of payments on account of pensions, rivers and harbors, and public buildings."

"Fourth. A statement showing the balance of cash in the Treasury on the 31st day of December, 1894, available for the current expenses of the Government, but not including the gold-reserve fund, and a statement showing of what this balance consists—the amount in each class of notes and the amount in fractional coin."

"Fifth. The actual amount of gold in the Treasury on the 1st day of July and January, 1894, applicable to the redemption fund, the amount of gold received from the sale of bonds or other obligations of the Government from the 1st day of January, 1894, to the 31st day of December, 1894, both inclusive, the amount of Treasury notes and United States notes redeemed in gold between the same dates, and the actual balance of gold on this account on the 31st day of December, 1894, and also the amount of United States notes redeemed or Treasury notes by the payment of gold that have since been paid out of the Treasury for current expenses, and the amount of said notes so redeemed now in the Treasury."

"Sixth. A detailed statement showing the amount of appropriations authorized by various acts of Congress, which, since the 1st day of July, 1893, have not been drawn from the Treasury. In other words, all the obligations of the Government incurred by such authorized expenditures up to and including the 31st day of December, 1894, other than the amount due to the sinking fund."

"Seventh. The amount due to the sinking fund on the 31st day of December, 1894."

In response to the resolution, I have the honor to state:

I.

That the assets of the Treasury on January 1, 1893, in excess of the liabilities on account of gold certificates, silver certificates, currency certificates, and Treasury notes of 1890, were as follows:

Gold reserve	$100,000,000.00
Other monies	70,313,967.46
Total	170,313,967.46

The funds realized from sales of bonds during 1894 were:

Gold and gold certificates	$117,380,282.74
Other moneys	312.09

Total 117,380,594.83

The amounts available, in excess of current receipts, were therefore:

Gold reserve and gold proceeds of bonds	$217,390,282.74
Other moneys	70,314,279.55

Total 287,694,562.29

The assets of the Treasury on January 31, 1895, in excess of gold certificates, silver certificates, currency certificates, and Treasury notes of 1890 were:

Gold reserve	$44,705,067.27
Other moneys	137,986,451.77

Total 182,692,419.04

Hence it appears that the original gold reserve, augmented by the gold proceeds of the sales of bonds, was diminished during the period of twenty-five months to the extent of $172,674,315.47, of which $105,002,143.25 was directly or indirectly devoted to current expenses, and $67,672,172.22, which had been converted into notes by the process of redemption, was still on hand. It is proper to state in this connection that when United States notes or Treasury notes of 1890 are redeemed in gold they are received into and held as part of the general cash assets in the Treasury, the same as any other money belonging to the Government, and under the acts of May 31, 1878, and July 14, 1890, they are paid out when necessary to defray the public expenses. Whenever it has been possible to do so, the redeemed notes have been used to procure gold coin by exchange with banks and other financial institutions, and in this way a large amount of gold was restored to the gold reserve fund during the summer of 1893, and some since that time.

II.

That the assets and liabilities of the Treasury in excess of certificates and Treasury notes outstanding were:

Total receipts 441,534,774.43

(3) The expenditures of the Government (exclusive of postal) from January 1, 1894, to December 31, 1894, were as follows:

Civil and miscellaneous, including $5,290,285.30 for public buildings	$101,809,341.26
War, including $19,291,308.95 for rivers and harbors	52,320,215.13
Navy	31,984,374.37
Indians	9,888,135.99
Pensions	140,164,521.05
Interest on the public debt	28,874,353.44
Redemption of national bank notes	13,575,510.25
Sinking fund	88,202.20

Total expenditures 377,764,663.69

(4) The balance of cash in the Treasury on December 31, 1894, available for the current expenses of the Government, but not including the gold-reserve fund:

Silver dollars and bullion	$7,650,305.23
Fractional silver coin	14,483,636.17
United States notes	34,914,157.53
Treasury notes of 1890	28,369,950.00
National bank notes	4,759,972.19
Minor coin	1,104,186.42
Deposits in banks	15,081,275.09
Bonds and interest paid	12,247.92

Total 106,375,740.55

(5) The actual amount of gold in the Treasury on the 1st day of July and January, 1894, applicable to the redemption fund was as follows:

July 1	$64,873,024.55
January 1	80,891,000.13

The amount of gold received from the sale of United States bonds from January 1, 1894, to December 31, 1894, both inclusive, was $117,380,282.74.

The amount of Treasury notes and United States notes redeemed in gold between the same dates was as follows:

Treasury notes	$17,804,045.00
United States notes	123,941,059.00

Total 141,745,104.00

The actual balance of gold on this account on the 31st day of December, 1894, was $86,244,445.05.

The amount of United States notes and Treasury notes in the Treasury January 1, 1894, exclusive of United States notes held for the redemption of currency certificates outstanding, was $6,289,086. Adding to this $141,745,104, the amount of such notes redeemed to December 31, 1894, as above stated, and $45,117,738, the amount of like redemptions during the following month, gives a total of $193,151,228 of such notes available during the whole period, exclusive of ordinary receipts. The amount of these notes remaining in the Treasury on January 31, 1895, the date of the resolution, was $35,627,989, showing that of the total of $186,862,842 redeemed in gold from January 1, 1894, there had been paid out the sum of $107,523,959, and there was remaining in the Treasury a balance of $79,338,883. Of the amount paid out $67,985,453 was for current expenses, and $9,538,486 was in exchange for other kinds of money, including gold.

(6) The following statement shows the unexpended balances of appropriations July 1, 1894; the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; the total amount available for expenditure July 1, 1894; the amount expended during the six months ending December 31, 1894, and the balance available for expenditure January 1, 1895:

CRIMINAL TRIALS BY COURTS OF THE CHOCTAW NATION.

Mr. PLATT. I hold in my hand a petition which I think is of sufficient importance to entitle me to ask the attention of the Senate to it for a moment. The petition is short. I think the reading of it will perhaps obviate the necessity of any explanation of the circumstances on my part, and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read the petition. It is from certain persons who are now on trial for murder in the Choctaw Nation. It is addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, and is as follows:

Your petitioners, the undersigned, citizens of the Choctaw Nation by blood, but living under the American flag, respectfully represent that they are now on trial by the courts of the Choctaw Nation by indictment on the false charge of murder; that such indictment is due to homicide growing out of a political feud; that eight of your petitioners have already been tried on this charge and convicted of murder, but are now standing a new trial because of the demand of the honorable the Secretary of the Interior; that on their former trial they were tried by an unconstitutional jury. They were not allowed to have any evidence whatever. They were even refused the right to address the jury in their own behalf. They practically were denied the right of appeal, and were informed by the judge on the bench in passing sentence of death on them that they need expect no delay by appeal or otherwise, and they were sentenced to prompt execution; your petitioners further represent that one of their number upon such a tragic mock trial, to wit, Silas Lewis, was actually sentenced and shot, not in accordance with law, through the heart, but through the right side, and was then smothered to death by holding the nostrils and forcibly pressing a handkerchief over the mouth, causing a hideous and cruel death.

Your petitioners are deeply apprehensive of similar treatment and they implore the Government of the United States that the constitutional right of a fair trial shall be secured to them as provided by the Choctaw treaty, and that the right of appeal may be provided from a Choctaw court to the United States court where the judges are free from ignorance, prejudice, or malice.

Your petitioners humbly pray this measure of justice at the hands of the great parent Government in the name of humanity and in the name of God.

Your very humble servants.

Signed by several of the persons who are under indictment.
Mr. President, I wish to say that I believe if all the facts relating to that trial and the execution of that Indian were known they would shock the civilized world. I have here a little photograph [exhibiting] which was taken by an amateur photographer of the scene of the death of the Indian who was executed. It is claimed, and I believe truly, that one of the leading opponents of the political party to which the Indian sentenced to death belonged requested the privilege of shooting the Indian condemned, and that it was granted to him by the court.

The Choctaw law provides that an Indian who is to be executed shall be shot through the heart. This shooting was done at short range. It is scarcely possible that there was any mistake as to the aim of the party who did the killing; but instead of shooting him through the heart he shot him through the right side, and when he fell upon the ground his feet were held and he was smothered to death in about twenty minutes by the holding of a handkerchief to his nose and mouth. Meanwhile the person who had shot him, who was his enemy, was standing by complacently looking on the scene. It is the most horrible thing in my judgment that has ever occurred in the United States under forms of law. I am happy to say that it did not occur under the forms of law of the United States Government, but of the Choctaw tribe, which calls itself a nation and insists that the United States shall recognize it as a nation.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut what date is fixed for the executions which have been postponed?

Mr. PLATT. Nine persons were tried for this offense and sentenced under the circumstances which I believe are truly set up in the petition. Upon a representation that they had had no fair trial, that they had not been allowed to be heard even in their own defense, the Secretary of the Interior, without much law I must confess, insisted that there should be a new trial, and I think went so far as to indicate that if it was neglected the troops of the United States would be used to prevent the execution. So, a new trial was granted by the court, and one person has already been tried the second time. That person was sentenced to death, and was executed, I think, four or five months ago. The Senator from Arkansas may know.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was some time during the fall; in October, I think.

Mr. PLATT. He was executed some time during the fall. The other eight are still to be tried by the same court, and they ask that a law be passed by Congress which will allow them an appeal from that court to the United States court.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. He says that the trial had not taken place under the United States law. Certainly the United States law permits the existence on the soil of the country of these Indian courts which are engaging in these barbarous methods of conducting what is called justice.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that is by stipulation of treaty.

Mr. PLATT. It is. I can not go into that subject. That will come up for discussion in the Senate in a few days. I trust that some bill will come before the Senate which will result in an appeal from these courts to the United States courts, notwithstanding any treaty which may be supposed to prevent it at the present time.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator whether the President has any power of commutation or reprieve or interference under those treaties?

Mr. PLATT. If we admit the contention of the Choctaw Nation and the other Five Civilized Tribes neither the Government of the United States nor the Executive has any power whatever except to guarantee that those governments shall exist. This is their contention.

Mr. President, I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has a bill now under consideration which I hope will result in providing for an appeal from those courts.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to say one word about this matter. The Secretary of the Interior intervened in this case very properly, as I think. I consulted him about the matter myself and advised him to intervene and prevent the execution of this Indian and the others who were then threatened with execution, on the ground that they had not had a fair trial. The trial had been an absolute farce, a disgrace even to the semicivilization of the Indian Territory, and a disgrace to the people of the United States that such a condition of affairs should exist within our borders. But undoubtedly the Secretary of the Interior was powerless by law, if the treaties are to be respected and obeyed and observed, to interfere except in an advisory way. However, he did go so far, and properly, too, I think, as to say that no execution should take place under that judgment. Thereupon, as the Senator from Connecticut states, there was a new trial, which undoubtedly was not in better form or any better calculated to do justice between the parties than the other, and this Indian was again convicted. The Secretary of the Interior then felt that he had gone as far as he could go and that in that case he would have to allow the Indian law to take its course; and he did allow it. The fault is not the fault of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

Mr. TELLER. No; nobody complains of the Secretary of the Interior. He did everything probably that he could do under the circumstances. He would have done more if authority had been given him. He was alive to the situation and anxious to see that justice was done. The fault lies in our allowing those people, in defiance of the true principles of law, to conduct trials in the way they do. There is a controversy between two factions there. It is utterly impossible that one should have any justice in the courts controlled by the other. Everyone who is acquainted with the Indian character understands that the Indian is a savage creature by nature, and the slight civilization that he has taken on in the Indian Territory has not changed his natural condition and disposition very much.

I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that it has reached a point now where it is the duty of the United States to avoid a disgraceful condition and to provide some method by which the Indian courts shall either be wiped out absolutely and jurisdiction taken from them or that there shall be some provision of law by which either the executive or the judicial branch of the Government shall have some review of those so-called courts, which are partial in the extreme and not calculated at any time to do justice to the Indian who is brought before them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and submitted a report thereon; which was referred, with the accompanying report, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 199) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1863, and March 3, 1863, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3194) to amend the record of Simon Rice, of Company A, Sixth Maryland Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1293) to relieve Benjamin F. Church from the charge of desertion, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. LINDSAY on the 13th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself yesterday, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Joint Commission of Congress to Inquire into the Status of Laws Organizing the Executive Departments, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2762) to repeal in part section 229 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2732) granting a pension to William Brown, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2503) for the relief of James Curran, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2664) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary Tassin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 8th ultimo intended to be proposed to the Agricultural appropriation bill, reported adversely thereon; and the amendment was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 12th instant intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

VICTOR HUGO M'CORD.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, reported the following resolution, and submitted a report thereon:

Be it resolved, That the President is hereby requested to continue the investigation and efforts heretofore made by the United States in the matter of the claim of Victor Hugo MacCord, a citizen of the United States, against the Government of Peru, to the end that such an adjustment of said claim may be made as may be warranted by the facts in the case and by the law applicable thereto.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 20) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Mr. CALL. I am compelled to object, and to call for the regular order. I have a resolution of very great importance to my people which I desire to have considered this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection for the present. Bills and joint resolutions are next in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to introduce a bill.

Mr. TURPIE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BATE. Let us get through with the morning business.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator from Indiana will withhold his motion for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Indiana that his motion can not be entertained until after the routine morning business is closed.

FORD'S THEATER DISASTER.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, by the sundry civil appropriation act of last year there was appointed a special joint committee of the two Houses of Congress on the Ford's Theater disaster. I am directed by that committee to report an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for the payment of $5,000 in each case to the heirs or legal representatives of all persons who were instantly killed or who evidently died as the result of injuries received at that time.

I desire to say that all who have died as the result of their injuries have had their cases investigated and are included in this amendment, except the heirs of George Christopher Bollinger and Lydia P. Reynolds.

The cases of those injured are being investigated by the joint committee, but it is very evident that nothing can be done in their cases until the next session of Congress. The inclination of the committee will be to continue its work during the vacation, and I earnestly hope at the next session of Congress that the committee, whatever members may compose it, will be able finally to close this matter.

I make this statement because I know that many Senators have constituents who are interested in the matter, and we are all receiving numerous letters and applications concerning it. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will be prompt to act favorably on this amendment, and at least pay those who have lost their support by the death of their fathers or husbands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in the absence of objection.

PACIFIC COAST STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back favorably an amendment referred to that committee, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment proposes to pay the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada the amount of money paid by those States in the suppression of rebellion, as shown by the report of the Secretary of War, Executive Document No. 11, Fifty-first Congress, first session.

I will state, in a word, that these claims have been very thoroughly investigated by the Secretary of War, the investigation occupying some two years. A bill was introduced heretofore in the Senate and favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs on this subject and passed the Senate at the last Congress. Another bill on the subject has been favorably reported from the committee, and is now on the Calendar of the Senate.

I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, without printing, as the bill is now under consideration, and I hope that committee will insert it in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. STEWART. I think the amendment reported by the Senator from Oregon had better be printed. We may want copies of it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well; I have no objection to the printing of the document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2754) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Oakland, in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2755) to establish wind signal stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2756) for the relief of Oliver M. Blair, administrator of Thomas P. Blair, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 2757) providing for an additional circuit judge in the sixth judicial circuit, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to William Bradshaw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to Ezra J. Riggs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2760) granting a pension to Joseph W. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2761) for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of certain Pennsylvania military organizations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WOLCOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

On motion of Mr. VEST, it was Ordered, That House bill No. 5945 authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT ON DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CORPORATIONS.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate document room

500 copies of Senate Report No. 1379, Fifty-second Congress, second session, being the report of the Select Committee on Incorporated Companies in the District of Columbia.

TAXES UPON DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. LODGE. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to inform the Senate what his present estimate is of the return from the internal-revenue taxes upon distilled spirits; and whether he has any reason to believe that there will be any reduction in the revenue from this source owing to the closing of distilleries; and whether he has any information that would lead him to suppose that such closing of distilleries and consequent reduction of the revenue are likely to occur during the next calendar year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CALL. I make no objection, but I desire to give notice that if there is any debate on the resolution I shall insist on the regular order.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the act (S. 2353) granting right of way to the Forest City and Sioux City Railroad Company through the Sioux Indian Reservation.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 13th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2165) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1890;

An act (S. 1935) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ellery;

An act (S. 828) granting a pension to Julia E. Lock, formerly widow of the late Gen. Daniel McCook; and

An act (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine P. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, deceased.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public school trustees in the District of Columbia, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4704) for the relief of Basil Moreland;

A bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to have established a union street-car passenger station on B street north, between Sixth and Seventh streets;

A bill (H. R. 8427) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 8624) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens;

A bill (H. R. 8696) to amend the act to incorporate the American University;

A bill (H. R. 8698) to authorize the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 8714) to incorporate the Capital Railway Company; and

A bill (H. R. 8724) to provide for the striking of juries in the District of Columbia.

REPORT ON HOMES OF WORKING PEOPLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the eighth special report of the Commissioner of Labor, which relates to "The Housing of the Working People" in different countries.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 14, 1895.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4704) for the relief of Basil Moreland was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to have established a union street-car passenger station on B street north, between Sixth and Seventh streets;

A bill (H. R. 8427) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 8624) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens;

A bill (H. R. 8696) to amend the act to incorporate the American University;

A bill (H. R. 8698) to authorize the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 8714) to incorporate the Capital Railway Company.

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day, which will be read:

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate, whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the United States and is engaged in business herein and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress and whether it owns, either directly or indirectly, any interest in newspapers published in the United States and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, have been expended by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company to influence the legislation of Congress, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after line 12.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be modified as indicated by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us hear the proposed amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the resolution as the Senator modifies it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the United States and is engaged in business therein and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress.

Mr. CALL. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter from the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in the District of Columbia, in behalf of himself and the clergy of the country in support of this resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

905 I STREET NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1895.

HONORED SEN: At a meeting of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of this city, held Monday, February 11, I was directed as the secretary to communicate with you in respect to a matter of much importance. We have learned of the effort which you have been making for some time in the Senate to have that body take some decisive action in regard to the Louisiana Lottery, now doing business at Tampa, Fla., and we desire to assure you, sir, of our fullest sympathy in this matter, and regret that the Senate has treated your effort with such indifference. It is our hope that you will persevere in this matter until some proper action is taken by the Senate that will be in accord with the needs of the case to thwart the unprincipled persons who are engaged in so open a defiance of the law against the lottery.

Go on, sir, and the Lord bless you in your effort.

Respectfully,

ADOLAS ALLEN,

Pastor First Presbyterian Church.

[Attended by the President and Mrs. Cleveland.
To Senator W. CALL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, it is so clearly proper that some reference should be made of this resolution and the proposed amendment, that I now move to refer the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida as it is proposed to be amended to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CALL. I hope that motion will not prevail. It is evidently intended in the interest of the Honduras Lottery Company. [Laughter.] It is not intended, Mr. President, for the purpose of ascertaining anything in regard to the subject.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me, I never heard of the Honduras Lottery Company and care as little about it as I do about the resolution. It is not bothering me half as much as the resolution is bothering the Senate and interfering with the public business. I am perfectly willing to change my motion, if it will please the Senator from Florida, and send the resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices or to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims or to the Private Land Claims Committee, or to perdition. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me a serious word?

Mr. CALL. In one moment.

The Senator from Kentucky, in all his action upon this subject, whether he intends it or not, has been promoting the interests of the lottery company and its operations in the United States. He may think, contrary to the opinion of the great mass of the religious people, contrary to the opinion of all right-thinking people, that the operations of this great corporation are beneficial, and desire to encourage them, and all these motions for reference are to that end and for that purpose.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Florida has so modified this resolution that I think there will be no objection to its passage. I know the only object the Senator from Kentucky had in making his motion was to remove the resolution from the way of the pending appropriation bill, which the Senator desires to have considered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all I want.

Mr. CALL. There is no appropriation bill now before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senate is ready to vote upon the adoption of the resolution, I hope the Senator from Kentucky will give us an opportunity for that vote.

Mr. GORMAN and others. Question!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CALL. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. INBY] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Has the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] voted, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McPHERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Blackburn,	Gorman,	McLaurin,	Ransom,

So the Senate refused to refer the resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move to strike out all that part of the resolution referring to elections for members of Congress. I do not see myself that the Senate has anything to do with that matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia offers an amendment to the resolution which will be stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolution be first read as modified by the Senator from Florida, that we may understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution of Mr. CALL as modified.

Mr. FAULKNER. Now, let my amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out of the resolution the following:

The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents, have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. I do not care to address the Senate at length upon that subject, but it is manifest that the Senator from West Virginia had no real purpose in this amendment which is beneficial in the country. No one questions that if these great foreign corporations can exercise influences here, not in Congress, but in the United States, affecting the election of members of Congress, it is within the province and the duty of every member of Congress to see that a foreign corporation, composed of a few individuals, shall not here in our country by the use of money and corrupt means endeavor to corrupt the suffrage of the country. What a proposition is that for the Senator from West Virginia to make here in the presence of the fact that the whole moral and religious sentiment of this country has been directed against the powerful influences of this corporation in this particular direction. I hope that no consideration will be given to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida, in that part of the resolution which is not included in the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia, will arrive at every practical result which it is possible for the Senate or for the House of Representatives to deal with in the way of legislation. If the Senator from Florida desires to put upon the country an investigation of political affairs, those that concern his election or the election of his colleague or the election of members of the House of Representatives, and to have committees sent out from this body to investigate into the political conditions of Florida, in my opinion he is violating the best interests of the people of the United States, and is assuming for this body a jurisdiction which is denied, and which is denied upon high authority. If the Senator desires to bring that subject now before the Senate of the United States, and to have it investigated upon its merits and upon the constitutional foundation on which he seeks to rest it, I notify him that he will have a long time to work before he will get his resolution through this body.

This Senate has something else to do besides involving itself in personal quarrels between politicians in Florida or anywhere else. Our time, so precious now to the welfare of this whole country, ought not to be absorbed by these personal quarrels and difficulties which are necessarily involved in such inquiries as are now launched before the Senate.

The Senator from Florida may think, Mr. President, that he will get some accessions of strength from politicians in this body by bringing in that feature of this resolution and by taking the advice of gentlemen who are continually assisting him in trying to get this country involved in political turmoil for the mere purpose of obstructing the welfare and real interest and business of the people; but he will find that he is mistaken. He can not accomplish that result in this body at this time, because, if a filibuster against the general progress of business is to be inaugurated here, if this Senate and the House of Representatives are to be clogged and fettered in this moment of great anxiety on the part of the people of the United States by bringing forward these personal wrangles and personal political quarrels, I notify Senators that they must take the responsibility and that they can not carry their measures into effect.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I will consent to modify the resolution in the way suggested.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. Then I will vote for the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the United States and is engaged in business therein and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I heartily sympathize with the remarks which were made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I did not suppose that this resolution was seriously considered by anybody, except for the purpose of obstructing public business, and I do not believe now, except by the Senator from Florida himself, that anybody seriously contemplates that this Congress shall engage in such an idle and useless and unconstitutional chase as this resolution, if adopted, would devolve upon us to engage in.

Of what value would be the first part of the resolution as the resolution has been emasculated? We have a law of the United States, which we passed three years ago, providing that it shall be a crime for any person to engage in the business of a lottery or for persons to buy tickets or for persons to sell tickets, and we went so far as to make it an indictable offense in the city of New Orleans for a person in the city of Washington to put a letter in the mails to purchase a lottery ticket which should be received and taken out of the mail in New Orleans. We punish the sender and receiver. Our Committee on Appropriations has reported bills appropriating money, and they have been passed, authorizing the Post-Office Department to punish just such crimes as we are now seeking to investigate.

Our laws are as rigid as laws can be. Congress through its Appropriations Committee has given the Department sufficient funds to wipe out the lottery business. It would be just as competent and just as wise, it seems to me, for Congress to appoint a special committee to determine whether or not stealing is still going on in violation of law, or for Congress to investigate whether or not the crime of arson is being committed in the Western States, or whether or not any other thing forbidden by law is being done.

If somebody can show me what we are to gain by the passage of a resolution like this, I shall be very glad to vote for it. I can not understand what the Senator from Florida can hope to gain by the passage of a resolution which shall appoint, at great expense to the people of this country—for this means the drawing out of the contingent fund of ten or fifteen thousand dollars to investigate—

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the resolution, no money can be expended under it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, Mr. President, we all know that at the close of a session of a Congress a resolution is slid through, giving every one of these committees the right to sit during the recess, and the first man who in his race can reach the Secretary of the Senate and file his lion on the contingent fund is the man whose committee does the business; and it is nothing but a struggle from the last hour of the session to see what committee can get public money to expend on these investigations, 90 per cent of which are useless, and 90 per cent of which are intended to be useless. If Senators want to go West, it is to investigate Alaska or the Indians; if they want to take some other trip, it is to investigate some other matter.

This resolution is to investigate whether or not the laws are being disobeyed, when there are laws upon the statute book defining the penalty for the commission of the offense.

If we are to gain anything by the investigation I stand ready to vote for it; but if it be merely that we are to put ourselves upon record against this resolution for fear that we may be charged with favoring lotteries—if there is some false sentimentality to be brought in to influence our votes, that is another thing.

But, Mr. President, it is idle and it is wicked, if we are trying to save the public money, that we should embark on a wild-goose investigation, which is supposed to be followed by an appropriation of several thousand dollars, to investigate by a solemn committee of Senators that which the ordinary postal agents of the Department at $150 a month are better able and better competent to investigate than any committee of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations on the resolution. The propositions of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] are evidently and entirely unreasonable. He maintains that because there is a law it does not need to be amended, and because there is a law that there is no necessity, whatever may be the magnitude of the evil, and however existing law may fail to afford a remedy for additional legislation to suppress it. These are the propositions which the Senator from Colorado propounds to the Senate and the people. They have no foundation in reason. They do not relate to the subject. The proposition upon which the resolution is submitted is this: A great, powerful corporation took possession of one of the States of this Union. It extended its operations throughout the United States. It used the mail facilities.

The Congress of the United States, in obedience to public sentiment and in aid of the people of Louisiana, passed certain laws for the purpose of suppressing that evil. The evil still exists under another name and with a domicile in a foreign country. The Senator from Colorado knows that evil in its entire magnitude in the State of Louisiana has been reproduced elsewhere in the United States. Of what avail, then, with his intelligence that he should make a man of straw to knock down? The proposition on which this resolution rests is one that every intelligent man in the United States knows to be true, and these attempts to cover it with ridicule only reflect ridicule upon those who make them. The purpose of this opposition is to protect that great, powerful corporation in its influence upon the public policy and the laws of the United States, and there can be no other.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate, in obedience to the public sentiment of all right-thinking people of every party, will pass the resolution and let us ascertain what are the facts in regard to the matter. Let us ascertain whether this great, foreign corporation, composed of a few citizens of the United States and of foreign countries, under the shelter of a foreign domicile is reproducing all the public evils which it created in the State of Louisiana, and if it is, whether we have or have not the power to suppress it by proper legislation. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President—

Mr. TELLER. Let us have a vote on the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the postal service for the next fiscal year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CALL. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to any debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4693) for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, except the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea;" and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 140) to confirm the enlargement of the Red Cliff Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin, made in 1863, and for the allotment of the same.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4693) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. CALL and Mr. GEORGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. McLaurin (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 43, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Platt,
Allison,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Berry,	Gray,	Manderson,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Martin,	Roach,
Camden,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Sherman,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Morgan,	Smith,
Carey,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Vest,
Chandler,	Jones of Ark.	Palmer,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Peffer,	Wolcott.
Davis,	McLaurin,	Perkins,

NAYS—14.

Allen,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Turpie,
Bate,	George,	Mantle,	Washburn.
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell of Wis.
Call,	Hoar,	Pritchard,

NOT VOTING—30.

Brice,	Dolph,	Jones of Nev.	Squire,
Burrows,	Frye,	Mills,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Murphy,	Teller,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Pettigrew,	Voorhees,
Clark,	Gordon,	Power,	White,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Daniel,	Hill,	Quay,
Dixon,	Irby,	Shoup,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to put the amendment which I caused to be read yesterday and intended to offer in proper shape for a vote. I therefore move it as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Wisconsin that he withdrew yesterday the amendment he had proposed.

Mr. VILAS. The amendment was read yesterday for the purpose of bringing the subject before the Senate, but it was not formally offered. I desire now formally to offer it as an amendment by way of a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 16, on page 4, insert:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed, instead of leasing from time to time as the conditions of the service will permit, to procure by purchase the necessary post-office cars required by the service on any and all lines, and thereafter to cause the same to be provided with all needful supplies, to be kept in good order and repair, and to be drawn and operated upon any railroad which shall, under his direction, be engaged in mail transportation, and for such operation to pay the rate now provided by law for mail transportation by railroads; and every company, corporation, receiver, or other person operating any railroad which is a mail route of the United States shall transport such cars accordingly upon and in connection with all such of its regular trains as the Postmaster-General shall direct; and the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, make purchase of such post-office cars directly from any owner thereof without advertisement, or may contract for the construction of the same; and may also make contracts for the supply, cleaning, and repair of such cars with any company, corporation, or persons, or may make other provision therefor; for which purpose he may use any part of the foregoing sum or such further sum as may be found necessary, not exceeding $500,000.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I wish to add a little more to what I said yesterday in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as to whether any change proposed by the amendment I have offered would be likely to interrupt mail service. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to a very interesting and I think a very able report made to the Senate of the United States by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] in the year 1874.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will excuse me, will he repeat what he said?

Mr. VILAS. I was calling attention to the inquiry which the Senator from Massachusetts made yesterday as to the likelihood of an interruption of the mail service if a change were made of this kind. I desire to read a brief extract from a very interesting and as I think able report made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] on this general subject in the year 1874, and I call attention to the language used with respect to the power of Congress over these roads. Let me say that the report is Senate Report No. 478, Forty-third Congress, first session.

Railroad companies thus formed and engaged in the general business of transportation are quasi-public corporations. There are reciprocal obligations existing between them and the public and between them and the Government. They have rights the public and the Government are bound to respect, and the people and the Government have claims upon them which they are not at liberty to ignore without rendering themselves liable to be proceeded against for a forfeiture of their chartered privileges. The Government can compel them to transport the public mails, and they may not refuse;

but in complying it is by virtue of an implied contract that such reasonable and just compensation shall be paid for such services equaling in amount what is usually paid to such companies for service of like nature by their best and most-favored customer. In this respect the Government and the public individually stand precisely upon the same footing—

The word "precisely" is italicized in the report—and the railroad companies are bound to accord to each the same privileges of transportation, both as to time and compensation, and are prohibited as a rule, under penalty of forfeiture of their chartered rights on judicial conviction, from according special privileges to either. The railroad companies, therefore, may not say to the Government, "We will not carry your mails." They are at liberty, however, to say, "We will not transport such mails unless we are paid at least a reasonable compensation for such services." Upon the other hand, the Government may not rightfully say to the railroad companies, "You must transport the public mails on such terms as to compensation as we (the Government) may fix, although such compensation is not a reasonable one and not equal to that paid by the most-favored patrons to such companies for like service;" but it may, through its Congress, authorize the Post-Office Department to demand of all such companies the transportation of its mails upon payment of what is a reasonable compensation, or of a sum equal to that paid by other parties for services of a like nature.

The conclusion of the committee is stated in the following words:

Without inquiring, therefore, at this point into the expediency of the exercise of such a right, your committee are clearly of the opinion that Congress has the right, in the exercise of its power, to establish post-offices and post-roads:

First. To take absolutely, on paying just compensation therefor, without the consent either of the owner or of the State within which such road may be any railroad, its rolling stock and equipments, within the United States, for the public use of the transportation over the same of the United States mails.

Second. To take the temporary use of any such road and equipments on like terms for a like purpose.

The particular manner in which this may rightfully be done depends, of course, on the forms that may be prescribed by Congress whereby the just compensation to be paid may be judicially determined and its payment provided for.

I call attention to that for the purpose of showing that a committee of this body, after careful examination, has established the conclusion of the right of Congress to order it. I shall only observe further with reference to this point that the railroads of the United States have in notable instances received the favor, protection, and assistance of the United States for the reason that they were mail carriers; but recently the greatest interruption of commerce that has perhaps occurred on this continent in time of peace was practically suppressed by the action of the Government bringing its suits in the Federal courts to enforce the transportation of the mails. Is it to be conceived that a railroad company which, as I pointed out in one instance yesterday, enjoys the transportation of the mails at a cost to the Government of $50,000 per year for each car employed by the company—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly; only I beg to say that yesterday my time was consumed all day by interruptions and I do not want to take much time to-day.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator take into consideration the element of hauling cars?

Mr. VILAS. These 50 cars are used for the greater part on one train. The greater share of the transportation is on the fast-mail train between New York and Chicago. I called attention yesterday to the fact that the compensation paid the New York Central road from New York to Chicago for the use of 50 cars exceeds $2,500,000 a year, a rate of over $50,000 per car. It is needless to say that there is no other car probably run on that road which earns any such sum of money. Much more could be added, but I merely wished to call attention to this point with respect to the question of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Now, I wish to say with regard to what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] called attention to yesterday, that he was entirely right when he brought forward the statute of 1873. As I expressed some doubt about it at that time I wish to be particular to withdraw that suggestion and now state the fact as the Senator from Iowa has stated it. He is correct that the transportation of the mails by weight was for the first time fixed by the statute of 1873. The fact which was upon my mind and which led me to doubt the correctness of that idea was that some of the railroad companies had refused to draw the postal cars at the rates of transportation which they were paid. But they were not then paid by weight. They had been paid under an arrangement of the Postmaster-General, by which certain roads were entitled to $300 a mile and others to $200 a mile, and so on; and the inequality in respect to weight was so great that upon 15 roads which received each of them $200 a mile per annum the range in weight was from 367 pounds on the lowest to 19,133 pounds of daily service on the highest. Therefore, in 1873 that arrangement was made which the Senator from Iowa called attention to yesterday.

I desire also to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that does not in reality alter the force of the objection which I have pointed out. It is proper to say that this special payment for postal cars is an injustice to the greater number of the railroad carriers in the country. That is particularly insisted upon in what is known as the Elmer report, made to the Postmaster-General in 1883, in which it is said shortly:

There is no reason known why 15, 25, or 35 feet of interior car space used for mails and clerks should not be made the occasion of specific allowance if 40, 50, and 60 foot cars, used in precisely the same manner, are so treated.

In point of fact this was always regarded as a sort of rent for postal cars. It was a crude and a very unsatisfactory mode of compensating the railroads and it has always been so regarded. It produces the grossest inequalities, as I could readily point out by reference to the tables furnished by the Postmaster-General. I desire to occupy no further time this morning.

Mr. PLATT. Before the Senator takes his seat, if I rightly heard him, his statement was that each car upon this special mail train between New York and Chicago was paid for by the Government at the rate of $50,000 a year, or over that amount. Was that the Senator's statement?

Mr. VILAS. That statement perhaps the Senator did not catch exactly right, as he makes it. I will state it exactly as I understand the fact to be. On what is known as the route from New York to Chicago there are fifty postal cars employed.

Mr. TELLER. On the New York Central road.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; on the New York Central road from New York to Buffalo, and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern from Buffalo to Chicago. There are fifty 60-foot cars employed, and the total compensation for the use of those cars and the weight compensation allowed that line exceeds $2,500,000. I gave the exact figures yesterday.

Mr. PLATT. And that is about $50,000 a car per annum.

Mr. VILAS. Slightly over that amount.

Mr. PLATT. And the Senator said that it would be admitted that no other car in the service of the company earned anything like that amount?

Mr. VILAS. I think so. I do not know.

Mr. PLATT. I was curious on that subject. Of course we have no data about it, but suppose a passenger car running on a rapid train from New York to Chicago—suppose that the fare is $30, and that 30 persons on an average go in a car. Of course this is not exact, but if that were so, and the car ran 365 days in the year, the car would earn $200,000—four times as much as the mail car earns.

Mr. VILAS. I have no doubt if the Senator were to take a particular case of that kind and suppose that the use of a car was such it would give that result; but if he will take all the passenger cars on the road, as I have taken all the postal cars, and take the entire passenger earnings of those lines, I think he will find the average very much less.

Mr. PLATT. The little hypothetical computation which I have made convinces me that upon the special passenger trains which are run from New York to Chicago the cars must earn more upon an average than the mail cars which are run at the same speed.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question before he quits the subject. The Senator thinks, I understand, that we are paying too much for the fast-mail service. What is the Senator's suggestion? That we buy the cars?

Mr. VILAS. That is the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator think we could run them for less? Would not the railroad charge the Government such a rate that we would be paying practically the same amount?

Mr. VILAS. My belief is that if the proper business principles were applied to this subject from five to ten million dollars a year would easily be saved on the present rate of compensation.

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator another question, then. He does not seem to have answered categorically the one I put.

Mr. VILAS. I think I answered it directly.

Mr. TELLER. I believe the whole appropriation is about $3,000,000 for the car service.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, the car service. I am speaking of the entire service.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will speak of the entire service.

Mr. VILAS. It is nearly $30,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. I want to know if it is not a fact that under existing law the Postmaster-General can reduce these prices, if he sees fit, without any enactment by Congress?

Mr. VILAS. I do not know why I should go again over that subject, which was very much hammered yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. I know it was, but is not that the fact? Is it not the law that the Postmaster-General is not required to pay $50, but may pay $30 if he wants to; and does not this after all amount to a suggestion that the Postmaster-General is not able to cope with the railroad companies, and we ought to come in and cope with them?

Mr. VILAS. It may be there is a good deal in that.

Mr. TELLER. It may be that is the fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Wisconsin to have yielded the floor?

Mr. VILAS. I was simply going to say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado that this amendment in my opinion strikes exactly at the root of our difficulty. The Postmaster-General without the aid of Congress can not reform the postal service. Report after report has been made to Congress, and he fails to get it said. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] yesterday said (I thought rather unjustly in view of all that had passed) that not only was this question newly awakened, but that it was newly presented. It has been presented by Postmaster-General after Postmaster-General; it has been discussed here on this floor a number of times, and it results in nothing.

Now, there is only one way to effect a good result for the benefit of the people, and that is that Congress shall lend some useful power to the Postmaster-General. When he reports year after year payments on this basis to the railroads and Congress appropriates the money to continue it he is helpless. He can not cope with the whole railroad system alone without the help of Congress.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me, then, if we address ourselves to this subject we ought to fix the rates which are to be paid for the cars. If the Postmaster-General will make a statement to Congress that $50 is too much and that $40 is too much and that $20 is about right we would be in a condition to act. But we are absolutely at sea, Mr. President. I do not want to give the railroad companies any more than they deserve. I want them to have fair compensation for carrying the mail. I am not one of those who believe that the United States is so poor that it should exact any service from any class of its citizens for nothing. I think they should have a fair compensation, and that the work should be well done, because the people demand it.

I understand it is now entirely within the province of the Postmaster-General to say what the compensation shall be except that he can not go above certain figures that we have fixed as a maximum. If the Postmaster-General says he can not handle these people and he has not the strength to control them, then he ought to say what he thinks we ought to do, and we might enact a law that would help him out. But it seems to me the proposition that the Government shall buy the cars and run them does not help any. If the railroads are so run now, when it comes to fixing the price that we shall pay them for their cars they will fix an extortionate price in some way for the running of the cars. There is where the great expense comes in. We would save but little in my judgment by buying the cars.

Mr. VILAS. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. TELLER. I will hear the Senator because he has had experience in this line. I do not pretend to know much about it.

Mr. VILAS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does he not think the United States ought to be able, with all the postal cars it has now in service, numbering 740, to get a wheelage rate of transportation for those cars approximately as favorable as the Big Four in Chicago can get for drawing their meat cars, or that Mr. Pullman can get for his Pullman cars?

Mr. TELLER. Some of these cars are run on special trains.

Mr. ALDRICH. All of them are run on passenger trains.

Mr. TELLER. They are all run on passenger trains. They do not run them on freight trains. Of course I do not know anything about what the wheelage ought to be, but we have given the Postmaster-General power to fix that. It is said that he has never done it properly. I do not know whether he has or not. I know one thing, that Congress is not in any position to know what we ought to do about this matter. We have no data from the Post-Office Department that tells us how much we ought to pay for wheelage or how much we ought to pay for the cars that we do not own. We have only a statement from the Postmaster-General that we are paying too much.

Mr. VILAS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Colorado that all that is contemplated in the amendment which I have offered does not require a radical change throughout the service, but simply vests the Postmaster-General with the power to begin that change where he can safely do it, exercising the discretion with reference to it which is now vested in him by law as to compensation.

Mr. TELLER. I can not myself conceive of any advantage in giving to the Postmaster-General any new authority on this subject. If we provide for the buying of the cars, we enter upon a system that I do not believe the Senate cares about entering upon, and I do not believe the people of the country care about entering upon it. That the United States shall be the owner of these cars, and consequently enter into the manufacture and repair of cars, is not according to my idea of what the Government ought to do in a matter of this kind. While I am exceedingly anxious that the railroad companies should not rob the Government of the United States, and while I am anxious to give the Postmaster-General all the power that he wants (and I think he has it now), I am not willing to say that we will enter upon the system suggested by the purchase of cars.

I suppose the next movement in this direction will be that we can buy the railroads and run them a good deal cheaper and save money in that way, all of which is contrary to my ideas of the purpose and object of government. Whatever may be the notions of the Senator from Wisconsin, I think he agrees with me on that point. He will hardly want to buy the railroads; and that will be the next step proposed by somebody who will want to economize.

Mr. President, I do not think that any amendment which has been offered here affords the slightest show of relief. The whole thing must be left to the Postmaster-General. If the Postmaster-General has not the courage to take hold of this matter as it ought to be dealt with, if we are paying too much now, we will continue to pay too much. I do not know whether we are paying too much or not. I am not competent to judge. The Senator from Wisconsin is perhaps more able to judge, because he has been at the head of one of the Departments, which has given him an opportunity to study these questions; but I know the rest of us are not able to determine the question.

Mr. VILAS. Let me make one observation in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, that we must leave this matter to the Postmaster-General. I want him to reflect for a moment on the fact that although the Postmaster-General is a continuing officer he is a very shifting personality. The first annual report which I wrote was the seventh successive annual report that had been written by a different Postmaster-General. The Postmaster-General is not long enough in the government of the Post-Office Department as a rule to acquire the controlling information concerning the service necessary to do these things.

Mr. TELLER. The present Postmaster-General has been in office two years; and he has a fair prospect I imagine of staying two years longer. Then I am pretty confident that that will be the end of his administration. Up to that time at least he can battle with this subject. I have heard some rumors to the effect that he is going to resign, but I do not suppose there is any truth in that; at least I should hope not. I think his administration is quite as acceptable to the people as any other Department under the present Administration. I think we could leave it to him, especially if we would indicate in some way that we wanted some reform, which we could do in a mild way without interfering with him I think. Perhaps the discussion which has already taken place would indicate to him that the feeling is that there ought to be some reduction.

Mr. VILAS. That remedy is the one proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. TELLER. That is a 10 per cent reduction?

Mr. VILAS. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know but that the reduction ought to be 30 per cent. I would not want to tie up his hands by saying that it should be 10, or 20, or 30 per cent. I am inclined to think from what the Senator says that there ought to be some reform in this matter. I am quite willing myself to trust the present Postmaster-General to make the reform, and if he does not do it, I think at the next session of Congress, when things will have somewhat changed, we ought to inquire, if he is not able to do it, what the opinion of the office is, and in some way we ought to find out just what we can fairly and honestly do, and not impair and interfere with the service, which we are all exceedingly anxious to do.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4600) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent that, without prejudice, the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate continue the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I have occupied no time in this long and interesting discussion, and I should not now if the effect of doing so would be to postpone the time of taking the vote, but as the time for taking the vote has been agreed upon, I simply desire to say a few words.

I think this is a very improper method of legislation. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations complained the other day that Congress "dumped," to use his word, all the legislation of the session onto the Appropriations Committee. Surely this is not a case where Congress has dumped anything onto the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee, on the other hand, brings forward here a matter of business which has not been before Congress at all, which has not been recommended in any report of any Postmaster-General since the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] was Postmaster-General, which has not been suggested by any committee of the Senate, which has not been even suggested by any bill which has been presented to the Senate, and which has not been presented, I may say, to either branch of Congress by the Postmaster-General, or by a committee of either branch, or by a bill introduced upon this subject.

This is evidently a matter which requires careful investigation, and the fact that it comes up now for discussion without previous agitation, without previous suggestion, without the opportunity for Senators to have in any way informed themselves with relation to its propriety, is to my mind one of the most suggestive instances against general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The fact that the proposed method of reform has been shifted three times since the matter first came before the Senate shows of itself that the Senate is not ready to act intelligently upon this subject. First, we had the recommendation of the Post-Office Committee that this sum of $3,205,000 should be placed in the hands of a single officer of the Government, to be expended at his discretion, without any limitation by Congress and without any consultation with the other parties to the contract or to the business which is carried on. The objections to that were so manifest and that upon the face of it is such an improper suggestion in legislation that I understand it has been practically abandoned, and for that the committee substitutes a second plan, asserting now, when the matter has not been before Congress heretofore, and when it has not been suggested in a report from any Postmaster-General since the Senator from Wisconsin was Postmaster-General, that the amount paid to the railroad companies for the service is too much, the proposition comes to cut down the rate arbitrarily 10 per cent; and, third, the Senator from Wisconsin, not being satisfied with that, proposes that the Government shall buy the postal cars and make some arrangement with the railroad companies for hauling the cars over their routes. Here are three different propositions. So the persons who insist that some reform is necessary have within three days produced three different projects of reform. It is manifest that legislation in this way may be unjust, may be improper, and that the Senate has no opportunity to properly consider the subject.

There is not a Senator here who desires that the railroad companies shall be paid any more than is fair, but I think all Senators ought to desire that a contract which has been made with the railroad companies, and which is to run two years from the present time in some instances, as suggested by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], should not be altered without their being heard, without their having an opportunity for representation before the committee, and without their having an opportunity to be heard by the Postmaster-General as to whether the present compensation is excessive. It simply shows that we must go arbitrarily in this matter if this legislation is to be put upon an appropriation bill.

There is great force in what the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. COCKRELL], said, which is that there is a tendency here in Congress to put practically the legislation of the session upon appropriation bills. It is a bad practice. We do not get well-considered legislation in that way. The practice is just as bad, however, when the Committee on Appropriations themselves assume to legislate upon appropriation bills without such legislation having been pushed upon them by the Senate or by Senators. It is an evil and a vicious way of legislation, and that is the reason why the rule is made. It is in recognition of the fact that if we legislate upon appropriation bills beyond the proper scope of those bills we shall be likely to do injustice in the legislation.

What would have been the proper method of reaching this matter? There are two ways, one, to authorize the Postmaster-General either by himself or by a commission appointed for his assistance to investigate this whole subject, and having investigated it to inform Congress whether the rates now paid for the transportation of the mails are excessive or not, and whether any change in the method of transporting the mails would be more to the benefit of the Government and to the benefit of the service. The other way would have been to introduce a bill proposing some specific change in the matter of the transportation of the mails, have it referred to the Post-Office Committee, have it considered by that committee, call upon the Postmaster-General and call upon the other parties to the contract, the railroad companies, hear what both parties have to say, and then determine, first, whether any reduction can properly be made without injustice to the companies and to the benefit of the Government; or, second, whether any different method could be adopted with benefit to the Government and the service.

Every Senator here will admit that that is the proper way to treat a question of this kind, and yet this proposed legislation is sprung now for the first time this session and for the first time in the past eight years upon this appropriation bill when nobody had any notice that the question was coming up, and a method proposed, which has been abandoned; another method proposed, which ought to be abandoned, and a third method proposed, which would commit the Government to the purchase of cars and to assume the railroad business of the United States.

I object, therefore, to all of these amendments on the ground that we are not informed upon the subject and we can not be informed as to whether they are proper provisions to be inserted in our laws.

I doubt very much whether there is great force in the figures and statements which have been presented by the Senator from Wisconsin. Upon their face they seem plausible, but yet, when examined properly, I think there are other elements which enter into the situation which the Senator does not consider. I understand from him that a large portion of this proposed appropriation is spent for what are called fast special mail trains—trains made up entirely of postal cars, upon which are distributing offices and postal clerks, which cars are run between the two great cities of New York and Chicago. At any rate, with reference to these trains it is manifest that we can not apply any rule to them that could be properly applied to a meat car, which is transported upon a freight train, whether it be slow freight or fast freight. The service which more nearly resembles this service is the fastest passenger-train service.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I find in the report of the Postmaster-General submitting to Congress the report of a commission upon this subject a statement made by the president of the Illinois Central Railroad Company as to the relative amounts received by that railroad company for mail service and express service, and I ask that the Secretary may read it, if it will not interfere with the Senator's argument.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

I submit the allowance for postal cars is too low. The railroad company has to build these cars at great outlay, and provide them with the latest and most complete improvements, maintain and repair them, and keep them lighted and heated. I think the allowance for these cars should be increased 25 per cent, and that both space and dead weight transported should be taken into account in arriving at the proper compensation.

In this regard, I would draw your attention to what we receive for our express business, that being the nearest analogous case.

For the express company we transport one car between Chicago and Cairo on the night train, and half a car on the morning train. For this the express company guarantees us a minimum of $27.25 per day, and they pay us at regular rates for all they carry in excess of certain defined weights, and, as a matter of fact, we receive considerably more than the sum named by way of excess. This guaranteed rate, however, produces to the company nearly $83,000 per annum. We transport one messenger in each car, and we have no trouble or responsibility of any kind whatever in the transaction of the business, or in receiving or delivering it. It is a simple matter of providing the car, hauling it, and receiving the pay.

For the postal department we transport between Chicago and Cairo two postal cars each way daily, and also transport mail pouches on four other trains on parts of the route between these two points. For this we receive from the Department not quite $70,000 a year. We are put to more expense in lighting and heating cars, the cars used are far more costly both to build and maintain than the express cars, and we have to transport about four times as many persons in the transaction of the postal service as in that of the express service. We are liable for penalties in case of nonarrival of mails on schedule time, and we have to be responsible for the delivery of mails to the postmaster, where the post-office is within 80 rods of the station. I think, therefore, that we do a great deal more work for the postal service than for the express service, and receive much less pay.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the report from which, at the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, an argument by one of the railroad companies has been read showing that the companies were not receiving enough for this service, was made to Congress in 1883. It was the report, if I am not mistaken, of a commission which was authorized by Congress to investigate this whole matter, and then presented the result of their report to Congress, nearly twelve years ago. No action has been taken by Congress up to this time upon that report, and I do not think it has ever been thought of very much until it was brought out from a dusty pigeonhole in the discussion of this proposed amendment.

If it had been true in 1883, that upon the report of that commission it had appeared that the railroad companies were receiving far too much for this service, that the pay accorded to them by law and by the Postmaster-General was properly characterized by the words "robber rates," it is very strange that nobody has suggested any reform in the matter from that day until this, except the Senator from Wisconsin when he was Postmaster-General. He was followed by another distinguished Postmaster-General, equally with him a reformer, and in the modern use of that word, I think claiming to be even a little better reformer than the Senator from Wisconsin, but he made no suggestion on the subject.

He was followed by a somewhat distinguished Republican Postmaster-General, who certainly had conceived the modern idea of reform, who had an eager eye for all the abuses which he could find in the Post-Office Department, and who even went so far as to adjust the rates for telegraph service, if I recollect aright, at 1 cent per word, under a discretion which was given him; and maintained, so far as he could, the payment of only 1 cent per word for telegraph service furnished by the Western Union Telegraph Company all through his administration. I am very much inclined to think that if that business Postmaster-General, Mr. Wanamaker, who was anxious to obtain a reputation for running the Post-Office Department upon business principles, and who thought that 1 cent a word was enough for the telegraph service furnished to the Department, had discovered that there was any very serious abuse or very serious matter in the rates which were paid to the railroad companies for transportation of the mails in special post-office cars, he would have exercised his discretion and made lower rates.

But that was in past administrations, Mr. President, and we have now a Postmaster-General who is, and justly, the pride of the Democratic party in this Administration, and I think, by comparison, they have a right to be proud of the present Postmaster-General in comparison with the other Secretaries of the present Administration. I believe he is a very efficient, and, so far as it is possible for him to be, a nonpartisan officer, who is trying to conduct that Department in the best possible manner. He has been there two years. He had never discovered until requested to come before the Senate Committee on Appropriations that there was any too much money paid to the railroad companies for this service.

He had a discretion to pay less, and I give that official the credit of having the courage, if he thought the rates were too high for this service, to reduce them. If Senators on the other side of this Chamber upon the Appropriations Committee and the Senator from Wisconsin have not sufficient confidence in the present Postmaster-General to believe that he can do what is just and right as between the Government and the railroad companies, I have more confidence in him than they have. For two whole years he has been in charge of that Department, and if he has read the reports of his predecessors, he must have read the report of the Senator from Wisconsin when Postmaster-General, and all these facts must be patent to him, yet he has each year recommended that the requisite amount should be appropriated under the law as it now exists.

He called no attention to it in the two reports which he sent to Congress; he has not even stimulated any Senator or Representative to introduce a bill on the subject, but he has been dragged before the Appropriations Committee, and his opinion has been asked by the subcommittee, and we only get his views as they are filtered through the statements which members of the committee make here upon the floor of the Senate, and indeed, I believe, one member of the subcommittee was not present when the Postmaster-General was there.

Mr. President, that is not the way to legislate. That is all I intended to say about this matter when I rose. I do not know that these rates are too high; I have no method of informing myself on that subject. I do know that the people of this country want the best, the fastest, and the most accurate railroad mail service that it is possible to have furnished; I know that they do not stop to inquire about the expenses of the Post-Office Department with any niggardly thought in their minds, if only the mail is properly transmitted, regularly delivered, and the facilities are all that they ought to be. I believe, on the contrary, that this is the one Department of the Government in which the people are most anxious that there should be liberality shown in the matter of expenditures; and I believe it was a great convenience to the people when the special fast trains for the transportation of the mails were adopted and put in operation; and I do not believe that the people think there is any too much money spent in that service.

One other thought suggested by the report which the Senator from Wisconsin read, the report of the year 1874, I believe, made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I would subscribe to every word of that report in the extract which was read by the Senator from Wisconsin. I think the just relations of the Government to the railroad companies in the matter of mail transportation were most accurately and felicitously stated in that report, but the conclusion which the Senator from Wisconsin draws from it seems to me not to be warranted by the report. The report proceeds somewhat upon the principle that the Government has the right to take private property for public use upon the payment of just compensation and upon the right of the Government to use the railroads as post routes; but all these amendments proceed upon the supposed right of the Government to confiscate private property. If the Government takes private property for public use it invariably prescribes the method of compensation and the method of arriving at the amount of compensation; but here is compensation to be arbitrarily fixed by the Government without a hearing on the part of the persons to whom the compensation is to be paid.

All these amendments are a direct departure from the principles which are laid down by the report of the Senator from Oregon. What would be thought of a bill which should be introduced here to procure the site for the erection of a building for the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing the place and the amount of money which the Government would pay for it, and authorizing the Government to take it at that price? Would such a bill pass the Senate or pass Congress? If it did, would it escape the vigilance of the Executive? That is just what these amendments propose to do.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And without any investigation whatever.

Mr. PLATT. Without any investigation whatever, with no method provided for ascertaining what just compensation shall be, with no opportunity for the party most interested to be heard in relation to it. As I said when I commenced, I regard this as a most improper and vicious method of legislation.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the committee for the reason that I believe it will seriously impair the efficiency of the mail service in the Western States and Territories. The maximum compensation is now fixed by law. It is not proposed, as I understand, to reduce the cost of carrying the mails so far as it is based upon the weight of the mail.

There have already been three very important reductions made since the passage of the law. First, a horizontal cut of 10 per cent; then a cut of 5 per cent; and then a cut of 20 per cent so far as the land-grant railroad companies are concerned. This bears very heavily upon nearly all of the railroad companies west of the city of Chicago. The roads which cross the State of Iowa are land-grant roads. Most of the roads that run across the State of Nebraska and the State of Kansas are also land-grant roads. So the land-grant roads to-day are not receiving 75 per cent of this maximum compensation. The law to-day is as complete and full as it is possible to make a law with reference to this compensation. It is positive in that it says that not greater than a certain compensation shall be allowed; and so far as the compensation is concerned as to postal cars the statute expressly provides that in case railroads fail to furnish those postal cars then they shall not be allowed the compensation which is specifically provided for.

The amendment, as I now understand, offered by the Senator from Kentucky, which is to take the place of the committee amendment, proposes to reduce the compensation for the postal cars 10 per cent. After some little investigation concerning this matter and after repeated conversations with persons in the West who are acquainted with the mail service there—and we have an excellent mail service—I am firmly convinced that a reduction of 5 per cent will take away from us our fast-mail service. There are trains made up in the city of Chicago exclusively of mail cars. They do not carry passengers and are not permitted to carry passengers. Those trains run across the State of Iowa, the State of Nebraska, the State of Wyoming, and as far west as Ogden, Utah, at a high rate of speed, most of the time at a rate of 60 miles per hour.

This fast mail, which runs on only one road across the State of Iowa and across the State of Nebraska, is obtained through the compensation at present allowed. It is by diverting the continental mails to one line of railroad that a compensation is made great enough to enable us to pay for this fast service. The fast service is a benefit to all of the Western States. The city of Denver, Colo., obtains a fast mail by trains leaving at a point known as the Julesburg Cut-off. The State of Oregon, the State of Washington, the State of California, and the State of Idaho also receive a certain benefit from the fast mail, as it greatly expedites the service in that part of the country.

When I asked the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] whether he knew that the railroad companies were receiving greater compensation for carrying the mails than they were entitled to, he made the reply that in some instances he believed they were, and in other instances he believed they were receiving too small compensation. If this peremptory cut is made in the law it will, of course, bring about a greater outrage so far as the companies are concerned who are not receiving a fixed compensation. Do I mistake the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Wyoming should realize that this peremptory cut is not upon the compensation paid for weight, which is the great share, but only upon the allowance for postal cars. That is received by but a very few companies comparatively; not so very few, but few companies comparatively, and affects only a portion of their pay.

Mr. CAREY. I have already made that statement, that the cut, I understand, is to apply only to postal cars. But, as was shown I think conclusively by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and the law itself is very plain upon that subject, the compensation so far as the weight of mails is concerned and the compensation for postal cars are contained in one and the same act. By reading section 4003 of the Revised Statutes the Senator will find this provision:

In case any railroad company now furnishing railway post-office cars shall refuse to provide such cars, such company shall not be entitled to any increase of compensation under the provisions of the next section.

Then it goes on to provide for additional pay being allowed for these cars at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile, and so on, different rates being fixed for different lengths of cars. It is therefore absolutely in the discretion of the Postmaster-General to-day. He may not allow any extra compensation for the cars. The Senator from Wisconsin, late Postmaster-General, when asked whether he exercised this discretion as Postmaster-General, replied directly that he did in some cases. It appears that the law therefore is very clear and very full so far as this is concerned, and neither of the amendments will add anything whatever to the discretion and power of the Postmaster-General.

We have the best postal service in the world. We have the cheapest service in the world. No man can look at these trains, made up exclusively of postal cars, which run across this continent without being proud of the service. In the city in which I live we have at the breakfast table the Chicago papers printed the previous morning. The mail service across this continent has been lessened in time between two and three days. This great and important service to the United States costs how much? Less than 11 cents, 10.17 cents a car per mile. I think it does not cost too much. After investigation Senators will find that the railroad companies are not receiving from this service more than the actual cost of the transmission of the mails. It is a special service. The trains are run on time-tables which are made up by the Postmaster-General or in the Post-Office Department. They run on the fastest possible time, faster than it is considered safe to transport humanity. Senators ask, why do the railroads perform this service? Every railroad company is ambitious to carry the mails. The travel of the United States follows the fast mail. There is a belief among the people that the railroads which transport the mail are the best railroads in the United States.

I hold in my hand the report of the Postmaster-General. It contains the report of the Assistant Postmaster-General and the report of the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service of the United States. If any Senator can find one word in that volume which is not complimentary to this service as performed by the railroads of the country he can do something I have failed to do. I shall not take up the time of the Senate by reading from it, but I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. VILAS) to the report of Captain White, of the Railway Mail Service. He makes only one criticism concerning the postal cars and the manner in which the companies perform the service. He says they are conforming to the desires and the wishes of the Post-Office Department; they are building the cars in the best possible way to provide against accident, to make the service efficient, and to put the postal clerks in a position to do the greatest amount of work possible. He has but one criticism to make; he says he believes the cars should be vestibuled. That is the only criticism.

Mr. President, the postal service which we have in these United States, which is so efficient, which is so creditable, has been built up after an experience of twenty-one years. If you reduce the cost of the mail service as now provided you take away from us our fast mails which we obtain to-day on the weight of the mails. Indeed, the Government only subsidizes one fast mail line in the entire United States, and that it is proposed to strike out in the pending bill. I refer to the mail line that runs from Springfield, Mass., to New Orleans. I am opposed, unless it is actually necessary, to taking that service off. There are certain conditions in the South that do not exist elsewhere in this country, and if it is necessary to subsidize one line to the Southern States I believe it is right that it should be subsidized, so that those States may have the benefit of an improved service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that I do not understand, so far as the debate has developed anything, that it is the South which is asking a subsidy to any railroad. But I understood the junior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. LODGE) to say that it was New England which is demanding it.

Mr. CAREY. I merely referred to that matter incidentally. I was not aware of the fact the Senator from Kentucky has just stated.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky repeat his statement as to my colleague?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said the junior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. LODGE) said in debate that the people of New England were anxious to hold this appropriation of $196,000 for special fast mail facilities. That was said in the debate day before yesterday.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Wyoming will pardon me, I will state that my colleague is not in the Chamber, but I did not hear the particular sentence which the Senator from Kentucky quotes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I speak from the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know anything about that. I think, however, that the statement which I heard the Senator from Kentucky make, that my colleague said it was New England which is demanding this service—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not mean to say he put it in the way of demanding the service. He said it was important to the people of New England, and he went on to argue against the recommendation of the committee to strike out the subsidy of $196,000.

Mr. HOAR. That is quite another thing. It is important to the people of New England that they shall have a prosperous South and a prosperous West, where live people who are their countrymen and with whom they deal. I understand this service is essential to a business communication of which New England is at one end and a large and rapidly growing and prosperous portion of the South is at the other. Their interests are alike in the matter. I do not think my colleague said anything except that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He made an explanation of the interests of New England.

Mr. CAREY. I stated that it had only been found necessary to subsidize one fast-mail line, one running from New England to the chief Southern cities. This, I understand, has been stricken out from the pending bill, so far as the committee could strike it out. The proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin is, so far as possible, to absorb these traveling post-offices and have the Government purchase or build the cars and pay for running them on some other basis. The Senator from Wisconsin, I think, misunderstands the purpose for which compensation is paid so far as the postal cars are concerned. I have been told that very frequently not over 2,000 pounds of mail are carried in one of these cars; that the appliances are such, requiring an immense amount of room and space to handle the mail, that rarely indeed can there be placed in a car over four or five tons of mail matter.

We know that an express car or an ordinary freight car is loaded down with from 10 to 20 tons of freight. There are certain incidental things that are done by the railroad companies that are very expensive so far as these cars are concerned. As I said yesterday, on an examination of this question it will be found that if the Government paid a reasonable compensation for the fares of the postal clerks who travel in the cars it would nearly eat up the entire appropriation that is paid for all of this service. In addition to that, the railroad companies handle the mails between their stations and the various post-offices where the distance is not more than a quarter of a mile, which would undoubtedly cost the Government a very large portion of the appropriation of $2,000,000 that is made for this purpose.

I do not believe the railroad companies should be paid any more for this service than is just and proper. I do not believe that they are being paid to-day any more than should be paid, considering the service that they give. I have perhaps as little reason to love railroad companies as any other member of this body; I am in no-wise connected with railroad companies; but I believe it is a bad time to crush railroad companies simply because they are railroad companies. It is doing an immense damage to the people of the United States. I do not believe that we should arbitrarily say that the companies shall accept a certain rate for carrying the mails. There is no constitutional provision that will force them to accept other than reasonable compensation. Unfortunately, in the West the railroads are very generally in the hands of receivers. The stocks have become very much depreciated. In many instances the roads are entirely in default in the payment of interest on their bonds. There is not sufficient business and sufficient compensation for the great companies to pay their fixed charges. I have a little clipping from a newspaper which is rather interesting at this time:

In 1893, 74 companies, operating 29,000 miles of road and representing over $1,750,000,000 of investment, went into bankruptcy. In 1894 the record shows but 38 companies, 7,025 miles of road, and aggregate obligations of $395,000,000.

About one-quarter of the railroads in the United States, reckoning by mileage, are now in the hands of receivers. And during the last nineteen years the work of clearing away wrecks has involved the sale under foreclosure of 593 railroads, representing 62,926 miles of road and $3,528,125,000 of stocks and bonds.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he has any information as to how many postal cars are in the service of the United States?

Mr. CAREY. About 700, I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to state.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There are between seven and eight hundred all told, of which number, in round numbers, there are about 120 or 130 that are always held in reserve to take the place of disabled cars, in the event of an accident or collision, or of cars that are being repaired.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator inform me what it costs to build one of those cars?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The outside estimate as the committee was able to get it was $6,000. That is certainly above the average cost of construction.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, in this connection, how many of those cars are run exclusively on mail trains, if the Senator knows.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It would be impossible to answer, because from what is termed the reserve, which means about 120 or 130 cars, they draw as occasion may require. Of course, at certain times they need those cars temporarily and they use them temporarily. It would be impossible for me to state how many are run exclusively in mail trains.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I know that on a great number of the roads a number of mail trains are made up exclusively of mail cars.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; there are very few.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Trains that carry no passengers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There are very few of such trains.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I feel quite sure—

Mr. BLACKBURN. There are some.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is the Senator from Wyoming able to state what proportion of mail cars are run exclusively on mail trains?

Mr. CAREY. I am not able to state the number, but I presume it is very small, because there are very few fast mail trains in the United States. As I said, they are made up by diverting the mails from parallel lines to one line, for the reason that the compensation to-day allowed will not pay for many fast mail lines. In other words, if to-day the Government should make the proposition on the present basis that two mail lines should run from the Pacific Coast to the East at the compensation now paid they could not run if the compensation was divided. It is only by throwing the bulk of the weight of mails on one line that we get our fast mail through the West.

Mr. President, this matter has been very fully investigated. There was a commission appointed, at the head of which was First Assistant Postmaster-General Elmer. There is a very full report on the files of this body that can be examined. The commission do not anywhere make the proposition that the Government shall go into the business of building or buying its own cars and operating them on the railroads. So far as the fast mails are concerned, if the Government owns the cars why not own the engines? If it owns the engines, then it will have to hire the firemen and the engineers. The Government would take possession of the entire train except the engine and the men who manipulated the engine, if the provision of the Senator from Wisconsin should prevail. It would be adopting an entirely new system in this country so far as the transportation of the mails is concerned. I do not believe any advantage would be derived from it. I do not believe the cost of transporting the mails would be cheapened one particle nor that as good service would be maintained as when the railroad companies are permitted to operate their own roads on the time-tables which are to-day furnished by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). Under the order of the Senate entered on yesterday the vote on this amendment and amendments pending thereto is to be taken not later than 3 o'clock. If there be no other Senator who wishes to be heard, I will ask that the vote shall now be taken upon the first pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is the point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on the first amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that there are some Senators absent from the Chamber expecting to be here at 3 o'clock, and I think we had better wait until that time before the voting begins.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would it not be better to have the bells rung?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; let the bells be rung.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then, in order to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, I will ask a call of the Senate, as there is evidently not a quorum in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Pritchard,
Allen,	Frye,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Allison,	George,	McPherson,	Pugh,
Bates,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Ransom,
Berry,	Hale,	Mantie,	Rauch,
Blackburn,	Hansbrough,	Martin,	Sherman,
Call,	Harris,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Stewart,
Camden,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Wis.	Teller,
Caroy,	Higgins,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Hill,	Morrill,	Vest,
Clark,	Hoar,	Murphy,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Palmer,	Washburn,
Coke,	Jones of Ark.	Pasco,	Wolcott.
Cullom,	Kyle,	Peffer,
Davis,	Lindsay,	Perkins,
Dubois,	Lodge,	Platt,

Mr. COKE. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. MILLS] is absent on account of sickness.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the amendment of the committee in order?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

Mr. VILAS. Is not the question to be taken first on the amendment which I offered as a substitute?

Mr. CULLOM. There is a point of order raised on the committee amendment.

Mr. HALE. There is a point of order raised on the amendment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A point of order has been raised on the amendment of the committee, and the point of order is submitted to the Senate, under the rules.

Mr. VILAS. The point of order was—

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. VILAS. I was going to observe that a point of order can not properly lie against my amendment because it has been reported by a committee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The point of order is against the amendment of the committee, which is in the bill.

Mr. VILAS. My amendment is a substitute for the proposition of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the amendment of the committee read, and then that question can be submitted.

Mr. PALMER. May I inquire if the question is whether the amendment proposed by the committee is in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the question.

Mr. PALMER. It is not upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin can be moved again as an independent proposition. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars" in line 16, page 4, the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars or for special facilities on fast-mail trains.

Mr. PASCO. I understood that that amendment had been modified by the Senator from Kentucky so as to avoid the repealing features of the amendment; and it strikes me that that is the amendment before the Senate, and not the one which has been read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that an objection to the modification was interposed by a Senator on the left of the Chair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not understand that any objection was interposed to the submission of the modified amendment. On the contrary, I think the senior Senator from Nebraska expressly disclaimed any purpose of objecting to it.

Mr. MANDERSON. My proposition was that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky could not be entertained until the point of order against the committee's amendment was disposed of; that the point of order must first be disposed of before the modified amendment could be offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then let us understand each other. There is no amendment pending before the Senate except the one printed in italics, submitted by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is the amendment against which the point of order was raised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And the question is whether the proposed amendment of the committee is in order, and the modification submitted by me is not before the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is not. That will come in afterwards.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to ask if the Senator from Kentucky has not the right under our rules to modify his amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Not the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. He would have that right if it was in his own amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand any Senator has a right to modify his own amendment, but I do not understand that under the rules, even though a Senator, as in this case, is in charge of the bill, he has a right to modify a committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky if the proposed modification is made by direction of the committee or is it his own?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was made only by the advice of some members of the committee with whom I had an opportunity to consult.

Mr. HARRIS. But it was not the action of the committee?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, it is my own.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators who are of the opinion that the amendment of the committee is in order will say "aye." [Putting the question.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but yesterday he did not know that he would be absent from the Senate to-day and authorized me to vote without reference to the pair. I do not know how he would vote on this question; I vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when Mr. MILLS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MILLS] is absent, detained at home by sickness.

Mr. McMILLAN (when Mr. WOLCOTT's name was called). The junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] desired me to state that he was unexpectedly called out of the Chamber; and he is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], who is absent from his seat, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but by an arrangement with his colleague [Mr. HUNTON] my pair has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 39; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate decides that the amendment of the committee is not in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask whether the amendment that I submitted day before yesterday, and which was to be considered as pending, is not now before the Senate as the first amendment to be acted upon?

Mr. MANDERSON. It can be offered.

Mr. ALDRICH. It can be offered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I offered it day before yesterday, and asked that it might be considered as pending as a substitute for the committee's amendment, and there was no objection made.

Mr. HALE. I take it the Senator now under the agreement can offer it. It can not be debated. He can offer it and it can be voted upon at once, or any Senator can move to lay it on the table, and of course a point of order can be raised upon it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will submit it as an amendment right now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 16, page 4, insert:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General: Provided, That a reduction of not less than 10 per cent shall be made upon present rates of compensation: And provided also, That no part of the said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars.

Mr. VILAS. Now I will offer the amendment I proposed as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "dollars," in line 16, page 4:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed, instead of leasing from time to time as the conditions of the service will permit, to procure by purchase the necessary post-office cars required by the service on any and all lines, and thereafter to cause the same to be provided with all needful supplies, to be kept in good order and repair, and to be drawn and operated upon any railroad which shall, under his direction, be engaged in mail transportation, and for such operation to pay the rates now provided by law for mail transportation by railroads; and every company, corporation, receiver, or other person operating any railroad which is a mail route of the United States shall transport such cars accordingly upon and in connection with all such of its regular trains as the Postmaster-General shall direct; and the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, make purchase of such post-office cars directly from any owner thereof without advertisement, or may contract for the construction of the same; and may also make contracts for the supply, cleaning, and repair of such cars with any company, corporation, or persons, or may make other provision therefor; for which purpose he may use any part of the foregoing sum or such further sum as may be found necessary, not exceeding $500,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the proposed substitute on the table.

Mr. HOAR. And the whole amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment and the substitute.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the rule, the laying of an amendment in the nature of a substitute upon the table does not affect the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the substitute on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was submitting that question to the Senate. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. McLAURIN. I transfer for the day my general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN. I again announce the pair of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], but I am advised that, if present, he would vote in the affirmative and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER. My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is absent from the Senate, sick. He is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who is also absent, sick.

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and as I understand on this vote, if present, he would vote the same way I do, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WHITE] is unavoidably absent temporarily from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

Mr. HUNTON. I announce to the Senate that my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is absent and has a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. If my colleague were here he would vote "yea" upon this question. The Senator from Washington under the circumstances is at liberty to vote, as he agrees with my colleague on this question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DOLPH], if here, would vote "yea" upon the proposition. He is detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 10; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to lay the amendment on the table. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars" in line 16, on page 4, it is proposed to insert:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General: Provided, That a reduction of not less than 10 per cent shall be made upon the present rates of compensation: And provided also, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BATE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I make the announcement once for all for the day, so that there may be no misunderstanding, that I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. His colleague [Mr. HUNTON], however, assures me that the Senator from Virginia, who is absent, if present would vote "yea." I therefore vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], but I am advised that he would vote the same way that I shall on this question, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 19; as follows:

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, after line 24, to strike out:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I do not agree to that amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If there be no objection, the Chair stated, the amendment would be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. We do not agree to that amendment. I do not care to debate it, but I desire that the amendment of the committee which is under consideration shall be defeated. That amendment is to strike out the following words:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

So the amendment of the committee now before the Senate is to strike out that portion of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives which I have read to the Senate. For one I am opposed to striking out that part of the bill as it came from the other House, and desire to have it remain as that House passed it. It gives $196,614.22 for special and necessary facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans.

Mr. President, this appropriation has been in every appropriation bill for the last fifteen years, I am informed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and it has been regularly expended by the Postmaster-General for the purpose of increasing the postal facilities from Springfield Mass., to New Orleans. Every appropriation act which contained this item also contained the words to which I now call the attention of Senators:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

So that if this bill stands as it came from the House of Representatives it leaves the matter entirely discretionary with the Postmaster-General whether he will spend the $196,614.22, or any part of it, in promoting postal facilities between these points. That discretion has been left with the Postmaster-General ever since the appropriation was made fifteen years ago, and the Postmaster-General in every instance has in the exercise of that discretion spent the $196,614.22 in increasing the mail facilities between these points. All the Postmasters-General for the last fifteen years having in their discretion spent this money, it is fair to argue that in their opinion it has been deemed necessary to spend annually $196,614.22 in order to increase the mail facilities between these points.

Mr. President, this is an important matter. This mail goes from one end of the country to the other, and facilitates the delivery of the mail all along its route.

That is not all, sir. When this fast mail reaches the city of Richmond, for instance, all points radiating from that city are served with the mail much sooner than they otherwise would be. Therefore, I hope the amendment of the committee striking out this appropriation will not prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I was going to ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I shall try not to exceed the limit under the agreement of five minutes to each Senator. I only want to say that there is but one railroad company in this country that is to-day getting any subsidy for special fast mail facilities, and that is the one from Springfield, Mass., through New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans. That company is getting $196,614.22 every year. That appropriation has never been recommended by the Post-Office Department. For two years in the report of the Postmaster-General the request was made of Congress to abolish it upon the ground that it was a positive detriment instead of a benefit to the service.

Now, I only want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have pending before the Committee on Appropriations applications from other railroad companies insisting that they, too, shall be subsidized if this one is to be. For instance, here is what is known as the Seaboard Air Line. It is a parallel line to the one that is now receiving this subsidy of $196,614.22. There is a difference of less than sixty minutes—about fifty-eight minutes—in the schedule time of these two roads between New York City and Atlanta, Ga., the one getting in round numbers $200,000 a year as a subsidy from the Government, and the other getting nothing.

Mr. BUTLER. The Atlantic Coast Line gets nothing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Atlantic Coast Line gets nothing; the Seaboard Air Line gets nothing, and this company gets this $196,614.22.

Mr. GEORGE. In other words, we are paying nearly $200,000 for saving fifty-eight minutes in time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; we are paying $200,000 in round numbers, or, to be exact, $196,614.22 for a difference of fifty-eight minutes in the schedule between the subsidized and the unsubsidized parallel line from New York to Atlanta.

But that is not all that I desire to call to the attention of the Senate. Here is Cincinnati, with an amendment offered by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], asking for $100,000 for special mail facilities on trains going out of that city, if this provision is to stay in the bill. Here is the Seacoast Air Line asking for $196,000 if its competitor parallel line is to have $196,000. Here is the city of Louisville asking for $150,000 in order that she may have these special mail facilities supported by subsidy over the two great systems, the Louisville and Nashville and the Queen and Crescent.

Mr. President, it must be admitted that each and every one of these railroad companies has as much right to this subsidy as the one that is getting it. I have no concern about it. The votes recently taken in this Chamber have sufficed to convince me that it is a very difficult thing, if not an impossible thing, to beat these railroad companies on anything they want. I do not know that we can do it here, but I do insist upon one thing, and that is fairness. Either strike out the subsidy to this line or else put in $760,000 a year in the nature of subsidies to these other lines, whose amendments are pending here, and whose rights and equity are equally as good as those of the company now receiving the subsidy.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Is the provision for the existing fast-mail line from Springfield, Mass., to Atlanta, Ga., found only in appropriation bills?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the Post-Office appropriation acts only; and it never has been asked for by the Postmaster-General, but he twice has officially reported against it, with the request that it should be abolished, because it was a detriment instead of a benefit to the service.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With pleasure.

Mr. FRYE. Is this railroad line connected in any way with the steamer lines that run to Cuba and so on?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not understand that it is in anywise whatever. The line to which the Senator refers is the Atlantic Coast Line, and the subsidy was taken away two years ago from that line and given to this line. This used to be called the Richmond and Danville system, but they change their name every few days when they get a new receiver, and I believe it is now called the Southern Line.

Mr. BUTLER. The Southern Railway Company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Southern Railway Company.

Mr. BATE. They still hold on to the subsidy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; and they fight for its retention now to the exclusion of all the other railroad lines in this country.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky makes a speech upon this matter which, taken by itself, might make some impression upon the Senate. A stranger hearing him would suppose that the Post-Office Department for now going on sixteen years had disapproved of this expenditure of money.

The law under which this provision has been made invariably left the expenditure of the money to the discretion of the Postmaster-General if necessary for the proper and advantageous carrying of the mails, and every Postmaster-General of the United States for the last sixteen years has substantially and in effect approved of this appropriation, because each of them has invariably made the expenditure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Could the Senator be interrupted for a moment to ask a question only?

Mr. RANSOM. With great pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would ask the Senator whether any Postmaster-General has ever estimated for this service or ever asked Congress to appropriate for it, and whether in two instances in his official report the Postmaster-General has not asked Congress to abolish it?

Mr. RANSOM. It is an old saying, that "actions speak plainer than words." I have not looked through the reports of the Postmasters-General; I have not looked at the estimates; but I see that every year the Postmasters-General have expended the money, while the act declares explicitly that it is in their discretion to expend it, if necessary for the proper and advantageous carrying of the mail. Now, you see what becomes of the Senator's argument upon that branch of the case.

In the next place, a man would be almost affected to tears to hear my friend from Kentucky talk about these railroad lines. He meant the Seaboard Air Line, sir, but he has mixed, if I may say so, the names of these different railroad companies, and he has confounded the Atlantic Coast Line and the Seaboard Air Line with each other. If the Senator from Kentucky will inform himself, as he almost always does, accurately upon these questions, he will see that this appropriation does not exclude the Seaboard Air Line. This provision declares that that line shall be from Springfield via New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, while the Senator from Kentucky declared—and he was assisted by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]—that the Seaboard Air Line runs from here to Atlanta, and that there is only fifty-eight minutes' difference between them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Between New York and Atlanta.

Mr. RANSOM. Between Washington and Atlanta—I will correct the Senator again—that line going from here to Atlanta; and it is in the discretion of the Postmaster-General to say whether one line or both lines or neither line shall have the money. Where is the hardship in that? Where is the hardship, sir, when for fourteen years the Atlantic Coast Line—and I wish to say here that it is one of the best lines in the United States—from here to Tampa enjoyed the appropriation for this fast-mail facility, and for the last year it has been given to the Southern Line? Does not my friend from Kentucky see that the Southern Railway Line from here to New Orleans goes right through the bosom of the Southern States—right through the center of Virginia, right through the center of North Carolina, a hundred and odd miles through South Carolina, right through the heart of Georgia, right through Alabama, through Mississippi, and down to New Orleans? Where, let me ask, could a road be constructed which would confer more benefit upon the Southern people by a fast-mail service?

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that I think it would be fair for him to state that the Seaboard Air Line also penetrates the central portion of his State, the central portion of my State, and the central portion of Georgia to Atlanta.

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly it does.

Mr. BUTLER. So, if that is to be the rule, it would seem to me—

Mr. RANSOM. I shall make no argument against the Seaboard Air Line. I have no purpose to do so. It goes almost by my door, and I travel on it from here to my home. It does good, but let the Postmaster-General decide which line shall have the appropriation, or whether both lines shall have it.

I am not going to make an argument here as to what fifty-eight minutes or an hour between here and Atlanta means in business, but I will make this argument, if I can have the attention of the Senate for a few moments. This fast mail line has in the last fifteen years done incalculable good to the people of the Southern States. It has given life, it has given impulse, it has given facility to business, the extent of which I can not begin to estimate. I have witnessed it myself; I have seen it. Here is a line going right down through the country to New Orleans, its branches radiating off to the mountains on one side and the seaboard on the other. There it is, sir. The simple question is, shall this facility be kept up for the people of the South or shall it be stopped—shall it be ended?

The VICE-PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. RANSOM. I know my time is up, and I shall not say another word.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Kentucky in favor of striking out of the bill the provision for this fast-mail service consists of one single point, that the appropriation is now given to one railroad line and that all the other railroad lines will come in and ask for a similar subsidy. There is not one syllable in the bill in regard to a railroad line. It simply provides that there shall be a fast mail-service between certain specified points, and it is open to the Postmaster-General to give the subsidy to the railroad which can give the best service. There is nothing in the provision giving the money to any particular road—not a word.

I did not know until I heard the matter debated in the Senate what railroads had the contract. I only knew that the fast-mail service was of great benefit to the merchants and business men of New England. It is proposed to abolish this fast mail service between given points because one railroad happens to have the contract. I think that is pretty hard on the large business communities which benefit from the fast-mail service. We wish to keep the fast service, and I do not care a straw what railroad gets it so long as we get the fast mail.

Mr. RANSOM. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. It can be given by the Postmaster-General to the railroad that will furnish the best service at the lowest cost. Why, because it has been given to one line of railroad, which must run over the tracks of a great many companies, it should be necessary to abolish the whole service, I can not see. I hope that, in the interest of all the States through which the fast mail passes and all the great business which is aided by it, the amendment may not prevail.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I understand that in the very contract which is made for the carrying of these mails it is provided that the railroads are to transport the mail with the greatest facility, with the greatest convenience, and to have the postal cars along for the purpose of facilitating the mails.

I understand there are other roads which make almost the same time from point to point as the one which receives this subsidy, and I can not see the justice of giving to one particular road an advantage of $200,000 simply that we may have the mail a few minutes earlier. I am against it on principle, as I am opposed to bounties. This is a subsidy, and I am against subsidies. We have numerous railroads in this country which ought to compete with each other, and the advantage should be given to the road which makes the quickest time without the Government stepping in and showing to one a partiality and saying we will give you $200,000 more or less for a rapid rate of delivery of the mail. Fifty-eight minutes, I understand, is the difference in time from here to Atlanta, running through North Carolina. You can see that, of course, from the sentiments uttered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. It goes right through the heart of North Carolina. Each one of these roads—

Mr. RANSOM. If my friend will allow me, I know from what he says that the road does not go through Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. It does not, and I voted, as the Senator will find by the RECORD, against the Louisville and Nashville, which runs through my town, being subsidized. I voted against it on principle. I do not care whether the road goes through Tennessee or Kentucky or North Carolina or where it runs. I believe it is wrong; it is wrong in principle. I do not favor the principle of bounties; I do not favor subsidies. This is nothing but a subsidy, and I oppose it upon principle. If Congress is to enter upon this policy, let us do justice and give these other roads which are competitors a fair chance and a reasonable proportion of the subsidy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment. The pending proposition, I understand, is to strike out the clause for a special mail service found on pages 4 and 5. I wish to move an amendment to come in after line 7 on page 5.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether he would not prefer to withhold the amendment until action shall have been taken upon the committee amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state the reason why I think I ought not to do that. In the first place, this is an exceptional service which has been continued for a number of years. I have voted for it simply upon the statement of Senators representing the various States that this is an important aid to their postal facilities.

Now, I have the same urgent demand from the people whom I represent, from Cincinnati and Cleveland and other points, and also from Chicago and Kentucky, for a similar service. It is said that a fast-mail service from Cincinnati and Louisville, going through Nashville, Chattanooga, and other places, to New Orleans, would be of infinite service to the business interests of that part of the country, and is just as necessary in every respect as is the mail service provided for in the bill. I am not willing any longer to vote for the large expenditure for special mail facilities along the Atlantic Coast unless the same facilities, the same aid, and the same assistance are rendered to a section of the country fully as important in every respect as that along the Atlantic Coast.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to inquire whether he does not think it is better to strike out the provision for necessary and special facilities on this particular line or lines from Springfield, Mass., to New Orleans rather than to enter upon a general effort to secure similar facilities on a half dozen other lines and retain the clause which the committee recommended shall be stricken out? Had we not better get rid of the whole business?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to get rid of the whole business of increasing our mail facilities.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all. I refer to these special facilities merely.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall vote to strike out this clause unless some provision is made for a section of the country that is just as important as the Atlantic Coast. Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, and all that part of the country, and thence to New Orleans, is now becoming more populous than the whole Atlantic Slope south of New York. Therefore the same facilities ought to be extended which are extended to the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that if this provision is to be kept in the bill there are other lines that have just as much right to be established as this one has to be maintained. But it seems to me that in these hard times, when the mail facilities are so thoroughly conducted, with frequent trains at great speed, it is better to strike out this clause rather than to enter upon a general effort to secure the establishment of a half dozen other lines, because that is what it will come to, and pay additional sums of money for their maintenance. My own opinion is that we ought not to adopt the provision in the bill, that we ought to get rid of it, because the evidence is that a line right by the side of the one which receives this appropriation makes the same time, within fifty or sixty minutes, between Springfield, Mass., and the terminus of the line.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to take the advice of the Senator in charge of the bill. If he thinks on the whole that we had better postpone the consideration of the amendment I wish to offer I am perfectly willing to do it, and take a vote upon this proposition. But certainly if this clause is retained the others ought to come in.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see any reason why it should not. I do not want to interfere with any fast-mail service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I suggest that the Senate vote upon the amendment submitted by the committee, which is to strike out the appropriation of $196,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to strike that out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then the Senator had best offer his amendment now.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I think.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because I wish to vote to strike out the clause which proposes to appropriate $196,000. But if that is retained I shall insist with the Senator from Ohio that these other amendments ought to be admitted, too. It must be remembered that the purpose for which fifteen years ago this fund was put into the Post-Office appropriation act has ceased to exist. When the Plant Line was completed this fund was appropriated for the express purpose of furnishing fast-mail facilities from New York down the Atlantic Coast to Tampa, and there connecting with a line of fast steamers between Tampa and Havana. Now, that has all disappeared. That connection has been abandoned. The Atlantic Coast Line, which for thirteen years had the subsidy, has not had it for two years past. That was the only purpose for which the fund was ever given. It was to facilitate the rapid transit of mails from Tampa, Fla., to Havana, the Atlantic Coast Line connecting with a fast steamship line plying between those two ports. That has been abandoned, there is no longer any connection, and the Atlantic Coast Line for two years past has not had this fund. But what was known as the Richmond and Danville system, now known as the Southern Railway, which has no earthly connection with any foreign steamship line, which never carries a letter that goes beyond the limits of our own land, has the subsidy now. There is no argument to support it to-day. The only argument that ever did support it was the Tampa-Havana fast-mail steamship line, and that has ceased to exist.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. Wanamaker and other Postmasters-General tried to get rid of it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No Postmaster-General has ever recommended it at any time. Twice in his official report he has asked for its abolition. The only argument here used for it and the only purpose for which it was ever given ceased to exist two years ago. I stand with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Illinois. I say that if the subsidy is to be retained for this one line then it ought to be given to the other lines on even terms that are here with amendments pending asking for it. I notify the Senate now that if it does that it will have to appropriate, in round numbers, about three-quarters of a million of money in subsidies every year to these different railroad lines.

Mr. SHERMAN. The total amount provided for by the amendment that I sent up is $150,000. The amount appropriated by this paragraph is $196,000. I do not see where the Senator gets his $600,000.

Mr. CULLOM. There are other lines.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think it is about three-quarters of a million. The Senator from Ohio has an amendment pending here himself asking for $150,000. Then the Seacoast Air Line has an amendment pending here asking for one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and twenty-odd dollars, exactly the amount given to the line provided for in the bill. Then in addition to that the city of Louisville comes with an amendment here upon my desk in which it asks for $150,000. In addition to that the Senator from Illinois has served notice on the committee that if any subsidy for special mail facilities is retained in the bill he has an amendment to offer on behalf of the city of Chicago. So the Senator can not get the figures below $750,000 a year asked for in the way of subsidies under this head.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment I offer includes all. It includes Louisville and Cincinnati, and it also affects Chicago in the same way, because—

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. CULLOM. How does it affect Chicago?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not include the Seacoast Air Line, which is asking for $196,000 here.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the case: If the Senate refuses to grant this service to the Western States or the Middle States, I may say, I should feel entirely justified in voting against retaining the provision in the bill; but suppose we adopt it. I am inclined to vote for it because I am in favor of the best possible mail facilities for every part of the country. I do not like to act in the way of voting against this proposition because the Senate chooses to vote against my proposition. That is not the ground upon which I stand; but it seems to me that these propositions ought to go together and that we might take the vote without further debate. The whole subject is open.

So far as the particular amendment I submit is concerned, it has been demanded by the State of Ohio, the city of Cincinnati especially, for a long time. Now it is grouped with the Louisville connection and the connection to New Orleans, and all the States of Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana are interested in this proposition. They are modest about it. Although it embraces so many States and they have so large a population they ask for only $150,000, which is less than the amount that has been granted for years on other routes. It would cover an immense extent, you may say the whole eastern Mississippi Valley, including the Ohio Valley. I think we should put on all these amendments. Suppose they do amount to $700,000; put them on and let them go into conference and then make a fair distribution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CULLOM. I have looked over the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and I am not able to see that Chicago is included in it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Chicago is not stated, nor is Cleveland stated; but the mail facilities now from Cleveland, Toledo, and Chicago to the Ohio River are excellent. They can not be much better. The facilities now from Chicago to Louisville are as good as they can be. They do not want anything more within those States. It is the connection with the South where the difficulty lies and where the delay is. The people of Cincinnati are seeking to have only a freer connection with the South.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him if his proposed amendment is simply to secure expedition, to expedite the mails?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is partly to expedite, and it is to increase the facilities. I should like to have the amendment read. It has been read already.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not care to have it read at this moment. Can the Senator inform me about how much expedition would be secured by this appropriation?

Mr. SHERMAN. I could not, because I have not gone into the details.

Mr. HARRIS. Can the Senator from Kentucky inform me as to how much the mail is expedited from Springfield, Mass., to New Orleans, via New York, Washington, and Atlanta, by this appropriation of $196,000?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not give the exact schedules of the parallel lines, but I feel absolutely warranted in saying that it is not expedited at all.

Mr. RANSOM. I will tell the Senator from Tennessee if he will permit me.

Mr. HARRIS. I want information upon that point, because I think it material. We are paying for expedition and I want to know how much expedition we get for our money.

Mr. BLACKBURN. You are not getting any.

Mr. RANSOM. I will tell the Senator. The New York papers, the Northern mails, the Washington mails are carried to all the country South one day earlier than they would be but for this fast-mail service.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator undertake to say that the mails are expedited twenty-four hours by reason of this appropriation?

Mr. RANSOM. I do not say twenty-four hours.

Mr. HARRIS. That is one day, I understand.

Mr. RANSOM. Pardon me. I mean to say, and I say distinctly, that owing to the time saved by these fast mails, all the mail from the North and from Washington City reach the South one day earlier than they would get there but for this service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not understand the Senator from Tennessee to be asking about all the fast trains, but the one provided for in the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. HARRIS. Well—

Mr. RANSOM. Now, I want to tell the Senator from Tennessee what has been the effect of the fast mail, if my friend will allow me. I can speak of it with some knowledge, for I had something to do with its first establishment here. Since it was established we have been receiving mails from New York one day in advance of their receipt before. We could not get the New York papers, say, at Weldon, N. C., before this system was adopted until the day after they were published. Now we get them there the same day. Now we get them on the South Carolina line the same day. Now we get them at Atlanta the next morning.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator from North Carolina mean to say that by reason of this subsidy to this particular line the time has been diminished on the parallel lines?

Mr. RANSOM. I did not make that statement; but I intend to speak of that further on.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is about the way of it, is it not?

Mr. RANSOM. That is the case, because they must all do their very best to keep up with this line; otherwise the other lines would be completely thrown out.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from North Carolina mean to say that when we have purchased expedition at the price of $196,000 upon a single line we get the same amount of expedition upon all the other lines to which we pay nothing?

Mr. RANSOM. I mean to say exactly this: That from here down to South Carolina there are three lines, not quite parallel, as my friend from Kentucky said, but nearly parallel; and the two lines that do not receive this mail facility, as it is called, are obliged to try and keep up with the other line. All three lines put an additional train on their roads every day; the two lines try to keep up with the third. Otherwise there would be a fast line which would get all the travel. Every man acquainted with railroad business knows that to be the case.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator one additional question. If by subsidizing this single line we have secured the same amount of expedition upon all competing lines, how can he reconcile it to the most common principle of equity and justice to waste $196,000 upon one line and exclude the other companies that are performing similar service?

Mr. RANSOM. I will answer the Senator from Tennessee that but for that line being able to carry the mails so quickly they would all lose one day.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I propose to the Senator from North Carolina that we divide the $196,000 between the lines.

Mr. RANSOM. I have nothing to do with that. I have nothing to do with any division here.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand the situation, if you take off $196,000 from one line the other two lines would slow up, and it is in order to keep them all three going that you have to give $196,000 to one of the lines. If I may be permitted I should like to introduce an amendment appropriating $150,000 for a fast mail from Chicago to Denver.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Colorado that an additional amendment is not in order at this time. The Chair will recognize the Senator later for that purpose.

Mr. RANSOM. Let me suggest whether it is not the proper course to take the vote first upon the amendment of the committee, because unless that amendment is defeated there is no ground for any of the propositions for increased mail facilities; it will all be gone.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am afraid that the gentlemen who have secured these facilities for mail service are playing the same game that was described by my honorable friend from Tennessee; that is, they want a big subsidy for themselves and they think that will answer for all the Western country.

Mr. RANSOM. May I say to my friend from Ohio we can not do that unless the majority of the Senate approves it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think on the whole it would be better for the Senator from North Carolina to join me in making a reasonable appropriation for fast mail service in the Mississippi Valley, and then I at least will vote for his proposition, as I have done in the past.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I can not make any bargains here. I certainly can not make any bargains here before the whole world upon this matter. The Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from South Carolina, and the Senator from Kentucky can engage in a division of what may be called spoils, but I must not be a party to it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand the Senator from North Carolina objects to doing it here publicly. Probably he had better retire to the cloakroom. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANSOM. Oh, no, Mr. President, that—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply want to say if a vote is to be taken upon other amendments looking to the introduction of additional subsidies I shall vote to put every one of them in, and then I shall do my utmost to put every one of them out, including the one that is already in the bill.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Kentucky is mistaken about that, Mr. President. He will never vote to put the amendment out in the world if it is once put on the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The record will show in a few minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I have favored an appropriation for fast mails to my part of the country almost ever since I have been in the Senate. I think, as has been suggested by other Senators, it has resulted in great good in respect to facilitating the mails. I do not know how true it is, but I understand that one line, which is known as the Southern Railway Company, now running from Washington via Charlottesville, Lynchburg, Danville, Greensboro, Charlotte, and to Atlanta, has been getting the appropriation of $196,000. Within the last two years another route from Washington to Atlanta has been put in operation, to wit, the Seaboard Air Line, which runs from here via Fredericksburg, Richmond, Weldon, Raleigh, through Chester, in my State, Athens, Ga., to Atlanta, and is in one sense a parallel line with the Southern Railway. I am decidedly in favor of these lines being aided, so as to get the very best mail facilities, but I do think in common fairness that the appropriation ought to be divided certainly between two of the lines, the Southern Railway and the Seaboard Air Line.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator whether there is any objection on the face of the House proposition to having the Postmaster-General make that division, if he sees fit to do it?

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps that would be the best course. But I give notice that I shall offer this amendment if the committee amendment is not sustained:

And provided further, That should the Postmaster-General expend the appropriation he shall divide the same equally between the Southern Railway Company, the Seaboard Air Line, and the Atlantic Coast Line companies.

That would seem to me to be fair. If the Postmaster-General would do that, and possibly he might, I should not have the slightest objection to it. But this is certainly giving one line an advantage over the other. I am informed by the managers of the Seaboard Air Line that if they had this amount they could make up the fifty-eight minutes which they are behind now, as compared with the Southern Railway, from this point to Atlanta. They are fifty-eight minutes, I think, later than the Southern Railway. Therefore I give notice that at the proper time, if the pending amendment of the committee should not prevail, I shall offer that amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply desire to repeat what I have already said, that I am opposed to the paragraph which is proposed to be stricken out of the bill by the Senate committee; but I want to say in addition that if it is the sense of the Senate that it shall remain in, I shall offer an amendment proposing special facilities for a line from Chicago, via St. Louis, to New Orleans, and also from Chicago to Kansas City. I shall offer those amendments at the proper time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I certainly hope that no division among Southern Senators in reference to the application of this money when Southern lines are reached will prevent the adoption by the Senate of the House provision for a fast-mail service from Springfield, Mass., to New Orleans. That line is undoubtedly something of a benefit to New England. It is a much greater benefit to the South. It is one of the greatest benefits that have been conferred upon the South by recent legislation.

The advantage of this fast-mail line the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] has well described. Now, we want it continued. It should be continued as a national enterprise, and it should be continued for reasons which do not apply to a line from Cincinnati or Chicago. If the House provision is retained in the bill and the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Ohio choose to offer other amendments we will deal with them upon their merits when they are offered; but I do appeal to Senators not to vote down this line for a special reason which does not exist in the case of the line from Chicago or Cincinnati, and that is that this fast-mail line carries the foreign mail. It puts the South in direct and speedy communication with the great transatlantic steamers.

The Senator from Kentucky has spoken of the Plant Line from Tampa to Cuba. It may have been one of the objects in the original establishment of this line that those mails should be carried and that by means of the Plant Line of steamers Havana should be brought into speedy communication with Europe, but that was only an incidental result.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that that was the ground upon which this appropriation was first made, fifteen years ago.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator say it was the only ground?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I say it was the principal ground.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. If it does not come out of my time.

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly not. By the Plant Line of communication the mails get sooner to Tampa than by any other route.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, if he will do me the honor to listen to me, that it was undoubtedly one object of this line to carry rapidly the mails that came upon the ocean steamers from the Continent of Europe from Tampa to Cuba. That was undoubtedly one of the objects of the line. The main purpose of it was, in my belief, not only to carry the domestic mail from Boston and New York City throughout the South, but it was also to give rapid communication with Europe to the business men of the South; and I say that the special advantage of this line alone ought to result in its continuance. If it is necessary to have a fast mail from Chicago let us vote the money for it. If it is necessary to have a fast mail from Cincinnati let us have that. If it is any gratification to the liberal-minded and generous Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to have a fast mail from Chicago to the Golden City let us have that. But, Mr. President, do not let us take away from the South, which is poor enough and suffering enough, anyway, although the daylight is beginning to shine in there industrially and politically—do not let us take away from the poor South the little advantage which this speedy communication with New York and New England and Europe gives to her.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if the two other railroads that parallel the subsidized line have made an application for a subsidy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. They have. The Seaboard Air Line also is here with an amendment asking for the same amount, dollar for dollar and cent for cent, that is now being paid to the Southern Railway Company.

Mr. RANSOM. That is true.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. A year since, when this measure was under discussion, I voted for this appropriation. I have been inclined to so vote upon the amendment now before us. But after listening to the argument of my friend from North Carolina there certainly does not seem to be any necessity for this appropriation of $196,000 as an extrasubsidy, for, by his own admission, competition, rivalry

(and that is the only thing that tells the story), has given the people increased mail service without paying an additional subsidy therefor. From what I know of transportation companies they usually do not run at a loss. The inference therefore is that they either have been pooling issues and dividing the money among the three companies or they have been operating their railroads at a profit.

I want to vote for this appropriation if I can do so consistently, if the requirements of the Southern States demand it; but there certainly has not yet been presented to us any substantial reason why we should vote for it. Already they have every mail facility. It is rivalry, the competition between the railroad companies, that gives them that mail service, and, in the language of the Senator from New Hampshire, takes the mail from across the Atlantic or from Springfield and carries it to their homes in North Carolina, or South Carolina, or Georgia. I think that our friends in Colorado and Illinois and all the West need a subsidy much more than this railroad does, because the far West is not settled up by towns every two or three or five miles, as is the case in our sister States of the South. I want to vote for this appropriation; but I do not see how I can consistently do so, based upon the argument of my friend the Senator from North Carolina, its warmest advocate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I should be glad to have the question stated, so that the Senate may know exactly what it is voting upon.

Mr. RANSOM. Can I have the attention of the Senator from Ohio for one second? He has offered his amendment to the committee amendment which proposes to strike out the whole of the appropriation for fast-mail facilities.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the right always to add to a proposition before the question is taken on striking it out.

Mr. RANSOM. But the amendment of the committee strikes out the whole paragraph.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendment to the amendment is to perfect the text.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a right to move to amend the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. It is perfecting the text.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after line 7, page 5:

And for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Louisville, Covington, and Newport, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio, to Chattanooga, Tenn., for Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Tenn., Birmingham, Ala., Meridian, Miss., New Orleans, La., and Texas points, $150,000. Provided, however, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interests of the postal service.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio why he does not include Nashville after Louisville, that being the most direct route to New Orleans.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to inserting "Nashville."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that "Nashville" be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified, without objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified proposed to the amendment of the committee. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. Were he present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BATE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WHITE. I am informed that if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] with whom I am paired were present he would vote "nay." I therefore desire to have my vote recorded in the negative.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RANSOM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BATE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and therefore withhold my vote. If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to state that if my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] were here, he would vote "nay," and I release the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] from his pair with my colleague, so that he may vote. I believe they both think alike on this matter.

Mr. SQUIRE. Under the statement of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] that his colleague [Mr. DANIEL], with whom I am paired, if present, would vote "nay," I am enabled to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to inquire, does the Senator from Virginia say that his colleague, if present, would vote "nay" on this amendment?

Mr. HUNTON. I state very emphatically my opinion that my colleague would vote "nay" if he were here, because when we had this fight at the last session of Congress, he and I worked together upon a similar amendment, and voted together.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not question the Senator's right to speak for his absent colleague, but if he were here and voted "nay," it would be the first time that he ever voted for a subsidy in this body.

Mr. HUNTON and Mr. RANSOM. This is no subsidy.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with that Senator, but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 33; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. In line 2, on page 5, after the words "New Orleans," I move to strike out "$196,614.22" and insert "$393,228.44," and in that connection I desire to have read a letter which I shall send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Carolina that his amendment will be in order when the bill is reported to the Senate. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole, the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee having been retained.

Mr. BUTLER. Have I not the right now to move to amend the text of the bill? The amendment of the committee is not agreed to; so the text of the bill remains as it was.

Mr. CHANDLER. The unanimous-consent agreement was that all the committee amendments should be considered first, as the Senator will remember.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Kentucky did not object to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask if the understanding was not that all the committee amendments should be first considered?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; that was the order of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, Mr. President, I shall not offer the amendment now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that that point was not raised when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] offered an amendment to this amendment, and that is what I understand the Senator from South Carolina is now seeking to do.

Mr. CHANDLER. My point is that the committee amendment having been voted down there is no other amendment before the Senate, and no other amendment is in order until the committee amendments to the entire bill are disposed of.

Mr. BUTLER. I have just stated that I shall not offer the amendment now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, after line 22, to strike out:

For pay of agents and assistants to distribute stamps, and expenses of agency, $12,000.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. VILAS addressed the Chair.

Mr. PLATT. Did the Senator rise to make an inquiry about this item?

Mr. VILAS. I rose to make a statement about it and to oppose the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. That was my purpose, and I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. I shall be very brief. I have submitted to the Committee on Appropriations since this amendment was proposed by the committee a considerable number of documents and papers on the subject, which I think have already influenced their judgment in regard to the desirability of making this amendment.

In point of fact, I may say briefly, the Postmaster-General is of the opinion that this postage-stamp agency ought not to be discontinued; that it is of substantially the same service to the Government in the correction and examination of the manufacture of the stamps that it hitherto has been; that the saving which could be made would necessarily be very little indeed; and I hope that the committee, as represented by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, will themselves yield to the representations in that interest, and allow the language to stand as it is in the bill.

I want to add also that everything else has gone the same way, and it would be wrong to attempt to prosecute this small saving at the risk of injury.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know but what there is a great deal of force in the concluding suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin. It has been very clearly demonstrated that the Committee on Appropriations can not beat the railroad companies of the country, but I thought probably they might be able to conquer a little postage-stamp agency, which consists of one chief and seven clerks. I confess that I was rather inclined to press the fighting on this line in order to demonstrate the ability of the Committee on Appropriations to beat somebody. [Laughter.]

So far as this item is concerned, it involves an expenditure of only $12,000. As long as the postage stamps of the Government were made by contract by the American Bank Note Company, in New York and in Hartford, Conn., and as long as it was the case that those stamps were made by private parties in different cities of the Union it was absolutely necessary to have this postage-stamp agency and they were the custodians of the stamps when made. Now, for the first time, the postage stamps are being made here in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the committee was of the opinion that the necessity no longer existed for the maintenance of the postage-stamp agency.

I agree that the Senator from Wisconsin has stated the case fairly, that since this bill was reported to the Senate recommending the striking out of the provision for this agency the committee have agreed that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill they would incorporate a provision giving the Third Assistant Postmaster-General six clerks to do this work in his office, instead of eight who now constitute this subbureau. Since that was done and this bill has been reported the Postmaster-General has written me a lengthy letter, in which he insists that it would be safer to let this matter go over until next year, in order that we may have time, which he says we have not had as yet, to determine whether it is best to abolish this agency here in this city or not.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no feeling about the matter in any way.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it go.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kentucky, who has charge of this bill, underestimates the ability of the Appropriations Committee. The trouble is that the Appropriations Committee have too much to do. They can not attend to all of this business properly, as has been demonstrated by their failure to carry the provisions reported by them to the pending appropriation bill. It seems to me that if the appropriation bills were scattered among the various committees of the Senate having charge of the special subjects to which they relate, and each of those committees should take charge of the proper appropriation bill, they would be reported to the Senate in such shape that they could be readily passed.

We all have the greatest confidence in the ability of the Appropriations Committee, but not in their ability to carry through the Senate whatever they may think proper to propose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to renew in substance, though not in form, the amendment I offered awhile ago, and I hope the Senate will allow it the advantage at least of a conference upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 7, on page 5, the following:

And for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Cincinnati, Ohio, Louisville, Ky., to Nashville and Chattanooga, Tenn., Atlanta, Ga., Birmingham, Ala., Meridian, Miss., New Orleans, La., and Texas points, $150,000: Provided, however, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interests of the postal service.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order on the amendment that it has not been estimated for and that it is new legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know on what rule the Senator relies. I should like to have the rule read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule referred to by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVI.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether there has been any estimate from the Post-Office Department in regard to this amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; there never has been by any Postmaster-General.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nor for the amendment which has been adopted?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Never.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I must say that the point of order is well taken, and that it ought to have been taken with the same force on the amendment the Senate has adopted.

Mr. BATE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will please state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I present a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, this amendment, offered again by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], was not estimated for, and was never before the Appropriation Committee. It has, as an amendment, been voted down on an ye-and-nay vote in the Committee of the Whole, and is now, when again presented as an amendment, set aside on a point of order. My inquiry is, does not the fact of it having been voted on in the Committee of the Whole give it such status as will entitle it, when in the Senate, to such recognition as would override any point of order objecting to its consideration and entitle it to a vote when offered after it gets in the Senate?

In other words, Mr. President, does not the fact of its having been voted upon in the Committee of the Whole give such jurisdiction as can not be ousted by a point of order?

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to my colleague that the amendment of the committee was to strike out a provision which appeared in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. BATE. I understand that, but it seems to me the point is very clear. I only ask if the position of the amendment is changed at all. The very amendment presented by the Senator from Ohio has been recognized by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and voted upon. Now, having been recognized as in Committee of the Whole has he not a right to present it again in the Senate?

Mr. BUTLER. Is the bill in the Senate?

Mr. HARRIS. It is not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will answer the inquiry of the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Maryland made a point of order against the amendment, and the point of order is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] stated, as I understood him, that the bill is now in the Senate. I do not so understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BATE. What I wish to know is, what rights the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will have when the bill is reported to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair can not decide that question in advance, the bill not yet having been reported to the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, and I ask a vote upon it. I shall take no time in the discussion of it except simply to say that the amendment proposes to incorporate in the bill the same classification of the railway postal clerks which has already been passed by the Senate in a bill for that purpose at this session, I believe. The bill was reported by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. This amendment was then submitted independently as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill, reported favorably by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. I understand the Committee on Appropriations were advised that if this classification were carried into full effect it would considerably increase the expenditure for railway postal clerks, and for that reason they did not incorporate it with the bill, notwithstanding the Senate had passed the bill providing for the classification.

Mr. President, the amendment will not increase the appropriation for railway postal clerks if adopted by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, at this point. It simply will provide for this classification, leaving it to the Postmaster-General, so that he will be obliged to retain the expenditure for this branch of the service within the limits of the appropriation; but it will provide a just and useful arrangement of the clerks of that character in the Railway Mail Service.

I wish to add, what I think every Senator here will recognize at once without amplification, that there is no harder worked, more faithful, or more deserving class of men in any branch of the public service whatever, unless possibly in the Life-Saving Service, than the railway postal clerks of the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I raise the point of order against the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. May I be permitted to say, in reference to the point of order, that I believe it has always been ruled that when the Senate has converted a bill into an act, so far as this branch of the Legislature is concerned, it is then a law within the meaning of the rule, and it is not new legislation to put that upon an appropriation bill after it has been reported by a committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before discussing the point of order on the amendment I think it would be well for the Senate to know what the amendment is. It has not been read from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

Mr. VILAS. I think it has been read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not to-day.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, on page 4, insert:

That persons in the Railway Mail Service known as railway postal clerks shall, on and after the passage of this act, be divided into seven classes, whose salaries shall not exceed the following rates per annum: First class, not exceeding $800; second class, not exceeding $1,000; third class, not exceeding $1,200; fourth class, not exceeding $1,300; fifth class, not exceeding $1,500; sixth class, not exceeding $1,600; seventh class, not exceeding $1,800: Provided, That the Postmaster-General, in fixing the salaries of clerks in the different classes, may fix the salaries of clerks of the same class according to the amount of work done, the number of hours on duty, and the responsibility incurred by each, but shall not in any case allow a higher salary to any clerk of any class than the maximum fixed by this act for the class to which such clerk belongs.

That such railway postal clerks of class 7 as shall be detailed as chief clerks of divisions and such clerks of class 6 as may be detailed chief clerks of two or more lines shall, while traveling on the business of the Department, be paid from the appropriation for the transportation of mails on railroads their actual and necessary expenses, but not exceeding $3 per diem.

That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be kind enough to state what is the point of order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order was made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. Will the Senator state his point of order distinctly?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The point of order is that the amendment involves an increase of appropriation which has not been estimated for by any Department or recommended by any committee, standing or select. It is clearly a change of law, and is amenable to Rule XVI.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Kentucky make the point that it is general legislation?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I am to believe that the Senate has determined that question properly in the last four days I certainly do.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] whether the amendment as he offers it carries an appropriation?

Mr. VILAS. None whatever, and no increase of appropriation is asked.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Wisconsin claims that the amendment is made in order because it is to carry out an act or resolution previously passed by the Senate. But that provision applies only to the objection that an amendment increases an appropriation or adds a new item. It does not apply to the case of general legislation. The provision about general legislation was put into the Senate rule for the express purpose of preventing one branch of Congress from exercising a coercion upon the other by making new legislation a condition of the appropriations to carry on the Government. So the answer of the Senator from Wisconsin is not a good one to that objection.

It seems to me that an amendment which carries no appropriation, but which requires the force of a certain class in the Post-Office Department to be divided into seven distinct classes, and which provides that all existing laws inconsistent with that arrangement shall be repealed, is general legislation, if anything be general legislation, without the slightest regard to the matters that have been decided by the Senate at this session.

I understand the general difference between general legislation and special legislation to be this, that general legislation is legislation for the benefit of the whole people and applicable to the whole public. Special legislation is legislation for some private interest, as for the payment of a claim. The creation of a new department of the Government, a secretary of commerce, the creation of postal clerks for the Railway Mail Service, is just as much for the general public interest as any legislation we have, and as is the establishment of a new court or the making of new laws governing the transactions of men with each other.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would it interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts if I were to ask him a question which I think is in point? My idea, from what has occurred in the last few days, is that that is general legislation which a majority of the Senate do not want put into a bill, and nothing is general legislation which a majority do want. As I understand the definition of the Senator from Massachusetts, he says that is general legislation which is to redound to or result in the benefit or advantage of the whole people.

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to ask the Senator, in the light of the record made a few days ago, whether the Hawaiian cable appropriation was not general legislation, because it was said that it was to result in benefit to the whole people. If not, who were the special individuals favored by that appropriation?

Mr. HOAR. That is a question upon the discussion of which I am not going to enter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Massachusetts voted that that was not general legislation. I have become tangled on the question of special and general legislation.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that that is an appropriation for a public work. It stands on a broad and distinct principle, just as an appropriation to take out a rock in Boston Harbor or to clear out the Ohio River on the borders of Kentucky never has been treated as general legislation. The mere fact that the cable is an instrument of commerce for the benefit of the whole public does not make it general legislation. Let me illustrate my idea in answer to the Senator from Kentucky: An act to create a new department of Government or prescribing its duties would be general legislation, but an act to build a new post-office would not be. It is an instrument of the postal service just as the Hawaiian cable is an instrument of commerce and just as a harbor or river is an instrument or pathway of commerce out of which we clear obstructions.

I wish to express my dissent from what was said by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] just now, and what was said by my honorable friend from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] the other day. I do not apply this observation to either of those gentlemen at all, but it has become the fashion to suppose that if there can be two motives upon which a public man or a public body acts, the bad motive is always the one to be imputed to him or it. I have been in the Senate and the House of Representatives for more than a quarter of a century, and it is very rare indeed, in my opinion, that the rulings of either House on these questions of order, although they are always assailed by the losing party with this precise suggestion, have been wrong as a matter of principle. They have stood on solid ground, and the ruling of this body the other day stands on solid ground to be defended anywhere. The rulings are not to be explained simply by the desire of individual Senators one way or the other.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, supplemental to his very concise and truthful statement, that while there might be reflection upon the Senate for violating any great principle of parliamentary law for the purpose of accomplishing a result, this body, which makes its own rules by a majority vote, should at any time feel that to accomplish a good result it is right to abrogate a rule by a vote of the majority.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The question has been asked of the Senator from Wisconsin as to whether the amendment increases any item of appropriation. He answered and said no appropriation is asked for by the amendment. That is true; but the amendment which the Senator from Wisconsin has submitted, and against which I have raised the point of order, is the same amendment that is alluded to in the letter from the Postmaster-General which I hold in my hands, in which the amendment, as the Senator from Wisconsin will bear me out, is spoken of as the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. Under date of February 4 the Postmaster-General, on official paper, with its official heading, writes a letter addressed to me as chairman of the subcommittee on the Post-Office appropriation bill. He says:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 30th ultimo requesting me—to examine the inclosed amendment intended to be proposed to the bill by Mr. McMILLAN and inform the committee the additional cost should same be agreed to, and if the full number of the highest grades therein are filled.

The Postmaster-General—

Also out of what fund clerks, etc., granted fifteen days' leave of absence under the act of October 1, 1890, are paid.

Those are the questions I submitted to the Postmaster-General, as to what additional cost the adoption of this now pending amendment would entail upon the Department. He answers:

Replying, I would state that the additional cost of clerk hire under the circumstances mentioned in the first paragraph of your communication would be $1,069,400 per annum.

That is the small sum carried by the pending amendment, which we are told asks for no appropriation.

In answer to the last paragraph I beg to state that clerks in the Railway Mail Service are not granted annual leaves of absence with pay.

I do not wish to discuss the amendment after the point of order shall have been ruled upon. If the amendment is not excluded I simply want this letter to be considered and the fact that the proposition entails an increase of $1,069,400 a year.

Mr. VILAS. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the fact that the estimate which is given by the Postmaster-General is based upon the form of the interrogatory which the distinguished Senator from Kentucky put to him, and that was:

If the full number of the highest grades therein are filled.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir. Does not the Senator so intend?

Mr. VILAS. I think this in respect to that question: If this classification shall be authorized the Postmaster-General may make those discriminations in the pay of the postal clerks now in the service which a just recognition of the superior merit of some and of the lesser value of others would require, and that they could all be kept and no increase of the appropriation be made above what has been made in the bill; and I do not ask it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read as to the point of order.

The Secretary read the third clause of Rule XVI, as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule just read the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Postmaster-General," in line 24, page 4, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all clerks hereafter appointed to the Railway Mail Service and to perform duty in railway post-offices shall reside at some point on the route to which they are assigned; but railway mail clerks heretofore appointed and now performing such duty shall not be required to change their residence.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to say a word in explanation of the amendment. Up to a comparatively recent date all clerks in the Railway Mail Service might or might not reside upon the line of railway on which they were employed. They could reside off it.

Recently the Post-Office Department has made an order requiring all clerks to reside upon the line of their employment, not for operation in the future, but operative upon clerks who have been in the employ of the service for many years.

The situation was this: Many clerks who reside off the line of their employment had purchased their homes. Some of them held homes for which they were in debt and were working to get out, and the recent order of the Department requires those men to change their residence to another line of road or go out of the employment.

There have been brought to my attention several cases where the operation of this rule as to those who have been employed will work distress. There is one case where a railway-mail employee has an invalid wife here in Washington, living with her parents, as their straitened circumstances require. Her husband does not work on any line of road which runs through Washington, but on one sufficiently near here to enable him to come to the city on off days. In Winona, Minn., there is an old citizen who has been in the employ of the Railway Mail Service for fifteen years, and who has his home in that city. He is employed on a road in Minnesota which does not run through the city of Winona. He is required to change his place of residence or go out of the service after many years of faithful service therein.

The amendment provides that as to all clerks hereafter employed the ruling of the Department shall be operative, but that the old clerks, employed under different circumstances, who were allowed to reside on lines upon which they were not employed, shall have the liberty to reside there as heretofore.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have to raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I regret that very much.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to say a word before he makes the point of order?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have a seven-page typewritten letter from the Postmaster-General protesting against the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to say to the Senate, with the permission of the Senator from Kentucky, that although I know it requires unanimous consent to adopt the amendment I hope it will be adopted. My attention has been called, equally with the Senator from Minnesota, to several cases of hardship which will result from the enforcement of an iron rule by the Postmaster-General that all railway mail clerks shall reside on the line of road on which they are employed.

Moreover—and here is a point which I do not think has been sufficiently considered—when the Department requires a clerk to leave his home and go and reside in a particular place and make a new home at that point, there arises a moral obligation certainly to keep that clerk in the employment of the service. It localizes him, and it involves a promise to retain him so long as he is fit to do the work. It seems to me the rule ought to be corrected as proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. HOAR. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Kentucky—I sympathize with his view in general—to let the Senate consider the question and at least let it go into conference.

I wish then to call the attention of the Senate to a case I know personally. I know a wounded soldier who has been a clerk in the Railway Mail Service for a great many years. He is one of the best clerks in the service in our part of the country. He has been kept in office under all Administrations, and I have no doubt he will be kept in office under all Administrations as long as his usefulness lasts. He is a man whom the Senator from Kentucky, I am sure, would respect and make a friend of if he knew him. This gentleman nearly twenty years ago—I am not sure whether it was before or after his appointment to the Railway Mail Service, but it was a great while ago—bought a house, where he and his wife live, in a town a few miles out of Boston.

There is a railway connection between that town and Boston, so that he can get into Boston Monday morning, or whatever time he begins his work, as early as any Boston merchant gets to his countingroom. He can get in always to start with his mail train. He spends three weeks on the railway mail train and the fourth week at this town, where he has his little home. The Department will never lose an hour by the clerk living at this town.

Now, he has to sell out his home in these times, he has to move away from the town where his wife was born and where they have all their relations, acquaintances, and friendships—relations peculiarly valuable to that family because the head of the family is away from home three weeks out of four—in order to comply with the order of the Postmaster-General. It seems to me it is fair that the Senate shall have an opportunity to deal with the question and deal with it now, and let that man save his homestead.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I accede to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, and withdraw the point of order. But before a vote is taken it is but fair for me to let the Senate know what has been officially communicated to me.

Mr. HOAR. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have in my hand a lengthy letter from the Postmaster-General, under date of the 4th of February. It is a lengthy letter, and I will merely call attention to its salient points. The order was issued on the 2d day of June, 1894, known as General Order 378, requiring all postal clerks to live along the line of their duty.

Set forth at length in the communication is the necessity for that order; that where an accident occurred or a train broke down it was utterly impossible, unless the clerk lived along the route on which the service was to be rendered, to send out an extra train with a corps of skilled men. The result was that this extra duty fell upon comparatively very few of the postal clerks, and could not be distributed among those who lived off the line, for the Department had not time to get the clerks there to take service with the extra train.

On the 2d day of June, 1894, when General Order 378 was issued, there were 6,298 clerks employed in the Railway Mail Service. The Postmaster-General tells me that—

At that time it was ascertained that about 5,000 of these were living upon the lines to which assigned, and of this number it was known that 3,400 had entered the service after it was placed in the classified service, and under the agreement, that if appointed, they would reside upon the line to which assigned; the remaining number, estimated at 1,294, were residing remote from the lines upon which they were performing service.

As less than 500 clerks are now living away from the lines to which they are assigned, it will be seen that 794 have changed their residence in accordance with the order since June 2, 1894, and the Department is informed that nearly all of these 500 have made or are making arrangements to move on or before May 1, 1895, the limit of the time given for that purpose in the order named. Since the order was issued—

The Postmaster-General goes on to say—

I have had occasion to review it several times, to consider and reconsider such reasons as have been presented in favor of its revocation or modification, as well as such as impelled me to direct that the order be issued; but in doing this I have become thoroughly impressed with the belief that the order mentioned is in the interest of good service and necessary to insure, so far as may lie in the power of the Department, the regular and uninterrupted transmission of the mails, without which the Department can not be regarded as performing its full duties or the people be relieved from those serious embarrassments and losses, financial and otherwise, which result from failures to receive mails when due, and I therefore respectfully state that, in my opinion, the amendment proposed should not become a law.

The Postmaster-General goes on, and the letter concludes as follows:

Moreover, the adoption of this amendment for the benefit of 500 clerks or less, who have as yet failed to comply with the order, would work out great iniquity to the 794 clerks who have made greater or less sacrifice to comply with it.

I therefore respectfully yet earnestly recommend that the amendment be not adopted.

Very respectfully,

W. S. BISSELL, Postmaster-General.

I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order and let the Senate pass upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. It is evident from the letter of the Postmaster-General that this order was very coercive in its character and had the result, which was inevitable, that many men, at great inconvenience to themselves, with the alternative before them of either complying with it or leaving the Government service, have been compelled to change their place of residence. But there still remain 500 men, it is said, who have not complied with it, and presumably a great portion of them belong to the class of persons of whom examples were given in the cases stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and by myself—men who are utterly unable to change their places of residence because of the situation of their homesteads and their business relations in the localities where they live. The other system worked well enough for many years. I believe the predecessors of the present Postmaster-General had this policy under repeated consideration and rejected it.

Now, what does living along the line of railroad on which the clerk is employed mean? Take a post-office run of 150 miles, and it is very much the same thing, in a country thickly intersected with railroads, if the post-office clerk does not live at one of the terminals of the road, whether he lives at some intermediate place or at some other place 20 miles off on another line of road, which is frequently the case. There can be no possible objection to the application of this order to appointments as they may hereafter arise, but it is most cruel to apply it to a class of men who for many years have lived in places more or less distant from the line of road on which they work, but still not too distant from faithful and efficient service, who have incurred obligations, who have established homesteads, and perhaps are in debt for them, with every inducement to remain where they are.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to read the order so that the Senate may know exactly what it is. It is as follows:

[General Order No. 378.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT,
RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., June 2, 1895.

Ordered: That all clerks in the Railway Mail Service performing duty in railway post-offices take up their residence at some point on the route to which they are assigned, satisfactory to their division superintendent, on or before May 1, 1895.

Those who can do so, without considerable pecuniary loss, or sacrifice of home property, will be expected to comply with this order at once; the others at the earliest moment possible; none later than the date named.

By order of the Postmaster-General.

JAMES E. WHITE,
General Superintendent.

Before I sit down I desire to say that I have in my possession a number of communications from persons who have been in the service a good many years, and who have by the hardest and closest saving secured little homes at different places in the region they have been traveling as railway mail clerks. These letters protest most earnestly that they ought not to be required to abandon their homes either by sale or rent or otherwise in order to comply with this order. I have here also a communication which I think was handed to me by a member of the other House, which sets forth somewhat the reasons why this order should not stand and in favor of the little amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota. I ask that it may be put in the RECORD so that it may be seen.

Looking at the amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill proposed by Senator DAVIS from a railroad postal clerk's standpoint, there are many reasons why it should be adopted.

All clerks who have entered the service since the civil-service law was applied to the Railway Mail Service when sworn in agreed to move on to the line to which they were appointed, and if the Department had enforced their agreement the old men would not have been disturbed. Nearly all of the men appointed under the civil-service law are young and unmarried, while a large majority of the old men have by care and frugal living bought or are paying for homes. Many of them have grown old in the service, and their savings are invested in a comfortable home, which because of the existing hard times would have to be sacrificed in order to comply with this Department order.

Second. The new men agreed to move on to their lines before entering the service; the old men did not, and as a great majority of the clerks did live either at or near their terminal or on their own lines before this order was issued, and many have complied with the order by moving within the past eight months, there only remains about 500 of the old men who would be benefited by the proposed amendment, but in nearly every instance these men would be obliged to a great extent to sacrifice the savings of a lifetime, while because of the very few (500) the Department will not be benefited by enforcing the order.

Third. Many of these men live in suburbs of the large cities, and are much more available for emergency service than if they lived "on the line of their route," from 50 to 200 miles from the terminal.

Cases can be cited where clerks can go to and return to their homes on the same train carrying the car in which they work, but because their residence is beyond the terminal point of duty they will be forced to make a change.

Some clerks who are assigned to branch lines and live off the main line of the railway system, or vice versa, where the trains are always run to make connection, are now as available for emergency duty as those living along their line, but must move in accordance with this order.

A chief clerk having charge of about 100 men says in his district he never had a run go by default or with a man short because part of his men lived off the lines to which they were assigned.

These old clerks accepted their positions with the understanding that they need not change their residence.

Largely to the efforts of these same men, who have given years of the best of their lives to acquire a high degree of efficiency, we are indebted for the splendid postal service of the present time.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I want to say only a word. It seems to me this is a good order for the service for the reason I shall state. A person who is appointed on a railway route has always to live on that route so long as he remains in the service. He changes his home when he is promoted. A person may be appointed on a very insignificant route and develop there the highest capacity, so that it will be for the interest of the service to transfer him to a better and more important route, and it can not be done except by compelling him to change his residence.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say only a few words. I know the Senate is desirous of disposing of this question. The Postmaster-General has this whole matter in his power to a reasonable extent, even if we adopt the amendment. If any postal clerk does not do his duty, or lives where he can not be reached for an emergency, that will be good ground for removing him. Nobody would question that. But this goes further and says that he must live on the route. Let me put to the Senate a practical case.

Here is a man who is on a post-route leading out of Cincinnati, going South through the State of Kentucky. He lives over the river in Covington, which I suppose is half an hour's ride by ferry, perhaps twenty minutes. That is not on the route unless it goes through Covington. It is twenty minutes off the route, but he is not off the route in any practical sense of that term. Now, there is a man who belongs to a Kentucky family. He has voted there. He loves the State. All his associations and all the associations of his wife and children are there. I think if I were a Kentuckian I should value being a Kentuckian more than I should any office, large or small, in the gift of the people. I know I value being a Massachusetts man more than I should value any office, large or small; and I suppose every other member of this body has the same feeling about his own State.

Now, is it reasonable to come down on that man when he has been in the Government service twenty years and can not get new employment in these times, when he is an admirable officer, kept in through all changes of Administration, and apply to him this iron rule: "Give up your home; give up your State; take your wife and children from the place and the neighborhood they love, and go off?" I say there is not an officer in the public service for whom I have a higher respect than I have for the Postmaster-General. There has not been an officer in the public service under any Administration who deserves higher respect than he. But he has made, or whatever subordinate he is standing by has made, a mistake in the framing of this rule, and it is a rule operating as a gross injustice to a deserving class of American citizens. Let us repeal it; and still, whenever there is a single officer in the public service so situated that he can not do his duty and be on hand for an emergency, the Postmaster-General can deal with that individual case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest an amendment on page 5, at the top of the page, the first line, which I think the committee will agree to. It is to strike out the word "Springfield" and insert "Boston."

Mr. BLACKBURN. That ought to be done as long as it stays as it is now. There is but one line leaving Springfield. My information is that there will be five from Boston.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, page 2, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter no letter carrier, post-office clerk, or railway postal clerk shall be removed or requested to resign (except when arrested for a crime, when suspension or removal may take place at once in the discretion of the Postmaster-General) until after written charges shall have been preferred against him and after the charges shall have been examined into by the Post-Office Department, upon such reasonable notice to the person charged, and in such manner of examination as the regulations of the Post-Office Department may prescribe; but letter carriers, post-office clerks, or railway postal clerks may be suspended by the Postmaster-General pending the examination herein provided for.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. President, that it is new legislation, not recommended by any committee, and I understand it was rejected by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator puts it a little too strong.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will state that I am informed the committee declined to recommend it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The amendment was not reported by the Post-Office Committee, nor was it rejected.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is new legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No action was taken by the committee. I admit that the point of order is well taken, but I was in hopes that the Senator in charge of the bill would not make the point and permit a vote to be taken on it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It seems to me the civil service has been spread broad enough by proclamation, and I do not want to legislate it any broader.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I move my amendment to come in at the top of page 5, in line 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lines 2 and 3 on page 5 strike out the words "one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and fourteen dollars and twenty-two cents" and insert in lieu thereof "three hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred and twenty-eight dollars and forty-four cents."

Mr. BUTLER. In connection with the amendment I ask that the letter of the general manager of the Seaboard Air Line be read, which is short, and which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY COMPANY,
OFFICE GENERAL MANAGER,
Atlanta, Ga., January 25, 1895.

DEAR SIR: If I am correctly informed, a bill again appropriating a large mail subsidy to the Southern Railway has passed the House and is now in the hands of your committee.

It is not my purpose to say or do anything that is inimical to the interests of the Southern Railway, but, as their competitor in business, affording equal advantages, to ask that the Government act impartially in this matter, and extend to the Seaboard Air Line such aid as it extends to its competitor, in order that we may afford like facilities and service to the territory contiguous to our line.

I trust that your committee will appreciate the injustice that will be done us should we not participate in such aid as the Government may extend to transportation companies in our territory.

Yours, truly,

JNO. H. WINDER, General Manager.

Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Chairman Subcommittee (Post-Office Appropriation Bill).

Mr. BUTLER. The effect of the amendment simply is to double the appropriation, so that the Seaboard Air Line, running, as the general manager says, parallel with the Southern Railway, shall get the benefit of a similar amount.

Mr. GORMAN. I am compelled to raise the point of order on the amendment that it increases the appropriation and that it is not estimated for.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Chair decides the question of order I desire simply to say a word. I think the amendment is perhaps subject to a point of order, but if it is the whole provision of the bill is subject to a point of order. It has been stated over and over again by the Senator from Kentucky that there has been no estimate for it and no recommendation by any head of a Department or any committee of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In lines 2, 3, and 4, on page 5, I move to strike out, after the words "New Orleans," down to and including the word "cents," in line 4; that is, I move to strike out "$198,614.23," the amount appropriated for special fast mail facilities, and to insert in lieu thereof "$176,952.80," which is a reduction of exactly 10 per cent upon the existing rates that are being paid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MANDERSON. I demand the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, there is a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska insist on the demand?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do. I think this is a matter that practically was disposed of by a vote in Committee of the Whole in another form, and there should certainly be a pretty full attendance of the Senate when it is voted on. I suggest that there is no quorum in the Senate at present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll, the question being raised that there is not a quorum present.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Allen,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Berry,	George,	Manderson,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Ransom,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Martin,	Roach,
Camden,	Harris,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Smith,
Carey,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Wis.	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hill,	Murphy,	Teller,
Clark,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Peffer,	Vest,
Coke,	Jones of Ark.	Perkins,	Vilas,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Walsh,
Davis,	Lindsay,	Platt,	White.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. RANSOM. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that we take a division upon the amendment and not have a call of the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to suggest again to the Senate that we have an agreement to take up the unobjected bills on the Calendar to-morrow at 1 o'clock and continue until 2 o'clock, and that on Saturday from 1 o'clock until 2 o'clock the unobjected bills on the Calendar may be considered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Each Senator having a right to call up one bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Each Senator having a right under the rule to call up at least one bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MANDERSON. I certainly will not object to the request, but it will be necessary that I shall be absent from the Senate to-morrow on a very important matter—a very unusual thing, as my colleagues will agree.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Nebraska will have Saturday.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it may now consider a House bill, a public-building bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not yield for that purpose, for I have two public-building bills on my hands.

Mr. MANDERSON. But the Senator from Kentucky will be here to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Nebraska will be here, I trust, day after to-morrow.

Mr. WHITE. Had we not better wait until the pending bill is disposed of?

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator had better wait.

Mr. MANDERSON. I appeal to the Senate because I have to be absent.

Mr. STEWART. Let us first secure an understanding about the consideration of unobjected bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 109. It will take but a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us first get consent to the proposition of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very sorry that I shall not be able to consent to the request of the Senator from Maryland. I gave notice some days ago that I would call up the resolution I offered last week with a view of submitting some remarks on what is known as the pooling bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This agreement is to apply only from 1 until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall ask that permission of the Senate to-morrow. It was my purpose to take the floor this afternoon that I might proceed to-morrow.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I will change my request and ask for one hour after the Senator from South Carolina has concluded.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I will ask that the agreement be made for Saturday from 1 until 2 o'clock.

Mr. HUNTON. And Monday.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the bill that my colleague desires to have considered will be allowed to be taken up.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that Saturday from 1 to 3, two hours, be devoted to the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Make it two hours on Saturday.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator to withhold his request—

Mr. GORMAN. It will not interfere in the slightest degree with the bill the Senator's colleague desires to have considered if I can get an agreement that on Saturday from 1 until 3 o'clock unobjected bills on the Calendar may be considered.

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the Senate will agree to consider unobjected bills on the Calendar from 1 to 3 o'clock on Saturday, so that each Senator will have an opportunity to call up at least one bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then do not limit it to one hour.

Mr. GORMAN. No; two hours on Saturday, beginning at 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The request of the Senator from Maryland is that the Senate will agree to consider unobjected bills upon the Calendar on Saturday from 1 to 3 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. TURPIE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent, as I must necessarily be absent to-morrow, to call up the bill (H. R. 109) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall then have to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a similar bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to that, and I do not think anyone will object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not object to anything the Senator from Nebraska desires.

Mr. MANDERSON. I knew the Senator would not, in the kindness of his heart.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska for the consideration of the bill indicated by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWPORT, KY.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 2337) for the erection of a public building at Newport, Ky.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CUMBERLAND, MD.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4283) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Cumberland, Md.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARIS, KY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2576, providing $50,000 for the erection of a public building in the city of Paris, Ky., reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2576) for the erection of a public building at Paris, Ky.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4952) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. The bill was read yesterday evening, and I moved an amendment to strike out "two dollars and fifty cents" and insert "one dollar and twenty-five cents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, after the words "less than," it is proposed to strike out "two dollars and fifty" and insert "one dollar and twenty-five;" so as to read:

It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market and sell for not less than $1.25 per acre any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain less than one quarter section which in his judgment it would be proper to expose to sale after at least thirty days' notice by the land officers of the district in which such lands may be situated, etc.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator why this land will not produce the maximum sum, $2.50 an acre? Why is it necessary to reduce it to $1.25 an acre?

Mr. BERRY. I will state that the bill provides for a public offering of the land in the first place to the highest bidder. It then provides that the Secretary of the Interior may order to be sold at $1.25 an acre such land as has not been purchased at the first sale. It only covers such isolated tracts as have been ordered to be sold. In some States of the Union public land will bring more than $2.50 an acre, but there are lands which will not bring more than $1.25. They are isolated tracts which are doing the Government no good, and they can not be sold until after they have been first offered at public sale. The matter is still left in the discretion of the Department. The bill provides that no individual shall buy more than 160 acres, and it only applies to tracts which have been subject to homestead entry for three years and have not been taken.

The bill was passed unanimously by the House of Representatives and reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands of this body, with authority to me to move to strike out "$2.50 an acre" and insert "$1.25 an acre."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FORT M'KINNEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2409) granting certain lands in the abandoned military reservation at Fort McKinney, Johnson County, Wyo., to the State of Wyoming for public purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not object to this bill, but thin as the Senate is, I shall object to the next request of this character.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 13, after the word "purposes," to insert:

Provided, That the entry and selection of lands under the provisions of this act shall be construed as being in part satisfaction of the grant of lands to the State of Wyoming for charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions under the provisions of section 11 of the act of Congress of July 10, A. D. 1890.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should not this be received in full satisfaction? Is there a greater amount due to the State than these 1,280 acres?

Mr. CAREY. There were 500,000 acres donated to the State of Wyoming when it was admitted into the Union. I will simply state that this military post, which has been abandoned, is 40 miles from a railroad. The buildings would be valuable if there was anybody there to purchase them, but the experience of the State has been that the Government has not received $1,000 over and above expenses where it has sold buildings at a military post.

The Secretary of the Interior recommends the passage of the bill, and it has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BATE. From what committee does the Senator say the bill comes?

Mr. BERRY. It comes from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BATE. Has the bill been reported favorably?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; unanimously.

Mr. BATE. Has the bill been before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. This is an abandoned military reservation which has been turned over to the Interior Department.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 15, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 14, 1895.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MAIL-CARRYING CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, pursuant to section 413 of the Revised Statutes, a statement of all contracts for carrying the mails, etc., made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of the Interior for incorporation in the general deficiency bill for the removal of the members of the Eastern Cherokee band who have removed to the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HIRAM R. RHEA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4658) granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with an amendment to its title.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the title the words "and repealing the act of March 3, 1871."

The amendment was concurred in.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. DRAPER. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "appeal" in line 23, page 2, insert the following: "And provided further, That the court of appeals may, in its discretion, require, as a condition of the appeal, an additional injunction bond."

The amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. DRAPER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

SAMUEL GOLDWATER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2371) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has this bill been before the Invalid Pensions Committee of the House?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It has not. I ask that the Senate report be read. It is very short.

The report was read.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to say that I saw this man last fall. He is a poor old man and is almost, if not entirely, blind. The pension proposed is $15 per month. I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MOSES. I think the bill ought to go to a committee. I object to its present consideration.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARIAN C. GURNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2539) granting a pension to Marian C. Gurney.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent that this bill lie temporarily on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

NANCY G. ALLABACH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1639) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach.

Mr. HAYES. I ask that this bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were respectively read twice, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

A bill (S. 2141) granting a pension to Joseph Porter;

A bill (S. 2207) granting a pension to Robert Kiracofe;

A bill (S. 2654) granting an increase of pension to James H. Osgood;

A bill (S. 2671) granting an increase of pension to Florence W. Buskirk;

A bill (S. 1238) granting a pension to Catherine Dillon;

A bill (S. 2460) granting a pension to Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Brig. Gen. Edward Jardine;

A bill (S. 2148) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Granger;

A bill (S. 2491) granting a pension to Mary A. Hall;

A bill (S. 2696) granting a pension to William B. Matchett; and

A bill (S. 1539) granting a pension to Josephine Foote Fairfax.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were respectively read twice, and referred as stated:

A bill (S. 1530) for the relief of James Grace—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2372) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to place on file in the War Department the names of the officers and members of the Frontier Guards mustered into the volunteer military service of the United States on the 18th day of April, 1861, and issue discharges to the same—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2668) to provide for the erection of a public building in the cities of Winston-Salem, N. C.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 113) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the flags of certain regiments of Michigan Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (S. 1667) to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver, Colo.;

A bill (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in the State of Mississippi;

Joint resolution (S. R. 128) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice;

A bill (H. R. 6076) to repeal the special act granting a pension to Louisa M. Sippell;

A bill (H. R. 6974) to pension Mrs. Mary L. Clark;

A bill (H. R. 862) granting a pension to Pauline M. Pooler;

A bill (H. R. 6433) granting an increase of pension to Julia Weeks;

A bill (H. R. 6985) granting a pension to William Armstrong;

A bill (H. R. 7602) to pension Mary R. Williams;

A bill (H. R. 6131) to grant a pension to Sarah E. Roebuck;

A bill (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Richard R. Knight;

A bill (H. R. 7359) to pension Samuel F. Tenant;

A bill (H. R. 3988) granting a pension to Marilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.;

A bill (H. R. 5642) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brower, a hospital nurse during the war of the rebellion;

A bill (H. R. 116) for the erection of a public building at Brockton, Mass.;

A bill (H. R. 6868) for the relief of Catharine Ott, widow of Joseph Ott;

A bill (H. R. 2051) to grant a pension to Eunice Putman;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 140) to confirm the enlargement of the Red Cliff Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin, made in 1863, and for the allotment of same; and

A bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, except the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 12, 1895:

An act (H. R. 8226) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 6186) to pension Maria Davis;

An act (H. R. 7334) to sell certain lands in Montgomery County, Ark., to the Methodist Episcopal Church South; and

An act (H. R. 8552) to authorize the appointment of cadets to the Naval Academy.

On February 13, 1895:

An act (H. R. 397) to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 269) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of Kalamazoo River from Lake Michigan to Saugatuck.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. ALLISON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. Res. 252) relative to the British Venezuela-Guiana boundary dispute; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 27) to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Paterson, N. J.

The message also announced that under the concurrent resolution providing for the appointment of a committee on the part of the Senate to prepare and report a plan for the participation of Congress in the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, the Chair had appointed Senators PALMER, PASCO, MILLS, PROCTOR, SQUIRE, and PEPPER.

THREE PER CENT GOLD BONDS.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I present a report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the consideration of House resolution No. 273. That at the hour of 5 o'clock p.m. this day the previous question shall be considered as ordered on said resolution, and then without intervening motion votes shall be taken thereon until the same shall have been fully disposed of.

Mr. CATCHINGS. On this resolution I demand the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BRYAN) there were—ayes 56, noes 11.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution, there were on a division (demanded by Mr. SIBLEY)—ayes 58, noes 17.

Mr. SIMPSON. No quorum.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. Was the time for debate, fifteen minutes on a side, waived in any way?

The SPEAKER. The vote is being taken on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the rule require debate?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the demand is made for it.

The gentleman from Kansas makes the point that no quorum has voted, and the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. SIMPSON and Mr. CATCHINGS were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 28.

So the resolution was adopted.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with the special order for to-day I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen desiring to do so may be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD upon the pending resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent before proceeding that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, the purpose being to take up the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RAYNER indefinitely, on account of sickness.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho, with reference to which an order was made on yesterday to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate, be printed with the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WILLIAMS VS. SETTLE.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, at the request of Mr. WOODARD, who is necessarily absent from the House, I desire to give notice that the contested-election case of Williams vs. Settle will be called on the 19th instant.

PROPOSED BOND ISSUE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order of business for to-day.

The special order was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 275) authorizing the issue of $65,116,275 of gold 3 per cent bonds.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue and dispose of at not less than par in gold coin, bonds of the United States, with the qualities, privileges, and exemptions of bonds issued under the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act authorizing the refunding of the national debt," to an amount not exceeding $65,116,275, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, principal and interest payable in gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness, said bonds to be made payable not more than thirty years after date: Provided, however, That no part of the proceeds of the sale of such bonds nor of the notes redeemed with such proceeds shall be available for the payment of the current expenses of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce to the House in reference to the pending measure that recognitions for the time allowed for debate will be divided as follows: The Chair will recognize two members of the House on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], in the affirmative of the proposition; and two members of the committee, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOKINS], in the negative, which will consume four hours of the time, and the other hour will be divided among gentlemen not on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is important that in the beginning of this discussion the House should clearly understand the single issue presented in the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. Unless the debate can be held strictly to that issue and kept free from the larger and perplexing questions that naturally beset every financial discussion in this House, it may be impossible for the members to vote intelligently on the issue presented.

The question is simply this: An emergency has arisen which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, has made it incumbent on him to exercise the authority conferred upon him by law to purchase gold in order to reinforce and maintain the traditional and legal gold reserve in the Treasury. He has exercised that authority through a contract made with certain responsible parties, under which he has purchased from them three and one-half million ounces of gold of standard United States coin, for which he is to issue to them 4 per cent thirty-year coin bonds of the United States at such rate as to make the premium upon the bonds about 4½ per cent, and the right is reserved in the contract that should Congress authorize him to do so he may substitute for the bonds of the contract 3 per cent bonds at par specifically payable, principal and interest, in gold. The question is will the House give him the authority to substitute such bonds for those he may issue under existing law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is important, perhaps, that in laying the foundation for this discussion I should call the attention of the House to the emergency in the Treasury which has compelled the Secretary to make this contract.

Anyone who examines the Treasury statement this morning will find that so far as paying public expenditures is concerned the Treasury is in a very easy condition. There is an available cash balance of over $141,000,000, and there is in the hands of the disbursing officers, which is really in the hands of the Treasury—for the money in the hands of the disbursing officers is but the till money of the Treasury—there is in the hands of disbursing officers $24,000,000 available for current payments. So that this morning's report shows an available cash balance of over $165,000,000. Compare that condition with the condition of the Treasury time and again in recent years, when there was no excitement or apprehension in the public mind, and it will be found that so far as its assets are concerned it is in a very easy condition.

I have here a statement of the condition of the Treasury on the 31st day of May, 1892. I find on that day an available cash balance, including the gold reserve, of only $126,000,000, whereas we have to-day $141,428,000. There was then in the hands of disbursing officers only $8,739,000, whereas we have to-day in their hands $24,004,000, making an available cash balance in the Treasury to day of $165,000,000 as against $126,000,000 on the 31st day of May, 1892.

I might refer to other dates in the past few years when the Treasury was in much greater stress. This is, however, sufficient to satisfy the House, and ought to be sufficient to satisfy any man in the country, that there is no emergency, so far as the Treasury itself is concerned. But when I come to examine this morning's statement of what is called the gold reserve in the Treasury, I find it to be only $42,217,000. The Treasury as a bank of issue is in distress: the Treasury as a bank of issue has been for a year or more in distress, and because of its distress as a bank of issue it has been compelled to do that which any other safe and sound bank would do under like circumstances—that is, go out into the market to replenish the reserve which it keeps for the purpose of redeeming its current notes.

Let me explain for a moment the history and origin of this gold reserve in the Treasury. In the law of 1875, which provided for the resumption of specie payments, the Secretary of the Treasury was directed, by the sale of bonds and by the use of the surplus revenue, to accumulate a sufficient coin reserve in the Treasury to redeem the outstanding legal-tender notes of the Government on and after the 1st day of January, 1879, and it was expressly understood at the time, both by the language of the law and by the interpretation given to it by Mr. Sherman in his reports, that this power to issue bonds or to use the surplus revenue to maintain an adequate coin reserve was a continuing power, to be exercised whenever the reserve required its exercise on the part of the Treasury.

Secretary Sherman, from the sale of bonds, chiefly in London, and through the setting apart, from time to time, of such portions of the customs revenues, then by law payable in gold, as he could spare, accumulated what he declared to be a safe coin reserve to maintain the resumption of specie payment of the notes of the Government.

Mr. BLAND. I should like to ask the gentleman by what authority in 1879 customs dues were payable in gold?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Customs dues were payable in coin. I should have said, and gold was about the only coin in the country.

Mr. BLAND. Not in 1879?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. By the 1st of January, 1879, there were how many thousand Bland dollars in the country? About $20,000,000, or something like that amount.

Mr. BLAND. That was enough to pay a good many customs dues, and also bonds, when the bonds were sold by Mr. Sherman.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. The gentleman is correct in saying that customs dues were payable in coin, but gold being substantially the only coin in the country—for, on the 1st of January, 1879, the Bland Act had been in operation but a few months—customs duties were virtually payable in gold; and it was out of this surplus gold, together with the sale of $90,000,000 of bonds and the Alabama award, that we accumulated the amount of gold which the Secretary thought a proper and safe reserve for the resumption of specie payments.

In successive reports he gave it as his opinion that the Treasury should always maintain at least 40 per cent in coin of its note circulation; and when the resumption of specie payment began, on the 1st day of January, 1879, there was something over $133,000,000 of gold in the Treasury for the redemption of the $346,000,000 greenback notes then in circulation. That was the beginning of the gold reserve. In 1882 Congress, in the national banking act, seemed to give instructions that $100,000,000 was the proper gold reserve to be kept in the Treasury by providing that whenever the gold in the Treasury fell below $100,000,000 the issue of gold certificates should cease.

In 1885 the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, acting on what seemed thus to be the opinion of Congress, specifically set aside $100,000,000 of gold as the special Treasury reserve for the redemption of the legal-tender notes of the United States. And if I mistake not the majority of the Judiciary Committee of this House in a report made during the Fifty-second Congress held that such action was obligatory.

Now, the condition of the gold reserve or the amount of that gold reserve has from time to time varied in the history of our fiscal and banking operations.

So perfect was the confidence of the country when the Treasury resumed specie payments in 1879 that between the 1st day of January, 1879, and the 1st day of November, there were presented for redemption less than $12,000,000 of the notes of the Government; and during the entire twelve months that followed, from the 1st of November, 1879, to the 1st of November, 1880, there were presented for redemption under the resumption law but a little over $700,000 of the notes of the United States; and during all that time, instead of gold being drawn out of the Treasury, there was a steady flow of gold into the Treasury under the inevitable operation of that law of trade that where paper is known to be as good as gold business men always insist on having the paper instead of the gold.

There have been times, as I have said, when this gold reserve ran down. A very critical time came in the panic of 1890, when according to Secretary Windom, in the speech which he made in the city of New York the night he died, there was during the previous November (November, 1890) a run on the gold reserve to the amount of $24,000,000. I may state also that he called attention in his annual report of 1890 to the fact that during the crisis of the panic of 1890 the Treasury was virtually reduced, so far as available cash assets for the payment of its debts were concerned, to the $54,000,000 of the banking trust fund, which, under the operation of the Sherman law of the previous July, had been passed to the cash of the Treasury.

It thus being by law, Mr. Speaker, and by the policy of the Treasury Department ever since the resumption of specie payments began, the recognized safe and sound practice to maintain in the Treasury of the United States at least $100,000,000 of gold, or a sufficient amount of gold to maintain the redemption of the obligations of the Government that are redeemable in gold, it has three times within the last thirteen months become necessary for the Treasury of the United States to go into the market and purchase gold, as any other banker would have to do, to maintain its reserve. Twice in twelve months it has issued and sold in this country $50,000,000 of 5 per cent coin obligations of the Government, getting into the Treasury for them something over $117,- 000,000. But that experiment, as everyone can now see, was only a makeshift, and a very brief and futile makeshift in itself.

The gold acquired last January was taken out of the Treasury before November. The gold bought last November has been taken out of the Treasury in two months, so that anyone can see that these previous bond issues have simply resulted in exchanging our gold for our own bonds. Under these circumstances it became necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to maintain the gold reserve at the sum required by law, in order to maintain a ready and instantaneous redemption of the legal-tender note obligations of the Government, in order to carry out the pledge contained in the Sherman law and in the law that repealed the Sherman law, to maintain at a parity all the coin circulation of this country, I say it became necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to seek some other supply of gold than that he could obtain in this country. Under these circumstances Secretary Carlisle has done just what Secretary Sherman did, time and again, when he was refunding the public debt; just what he did when he was gathering the gold to make up this reserve in the Treasury; he has sought to purchase gold from other markets than our own.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one point, perhaps, which I can state appropriately here, though not directly in the line of my remarks. I have said that Secretary Sherman kept a gold reserve of 40 per cent, and declared in successive reports that he believed 40 per cent was the necessary and safe reserve. When that $100,000,000 was set apart; when the $100,000,000, by what seemed to be the instruction of Congress in 1882 was set apart, it was a gold reserve fund for the redemption of the greenbacks outstanding, $340,000,000, and for the support of $200,000,000 or more of standard silver dollars then in circulation.

But to-day $100,000,000 gold in the Treasury would be a reserve fund, first, for the redemption of $500,000,000 of outstanding legal-tender notes of the Government; then, of $500,000,000 outstanding overvalued silver coins, and in addition to that, under the operation of the present national banking law, of all the notes of all the national banks of the country. If 40 per cent was a proper and sufficient banking reserve in 1879 and 1880, no man can complain that, with these added charges and these additions to the redeemable notes of the Government, $100,000,000 is now more than a very modest reserve.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon an inquiry, he has spoken of the Treasury having purchased during the past year by the issue of bonds $117,000,000 of gold to maintain the redemption fund. I would ask him how the Treasury has obtained the money to meet the deficiency of nearly $109,000,000 in the revenues in the last nineteen months?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Still harping on my daughter! [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I have explained all that several times already. I have explained that under this endless-chain system—

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon the interruption, it seems to me that this is an exceedingly important point in this discussion, because it is true that the Secretary of the Treasury has obtained $117,000,000 of gold, ostensibly for the maintenance of the gold redemption fund, and yet during that same time there has been a deficiency in the revenues, up to last night, of almost $109,000,000. Now, I ask the gentleman if the $117,000,000 of gold, purchased ostensibly for the maintenance of the redemption fund, has not been used to the extent of nearly $109,000,000 to meet the deficiency in the revenue?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Well, Mr. Speaker, I answered that question, as I thought, in the debate on the sugar differential bill. Of course the gentleman is partly correct. The $117,000,000 of gold bought for the purpose of maintaining the gold reserve was, under the operation of the "endless-chain system," turned into other forms of money, which immediately swelled the cash in the Treasury and were available to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. But how could there have been an endless chain if the greenbacks that were redeemed had been held in the Treasury instead of being immediately paid out for current expenses?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Does not the gentleman know that under the law of 1874 the national-bank notes can be used to drain the Treasury as effectively as greenbacks?

Mr. DINGLEY. By no means, to any such degree.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Under the law of 1874 the Government has become the redeemer of the national-bank notes. The banks themselves need not redeem them, in the first place. Any man in the city of New York can go to the bank of my friend who sits before me [Mr. HENDRIX] and get a million dollars of his bank notes, take them to the Treasury, have them changed into greenbacks at one counter, and at another counter demand gold for the greenbacks.

Mr. DINGLEY. But my friend has not answered the practical question which I asked him with reference to the disposition of the $117,000,000 of gold bought to maintain the redemption fund.

I ask him again—because it is an important matter—if it is not true that $109,000,000 of the $117,000,000 purchased by the sale of bonds has been used to meet the deficiency of revenue rather than to maintain the gold redemption fund in the Treasury?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Undoubtedly a large part of it, or a sufficient part of it, has been used to meet the deficiency in the revenue. I have stated that in previous speeches. It has been so used, and therefore there is no call for any more money now to meet the revenue deficiency, because we have $65,000,000 in the Treasury over and above the $100,000,000 reserve.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has not that surplus, so called, in the Treasury been put there by the sale of bonds? If the bonds had not been sold would there have been any surplus in the Treasury? On the contrary, would there not have been a deficiency of $61,000,000?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. If you are going to give this a political turn, the difference between your Treasury management and ours is that when we wanted money we went out into the market and borrowed it, and when you wanted it you appropriated a trust fund of $54,000,000 in the Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not desire to bring in partisan considerations at all, but, as a matter of fact, not a dollar of the bank redemption fund was used by any Republican Administration for the current expenses of the Government; and when you speak of a Treasury balance of $41,000,000, $30,000,000 of that is the bank redemption fund, leaving only $11,000,000 belonging to the Government outside of that.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. If the gentleman from Maine will only read the report of Secretary Windom for December, 1890, he will find the fact stated, as I have already stated it, that on the 10th day of September of that year—I read the Secretary's words—

The amount of the bank redemption fund then in the Treasury which had been transferred to the available fund by the act of July 4, 1890, was $54,000,000, being substantially the amount of the available surplus on September 10, 1890.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it not true that not one dollar of the bank redemption fund was used prior to March 1, 1893, for the current expenses of the Government, but was used for the purpose of reducing the interest-bearing debt?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Why, it was passed to the available cash of the Government. Here is your own Secretary of the Treasury stating that on the 10th of September the bank redemption fund was about the only available cash in the Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. That may be; and yet to-day $30,000,000 of the $41,000,000 is simply the bank redemption fund; and there are only eleven millions of free money in the Treasury to-day outside of the one-hundred-million-dollar redemption fund and bank redemption fund.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have already admitted that the flush condition of the Treasury is partly the result of the issue of bonds, that the bonds which were issued for one purpose have by operation of law become available for another. And no doubt a large part of that surplus is the result of the sale of the bonds. But my argument is that the sale of those bonds having added far more than is needed for the comfortable running of the Government, the present sale is for an entirely different purpose. The present sale is for replenishing the reserve of the Treasury as a banker, not for adding to the assets of the Treasury for meeting running expenses.

Now, I believe I was saying when interrupted that Secretary Carlisle has done under these circumstances just what other Secretaries of the Treasury have been obliged to do—what Mr. SHERMAN, particularly, was obliged to do in 1878—in order to build up a gold reserve in the Treasury. He has made a contract for the sale of enough 4 per cent thirty-year coin bonds of the Government to bring into the Treasury 3,500,000 ounces of gold of the standard weight and fineness of the United States coin of to-day. He has sold those bonds at 4 per cent premium with the right to substitute for them at par 3 per cent bonds, provided they are specifically made payable in gold as to principal and interest.

If the Government maintains its traditional policy, if the Government fulfills the pledges of the Sherman Act and of the act repealing the Sherman Act, every bond that it issues to-day payable by its terms in coin is payable in gold, because the Government has pledged itself to keep all its coin on a parity with gold. It being certain, then, that unless a radical change is made in the policy of the Government—unless there is a repeal of existing laws, these 4 per cent bonds will be paid in gold when they fall due—it seemed to the Committee on Ways and Means that there ought to be no hesitation in accepting the option of specifically naming gold in the bonds, and thus securing the better rate, which will amount to a saving of over half a million dollars in interest a year.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman seems to intimate that Congress has the right to accept an alternate proposition. Is it not true that if Congress does not act, the bonds are sold at the rate of interest named in the contract; and if Congress does act, the only effect is to make the bonds specifically payable in gold and to save $16,000,000 in interest?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. That is it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Now, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I will if the gentleman will make his question short. I have but an hour, and I must save a part of my time for closing the debate.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I will make the question very short. I understand the gentleman to say the Secretary of the Treasury has sold a certain amount of bonds and bought a certain amount of gold. Is there any contract on that subject except that which has been presented in the report of the committee?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Of course not.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Now, in what part of that contract does the gentleman find any covenant or agreement on the part of the Government to take one dollar of gold? Is the contract anything more than a simple option—an agreement on the part of the Rothschilds to furnish the gold, but no agreement on the part of this Government to take it? And is that a contract which is binding as a covenant upon the United States to buy these $65,000,000 of gold at the rate named?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me that that is a question which I need delay the House upon.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is right in his suggestion. There is a contract made under which gold to-day is being put into the subtreasuries, a contract under which gold is to-day being loaded on shipboard to come to this country, a contract which is complete in itself and can not be set aside, because made under ample authority of existing law. The only question is whether we shall exercise our option to substitute for a thirty-year 4 per cent coin bond a thirty-year, or less, 3 per cent gold bond. And the effect of that is simply this: That as every coin contract, made in this country since the resumption of specie payments, is in truth a gold contract, we are saving half a million dollars a year without any additional burden or liability on the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this is simply a question of saving a half million of dollars a year in interest to the people of the United States. The gold dollar has been the standard of payment in this country by operation of law for twenty-five years. There is not a contract made by a member of Congress for the payment of money, there is not a contract in this country to-day, where the money is not actually specified, that is not a gold contract. Gold is the standard—the legal standard—by which all contracts are paid in this country, whether the payment be in gold or not, and gentlemen constantly confuse in their discussions on this floor a very important distinction between the standard of payment and the currency of payment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Just there will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon an interruption now. He will have his own time.

Now, there is another reason why it seems to me that there ought to be no objection to the issue of a bond by the Government of the United States to be paid in gold at its maturity. We receive gold from the purchaser of these bonds. We stipulate that we shall receive from them 3,500,000 ounces of gold in exchange for the bonds, and what objection is there in law or in equity to our agreeing to return to them 3,500,000 ounces in gold? That is the contract.

A word now as to what will doubtless be a matter of great discussion in the House. Why were the bonds sold at what seems to be a lower rate than the market rate in this country? Simply because two futile attempts had shown the Secretary that to market the bonds here would give no permanent help to the gold reserve in the Treasury, and consequently the Secretary has had to do what Secretary Sherman had to do; that is, he has had to look out for means of turning the tide of gold imports toward this country, and has had to take the rates at which the bonds could be sold, and the only rates at which they could be sold, for the purpose of turning the tide of gold imports toward this country.

Mr. McMILLIN. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from West Virginia, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask whether the gentleman thinks it will not be possible, even after this act, if it should pass, to raid the gold reserve in the Treasury as originally, the only difference being that it would simply take a little more time, but puts no permanent stop to it?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I will say in response to the gentleman from Tennessee, it was possible from the first day that specie payments were resumed to raid the gold reserve in the Treasury and take it all out in a week. But if we can restore confidence in this country we will put the Treasury in such credit that it will be able to exchange its notes for gold and keep up the gold reserve without trouble.

I had intended to speak on other points in connection with the matter, but am compelled to reserve the remainder of my time to close the debate. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eighteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia who has just addressed the House in favor of this proposition that is pending under the special rule adopted to-day devoted considerable time in justification of the Administration in issuing bonds and replenishing the Treasury thereby. I shall take no time in attempting to answer him on that proposition. That, as I understand it, is not the question presented to the House to pass upon.

We have been informed by the President of the United States, in a special message to Congress which was read here a few days ago, that a contract has been already made for the issuance of bonds; and the question submitted to us is not whether a new loan shall be negotiated and new bonds issued, but whether this Congress will authorize the President to change the policy of the Government, and issue a gold bond.

I am opposed to this resolution because I am opposed to this Government at this late day in our financial transactions changing its policy with reference to the issuance of bonds; and in view of my opposition I desire the attention of the House for a brief period only to give some of the reasons that impel me to hold that position.

During the long period the Republican party controlled this country, commencing, as it did, in the early days of secession, during all the dark and stormy period of war and up to a few years ago, it was enabled to enact laws and adopt measures to replenish the Treasury and furnish the necessary means to pay the expenses of the Government without a resort to the extraordinary methods that have been adopted by President Cleveland and his Secretary of the Treasury in the contract that is before us to-day.

For more than thirty-five years the settled policy of this Government has been to issue our Government bonds payable in coin. The bonds that have been heretofore issued are not payable in gold, or silver, or greenbacks, but are payable in coin. Now, the gentleman who has just addressed the House [Mr. WILSON of West Virginia] says that the established construction of those bonds is that "coin" means "gold," and that it is just as well to put the word "gold" in there as it is to put in the word "coin." If that be true, and President Cleveland and his Secretary of the Treasury understood that when they were negotiating this loan of $65,000,000 with this syndicate, why did they not call the attention of the syndicate to this fact and let them understand that the Government would not deviate from its settled policy, but that the bonds would be paid in gold, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] says.

It seems to me that the time to urge this argument is not here upon the members of the House and Senate and the country, but was with these foreign capitalists when the negotiation for the bonds was pending. They should have been informed that the Government of the United States has a settled policy on this bond question, and that the people of this country have never repudiated their obligations. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of members of this House to the fact that the Republican party in negotiating loans reduced rates of interest year after year during the whole history of bond issues. When Judge Folger, of New York, was the Secretary of the Treasury in 1883 he extended $300,000,000 of our obligations for 3 per cent on a coin bond at a time when the condition of our country was not as good as it is to-day, at a time when we did not have as vast industries, as great wealth as we have stored away in the vaults of private individuals and corporations and in the great banks of the country. That vast sum of $300,000,000 was negotiated, not with a foreign syndicate, not by a private contract with the law partner of the President as legal adviser of the syndicate making the loan, but it was negotiated in the open sunlight, and with the American people, at a rate of only 3 per cent interest. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this change in the condition of the bond because in my judgment it will destroy the credit of the United States. The President, in his message to Congress, has said that by adopting this resolution and approving of this gold contract more than $16,000,000 will be saved to the Government in thirty years that the bonds are stipulated to run. I say, Mr. Speaker, in my humble judgment, instead of being a saving to the Government of the United States, that in the years to come it would cost more than $100,000,000 to change the character of our Government obligations.

This country is in many respects like an individual engaged in business, young, energetic, and aggressive. Such a business man must be a debtor, and must have any number of creditors. If he is a good business man he issues the same kind of an obligation to all of his creditors, and simply issues an evidence of indebtedness to all the people from whom he borrows money or with whom he deals or enters into obligations. But, sir, if this business man should happen on a fatal day to walk into a broker's shop and ask for a loan and should agree to give a mortgage upon his property as security, that moment his credit would be destroyed. No other creditor would allow him money or credit without his giving as good security as the broker exacted, and the creditors that already existed, instead of extending their obligations and giving him time, would insist upon the payment of their money, and the result would be that by the change of his policy the prosperous business man would be made a bankrupt.

Now, the same thing would occur to the Government of the United States. No new loan could be made in other than gold bonds, while the holders of the coin bonds now out would insist that their bonds must be changed to gold ones. Under the policy that we have adopted the holders of these coin bonds are directly interested in maintaining the integrity of our financial system. They know that while the coin bonds have always been paid in gold under Republican Administrations and under the present Administration, yet that there is still a strong party in this country which believes that those obligations could be paid in silver and the letter of the bonds be kept. Hence, the holders of the Government coin bonds are interested in maintaining the parity of the two metals. They are interested in seeing that the money of the Government—greenbacks, silver, and gold—shall be of like value.

But, sir, if you should adopt the recommendations of the President in this message, and give him the power of issuing a gold bond, you would destroy this principle that operates to control the bondholder to-day and you would make him a bear upon the market. The bondholder whose bond reads "payable in gold" is directly interested in driving this Government upon a silver basis.

Why do I say that? Because if he can drive gold to a premium and drive this Government upon a silver basis he enhances the value of the bond that is payable in gold. The moment that this $62,000,000 mentioned in the President's message were issued in gold bonds you would have August Belmont & Co. and J. S. Morgan & Co. and the Rothschilds and their financial agents in London directly interested in looting the Treasury of the United States of its gold, in destroying the financial stability of our Government, and in driving us upon a silver basis, because they thereby could double the value of their bonds. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What a remarkable attitude the President and his Secretary of the Treasury are in! They are stating to the public that this loan is to replenish the Treasury so as to maintain the parity of the metals, gold and silver, and to do this are trying to induce Congress to authorize them to issue a gold bond.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that these considerations are sufficient to show that the paltry sum of $16,000,000 that has been suggested in the President's message ought not to have any weight with the members of this House in determining their vote upon this question. Certainly it ought not to have any weight with the Republican members of this House, when they know from the earliest history of the Republican party we have had but one policy upon this question, and that policy has carried this country on in a course of prosperity and financial and industrial success that has been the marvel of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have suggested these few considerations in a general way for the reason of my opposition to this measure. When we come to consider the character of the contract that has been entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury, we find reasons that are too numerous to mention why we should not give it our sanction by an affirmative vote in this House. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is one of the most remarkable contracts that was ever entered into by this Government with any private corporation, either foreign or domestic. What is it? It is a contract, in the first place, that has been made in private. Heretofore the obligations of the Government had been entered into in the open market, with the entire American public taken into the confidence of the Administration. Even the loans that have been previously made by this Administration have been of that character.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] has stated that $117,000,000 has been placed in the Treasury of the United States by the two loans that have been made within less than a year by this Administration. Those loans were not made in secret with a foreign syndicate. They were made with the American people in the light of day, with every American citizen having the privilege of sending his bid to the Treasury of the United States and adding his sum of money to replenish the Treasury of the United States. Mr. Speaker, what has been the result of this policy? The result is that loans have been made for less than 3 per cent on ten-year bonds.

A MEMBER. Coin bonds.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. For less than 3 per cent on coin ten-year bonds; and here we have a contract entered into secretly between a banking concern in New York and one in London, not for a ten-year bond, not for a fifteen-year bond, but for a thirty-year bond, and one that may, under its terms, run for a hundred years; a bond, Mr. Speaker, that requires the Government of the United States to pay 3½ per cent interest, and that interest is to be paid quarterly.

On the very day that this contract was signed, on the very day that the President of the United States sent his message to Congress, holding up this bribe of $16,000,000 to the House and the Senate for their approval, like bonds were selling in the open market, with only twelve years to run, at 110½. This syndicate bought them at 104½, payable thirty years after their date.

Mr. Carlisle admitted, when he was before the Committee on Ways and Means, that on the same basis, with thirty years to run, the market value of these bonds at the time when he made this contract with this foreign syndicate was 119½. In other words, the President and his Secretary sold these bonds for $9,500,000, in round numbers, less than they were selling for in the open market. Then he gave a rate of interest on the bonds higher than any civilized country in the world is paying to-day for its new obligations. Even bankrupt Egypt has negotiated her loans for less than the figures that the President and his Secretary have given to this syndicate of brokers. The richest, the grandest, and the proudest country in the world, under the rule of Democracy, has been reduced to this low estate.

They have given a higher rate of interest than little Norway, Belgium, France, or England pay on their obligations. They have given a higher rate of interest than the British provinces are compelled to pay; and yet they come in here, after having negotiated this secret loan, and ask the American Congress to confirm them in this contract with these concessions to Belmont & Co., of New York, and Rothschild & Co., of London. When President Cleveland penned that message and sent it to Congress it was not for patriotic, but political purposes.

He wanted to throw the responsibility upon Congress of approving an indefensible contract with this syndicate that was represented in the negotiations by his former law partner. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMPSON. That is business, not politics. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, let us see what this syndicate will make by this contract, negotiated in the manner I have indicated. They make $9,500,000, in round numbers, when the contract is signed. The President says they will make over $16,000,000 at the expiration of the period the bonds run.

The gentleman from West Virginia, when he was addressing the House, undertook to excuse the hard terms of this contract for the Government by claiming that it was difficult to negotiate this loan. I hold, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that the majority of the American people are with me, that had the President and his Secretary of the Treasury advertised this loan, as has been done on all previous occasions, the people would have responded at once, and I have evidence here which confirms me in my view and tends to show the enormous profits that will be made by this syndicate of foreign capitalists. I find, in a financial article published in the Washington Post to-day, that Messrs. Alexander Brown & Sons, bankers of Baltimore, had agreed with Messrs. August Belmont & Co. to become members of this syndicate and to take $1,135,000 of the bonds, but before these negotiations are fully concluded with the United States the demand in our own country for this loan is so great that Belmont & Co. have informed Alexander Brown & Sons that instead of $1,135,000 they can have only $100,000 of the bonds.

Mr. BOWERS of California. And that demand was in our own country?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from California suggests, that demand came from our own people.

Mr. TRACEY. Where would it have been if gold had gone to a premium?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Gold would not have gone to a premium. That is impossible. That is one of the pretenses put forward by the President to coerce the members of this House and of the Senate of the United States into the adoption of this contract, which will receive the condemnation of all honest citizens in every section of our country. [Applause.]

When the President sent that message to this House and undertook to load this contract upon Congress he knew that a majority of the Senate of the United States favored free and unlimited coinage of silver. He knew that never could a gold bond bill go through that body, to say nothing of the sentiment in this House. Then why did he send that message here? He sent it for the purpose of misleading the people of this country. [Applause.]

He had made a contract, Mr. Speaker, that he knew the American public would not approve of. He had made a contract with his financial friends, giving them the enormous profits that I have indicated here, and he desired by that message to mislead the public and get the approval of Congress on the idea that $16,000,000 of interest would be saved by giving such approval. Now, sir, I say for one—and I hope I speak for the entire Republican party and the great mass of the Democrats, too—I say that I am not willing to become particeps criminis in any such transaction. [Applause.]

I am not willing to say by vote or voice that the President of the United States can prostitute the interests of our Government, derange our financial system, and bring disgrace upon the American nation in the interest of either these bankers in New York or the foreign syndicate represented by Rothschild and company. [Applause.]

It is time for us, Mr. Speaker, to indicate to this Administration that we can be patriotic without adopting all of the financial heresies and vagaries that the President and his Secretary of the Treasury have indulged in in this contract and in other transactions. [Applause.] I have grown tired of the statement that is made here: "If you do not support this Administration you are not patriotic."

I believe that, as a Representative of the people from the great State of Illinois, I have the same right to an independent opinion upon these questions as the President or his Secretary of the Treasury [applause], and I believe that the members of this House and of the Senate are as patriotic as he, and by not adopting his policy we are not striking a blow at this Government, either in its financial or industrial policy.

If President Cleveland and his political associates had followed the grand and patriotic course that was always pursued by the Republican party we never should have experienced any of the troubles that have beset this nation since the 4th of March, 1893. [Applause on the Republican side.] If, in the reorganization of our legislation and the substitution of new tariff laws for those that were on the statute book when the Republican party went out of power, this Administration had enabled the Government to raise its revenues to an amount equal to or exceeding its expenditures, we should never have had occasion to negotiate a loan of this character, or a loan of the character of either of those that have been negotiated by President Cleveland.

I trust the Republican members at least of this House will remember their party history, will remember its grand record on all financial matters, and will stand by that on the vote that will be taken on the pending measure. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PENCE. Before the gentleman closes I would like to ask him a question for the information of the House. In the contract as printed in the report between Mr. Carlisle on the one side and the London bankers on the other one of the witnesses is Francis L. Stetson, who, we understand, is a former partner of President Cleveland. Now, I understand the gentleman's statement awhile ago to be that these bankers were represented by Mr. Stetson. If in the investigations before the gentleman's committee there was anything throwing light upon that point, and if the gentleman will be good enough to inform the House of it, I know we should like to hear it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. My understanding is he represented the syndicate and attested the contract as such representative.

Mr. COX. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to one point as he is a member of the committee reporting this joint resolution. Why was the provision inserted in this contract that on any bonds which may be issued between now and the 1st of October next this syndicate shall have the option?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is another part of the contract; and that is one of the reasons why I condemn it.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman precisely. How does it happen that the United States Government gives an option upon its credit from now until October 1?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Nobody but this syndicate and the Secretary of the Treasury and the President can answer that question. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Let them answer.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used thirty minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I desire to yield ten minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]; but before doing so I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. POWERS. I wish to offer an amendment to the pending resolution.

The SPEAKER. General debate is proceeding. An amendment is not in order.

Mr. POWERS. Then I ask to have this proposition read at the Clerk's desk for information.

The SPEAKER. It can be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the proviso on page 2 add:

"And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed as changing the avowed policy of the Government to pay all its outstanding bonds in gold."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the little time allowed me I had, perhaps, best utilize a moment at the commencement by stating that I believe in preserving the national faith. I believe that every obligation of this Government, under well-settled law as construed for almost two decades by all Administrations, and as it is to be enforced by virtue of an honest sentiment of an honest people, is payable, at the option of the holder, in gold or its equivalent. Coin means gold in the Government obligations, at the holder's option. The country has so understood it; and the world so understands it to-day. The country understood it when the bonds were negotiated last year on the basis of 2.9 per cent interest, these bonds to mature in a short period. The very men who made the contract with the Secretary of the Treasury on the 8th day of this month understand it; because, while they get a profit of $10,000,000 above the market, if they had believed that these bonds were payable in silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, you could not have persuaded them to purchase. [Applause.]

Bear with me a minute while I state briefly my reasons for voting against this bill. I am not going into ancient history; let us go into modern history—last month and this month. On the 28th day of January the President sent his message to Congress that begot the so-called second Springer birth. [Laughter.] These births come pretty frequently. In that message for the first time came a suggestion—and it came from the Chief Executive—that there was doubt as to whether coin in a Government obligation meant gold. There was no doubt in New York, there was no doubt in London, there was no doubt in Paris, because at those three points the bonds of the United States maturing in 1907 were valued on the basis of 3 per cent interest and less.

The Springer bill came before the House and was voted down by a large majority. I undertake to say in the light of the surroundings that all the House knew that the President of the United States knew when he sent that message to Congress that there could be no legislation along that line. The country must understand that well. The President knew that a free coinage 16 to 1 Senate of the United States would not pass that bill or anything akin to it.

Why did he send this message casting this doubt? Proof that he knew it! Yes. The Springer bill went down on the 7th day of February. On the 8th comes this contract. The President was swift in his negotiations. He was ready to negotiate. He went right on as a practical man, knowing that there would be no legislation. Still doubt in his mind? Still doubt in anybody's mind as to whether coin meant gold in the Government obligations? The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] offered his amendment to the Reed substitute, reciting the fact that the bonds would be payable in silver at the option of the Government. It went to the wall by 43 majority in a vote of about 300. Still the President seemed to be doubtful; still the syndicate seemed to be doubtful, and the contract materialized inside of twelve hours after the time the Springer bill was defeated! And all know—it is an open secret here—that the Reed substitute, the only one which had the remotest chance to pass Congress, and which would have wrought the necessary cure to the Treasury, went to its death at the command of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, as evidenced by the vote of the "cuckoos." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, the country will understand this. What next happened? The contract materialized on the 8th day of February. That same day comes this message from the President of the United States informing us that he had placed the bonds at ten millions below the rate of the market; ten millions below the market rate in New York, Paris, and London and in all the civilized world. Why did he send the message? Did he expect to secure this legislation? Oh, no; he knew it could not pass. He knew a free-coinage Senate would not pass it, whatever the House might see proper to do.

Mr. STRAUS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. STRAUS. Is it not because we have a free-coinage Senate that we are obliged to sell bonds at this rate? [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. WALKER. No. We have had a free-coinage Senate for five years.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, if the President in good faith put in this reserve, if in ten days gold bonds were authorized specifically by Congress—if it was done—it made them no better. Did he do it in good faith? No. Why, then, was it put in? To muddy the waters and to deceive the country, while the favored syndicate go away with the $10,000,000 of dishonorable profit. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A MEMBER. The act of a cuttlefish.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The act of the cuttlefish, as the gentleman suggests, that was to hide the transaction as much as possible. And the legislation is not to be enacted.

But who gets the profits? Why, this band of favored contractors, this syndicate. Now, why? I will say to you, measuring my words—

The SPEAKER. The time yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I yield two minutes more to my colleague.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, that is a very short time, but I do not think my colleague can spare more than that.

Now, with all of these facts standing around, I say it in sorrow that I can not look with pride on the performance of the Executive of the nation. I say further that if it was a Republican Secretary of the Treasury that had made this contract, that this Democratic House, in my judgment, would have impeached him. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SNODGRASS. And ought to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yet these gentlemen say our credit is gone. Why, right here I have a telegram received this morning that the 4 per cents, due in 1907, payable in coin, command in the markets of the world a premium of 10½ to-day—now—at this moment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Another reason why I am opposed to this bill, outside of this question of saving: Congress has its function; the executive has its function, which is to execute the law, not to make extortionate contracts—ten millions of a loss to the Treasury—and say to the people of this country, you shall lose this money unless you allow yourself to be bulldozed by the Executive! I will not submit to the purchase of legislation at such a price, at such dictation unlawfully attempted by the President. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague on the committee, General GROSVENOR.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it has gone out to the people of this country that we who oppose the passage of this joint resolution are doing something or failing to do something in which and by which the honor and credit and integrity of the United States of America are involved.

In the few minutes which have been allotted to me I propose to address myself to that question. What is involved in the adoption or nonadoption of the resolution under consideration? What is imperiled here in this country? Apparently, judging from the commotion which exists in the East and in some portions of the West, and the suggestions which we hear coming from the East, and the occasional misdirected mutterings from the West, it seems to have been assumed that there is here in the air an unexecuted contract of the Government, and that our action here to-day will operate by either as a confirmation of that contract or a repudiation of that contract; and that the latter course will be an act of bad faith on the part of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there never was a greater fallacy than this. Let us see what is the status of this affair at this particular time. What is the condition independent of this outcry? What are the facts independent of the lack of knowledge so prevalent everywhere? The Government of the United States, through its Secretary of the Treasury, has made a contract with certain foreign capitalists, to wit, Rothschild & Sons and J. S. Morgan & Co., of the city of London. It is an executed contract. That is to say, there is nothing left undone in the matter of the contract. It is completed in every respect, so far as to make it a binding contract upon the parties thereto—binding upon the Rothschilds, binding upon J. S. Morgan & Co., and binding upon the Government of the United States of America, because it was made by its Secretary of the Treasury under ample power conferred by law.

The contract is in the words and figures following:

CONTRACT.

This agreement entered into this 8th day of February, 1895, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and themselves, and Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves, parties of the second part:

Witnesseth: Whereas it is provided by the Revised Statutes of the United States (section 3700) that the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase coin with any of the bonds or notes of the United States authorized by law, at such rates and upon such terms as he may deem most advantageous to the public interests; and the Secretary of the Treasury now deems that an emergency exists in which the public interests require that, as hereinafter provided, coin shall be purchased with the bonds of the United States, of the description hereinafter mentioned, authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, being bonds of the United States described in an act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt."

Now, therefore, the said parties of the second part hereby agree to sell and deliver to the United States 3,500,000 ounces of standard gold coin of the United States, at the rate of $17.80441 per ounce, payable in United States 4 per cent thirty-year coupon or registered bonds, said bonds to be dated February 1, 1895, and payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years from date, issued under the acts of Congress of July 14, 1870, January 20, 1871, and January 14, 1875, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly.

First. Such purchase and sale of gold coin being made on the following conditions:

1. At least one-half of all coin deliverable hereunder shall be obtained in and shipped from Europe, but the shipments shall not be required to exceed 300,000 ounces per month, unless the parties of the second part shall consent thereto.

2. All deliveries shall be made at any of the subtreasuries or at any other legal depository of the United States.

3. All gold coins delivered shall be received on the basis of 25½ grains of standard gold per dollar, if within limit of tolerance.

4. Bonds delivered under this contract are to be delivered free of accrued interest, which is to be assumed and paid by the parties of the second part at the time of their delivery to them.

Second. Should the Secretary of the Treasury desire to offer or sell any bonds of the United States on or before the 1st day of October, 1895, he shall first offer the same to the parties of the second part; but thereafter he shall be free from every such obligation to the parties of the second part.

Third. The Secretary of the Treasury hereby reserves the right, within ten days from the date hereof, in case he shall receive authority from Congress therefor, to substitute any bonds of the United States, bearing 3 per cent interest, of which the principal and interest shall be specifically payable in United States gold coin of the present weight and fineness for the bonds herein alluded to; such 3 per cent bonds to be accepted by the parties of the second part at par, i. e., at $18.60465 per ounce of standard gold.

Fourth. No bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part, or either of them, except in payment for coin from time to time received hereunder; whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall and will deliver the bonds as herein provided, at such places as shall be designated by the parties of the second part. Any expense of delivery out of the United States shall be assumed and paid by the parties of the second part.

Fifth. In consideration of the purchase of such coin, the parties of the second part, and their associates hereunder, assume and will bear all the expense and inevitable loss of bringing gold from Europe hereunder; and, as far as lies in their power, will exert all financial influence and will make all legitimate efforts to protect the Treasury of the United States against the withdrawals of gold pending the complete performance of this contract.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands in five parts this 8th day of February, 1895.

J. G. CARLISLE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

AUGUST BELMONT & CO.,

On behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, London, and themselves.

J. P. MORGAN & CO.,

On behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., London, and themselves.

Attest:

W. E. CURTIS,

FRANCIS LYNDE STETSON.

Here is the contract, complete, symmetrical, and not very hard to understand. The President comes to Congress with his message, and presents now, somewhat reluctantly, it appears, this written contract; and it will be seen that by that contract it is stipulated that we need not carry out the terms of that contract if we see fit to make another and different contract. A vote in the negative leaves the written contract in full force and effect. The Treasury of the United States, therefore, will be guarded and protected with the same amount of gold coin in the one case as in the other. If we decide by our vote to-day to change the terms of that contract and make another contract by which we deliver gold bonds at 3 per cent interest we get no more gold, the Treasury is no stronger, and the faith of the Government is not, therefore, affected in the smallest degree; and he who stands here crying out to-day that it is a question of upholding the honor of the Government on the one hand and a question of dishonor on the other hand is a demagogue, pure and simple, whether he knows it or not.

If you vote in the negative here to-day, and the majority is found that way, no obligation of the Government will be forfeited, and the only difference will be that in the one case the bonds of the Government under this new proposition will be put at a lower rate of interest, in consideration of which we stipulate to pay in gold coin. That is all there is of it; and there is no question of honor, there is no question of integrity, there is no question of faith involved. It is a simple question of what we prefer to do. Shall we stand by the long-established precedents of this Government, now grown hoary and time honored with age, or shall we, for a reason that does not amount to sufficient justification, change the entire policy of the Government, and in doing so reach one or two results which I shall try to point out?

No man on this floor will go farther to uphold the honor and integrity and good faith of this Government than I will. No partisan considerations shall ever induce me to vote here for party gain in that way which will result in national injury. But it is said that the credit of the Government is broken down; that we are not able to borrow money at the same price that we did recently; and it is a pertinent question to-day, who broke down our credit? How happened it and who discovered it? Who first gave notice to the people of this country that the credit of this Government was depreciated?

The last loan of a Republican Administration was made at 2½ per cent upon a "coin" bond. We never issued any other than a "coin" bond, with any considerable time to run. We did during the war issue demand notes, perhaps, payable in "gold." I do not stop to discuss the various forms of our obligations; and even this Democratic Administration only a few months ago borrowed money at 2½ per cent interest, the bonds payable in "coin." But we borrowed money under a Republican Administration at 2½ per cent interest. It may be said that that was in those halcyon days of national prosperity incident to Republican Administration; but if that be so, it is to the honor and credit of this nation that until recently it was even able to carry a Democratic Administration and float a 2½ bond at the same time.

We borrowed that money upon a time-honored bond—the bond that had had the sanction of every Secretary of the Treasury from the days of Lincoln down to this day. We borrowed that money at 2½ per cent interest. What has happened between that time and this that has forced the interest demand against this Government up to almost 1 per cent increase in rate?

Ask the honorable Secretary of the Treasury how he found out that the credit of this Government had gone down. Ask him how he found out that he could not borrow as much money as he wanted at the same old 2½ per cent interest, and he will be compelled to tell you that he did not find out that fact at all. He never made an inquiry that was a legitimate one. Is it possible that the bankers of New York, interested in a foreign loan, sharers in the enormous profits thereof, came quietly and secretly to the Administration and said, "Your credit has gone down," and that the Administration accepted that statement? Can that be true? And the Administration responds to the Rothschilds and J. S. Morgan & Co. and says, "Are you sure our credit has gone down? Are we broken up, and are we a disgraced country?" And the bankers answer, "Yes, you are." And thereupon says the Secretary of the Treasury, "What will you do to help us out?"

Then comes the startling proposition involved in this contract. "We will do one of two things; we will lend you money at 3½ per cent interest—a startling and disgraceful proposition—or if you will enter into a contract with us to sell us all the bonds that you are going to negotiate until next October we will promise that we will quit using our influence to force the exportation of gold out of this country, and we will use our 'financial influence' to keep it in this country; and we will lend you money at 3 per cent upon 'gold' bonds, principal and interest payable in 'gold'; and we bankers of Lombard street demand that the whole policy of this Government shall be revolutionized. You shall change your policy. Your policy is not right. The policy upon which this Government has run its enormous expenditures during the last thirty years is all wrong. We tell you that the interest of our money-making schemes upon the other side of the water is involved in the change of your policy, and you must change it now. Make a 'gold' bond, and we will give you the difference between 3 per cent interest and 3½ per cent interest, but we want all the bonds that you are going to sell between this and the 1st of next October." [Laughter and applause.] "In consideration of all this we will cease depleting the Treasury. We will use our 'financial influence' that the Ickelheimers and Lazard Frères, et id omne, and all those other fellows shall cease getting the gold out of the Treasury, and we will use our 'financial influence,' whatever that may be, to stop the exportation of gold. And now," say these gentlemen, "in consideration that you will repudiate your past career, that you will go back upon your entire financial record, we make you a proposition in the nature of a bonus of $16,500,000 of difference in the rate of interest upon this issue of bonds, provided they run for the whole thirty years. That is to say, assuming that 'coin' in one instance means 'gold,' and that 'gold' in the other instance means 'gold,' the difference between these two propositions offered will be $16,500,000 in favor of the Government in reduction of the rate of interest."

And now, says the Administration to us, "We have made an improvident contract; we have made a contract without waiting to ascertain whether we could make a better contract somewhere else. We did not ask the people of the United States to take this loan; never gave them an opportunity. We never appealed to the people of the United States as the Government of France appealed to its people in its extremity—never appealed to the patriotism of the people of this country, which had never failed us hitherto, to see whether we had it in our power to raise this money from the people—whether the people of the United States had as much patriotism as had the people of France; and therefore we come now and say to you that you can save $16,500,000 by giving this contract to a foreign syndicate, on the terms and conditions which that syndicate demands of us."

And now it is said that here is a "saving" to the Government of sixteen and a half millions of dollars. The President comes and asks us to save him and to save the Treasury from the disgrace incident to the enormous price he has paid for money.

The patriotism, the disinterested patriotism of these bankers is well stated in an editorial article which I hold in my hand, published in this day's issue of the Philadelphia Press. It shows the character of this contract. It shows to the people of the United States how their interests are being protected by this Administration:

SECRETARY CARLISLE'S CONTRACT.

A single day's criticism has forced Secretary Carlisle to abandon his absurd and indefensible policy of keeping secret the financial transactions of the Government. He has published the contract he made without competition or consultation with the banking firms to whom he has given a lucrative monopoly in handling the increase of the Government debt for which the Democratic Administration is responsible.

The terms and particulars of this contract prove to be worse for the Government than was known or expected. Secretary Carlisle has capped his surrender of the credit of the Government by the surrender of all the lesser profits of the transaction. It was known that Secretary Carlisle had sold thirty-year 4 per cent bonds at 104½ when ten-year bonds of the same rate of interest are selling at 110½. By parity of value thirty-year bonds should sell at 119½. Here is a profit in the sure appreciation of these bonds of at least $9,200,000. The same bond, letter for letter, security for security, obligation for obligation, has been sold by a Republican Administration at 2½ per cent. By comparison with outstanding 4 per cents under the present credit of the Government, the syndicate is booked to make in marketing this issue $9,200,000. In the increased rate of interest the Government loses in yearly interest taken directly $18,000,000; and if the space over which the loan runs be considered, the loss is nearer $25,000,000.

This vast profit and these enormous losses are not all. The gold is to be delivered over the next six months, not over 300,000 ounces, about $5,000,000, to be called in any one month. This extends the transaction over the next six months. The last $10,000,000 can, therefore, be imported in July and August, when the current of gold sets in this direction. In other words, in the face of imminent and pressing necessities, so serious that Secretary Carlisle pays disgracefully exorbitant terms to meet them, about $2,500,000 in gold is bought in Europe and one-third of this gold is left to be brought over at the convenience of the bankers, who handle the loan in months when there is in most years a profit in importing gold. In other words, instead of getting gold on the nail by the present issue of bonds, as the Treasury has for past issues, the bankers lucky enough to secure this golden contract are given a call on the bonds and six months in which to deliver the gold at pleasure. Practically they are given the credit of the United at 4 per cent to the amount of $65,000,000 for six months to come with which to manipulate the gold market of the world and secure for themselves all the profits of their manipulation, as the United States agrees in advance as to the price at which it will take the gold.

It has been for years notorious that one advantage in gold exports from over gold imports to this country lay in the fact that while the Federal Treasury gold consists of newly-minted eagles, little of which has been in circulation and which is above the mint "tolerance," or allowance or wear, the coin to be had abroad is older, more worn, and therefore intrinsically less valuable. "Dollars" means new coin here. "Dollars" stands for old coin abroad. By a clause in this secret contract this profit is transferred to the bankers, and the United States, instead of insisting on coin of the standard it has been paying out for export, agrees to take in this import of coin gold worn to the limit of tolerance.

Not satisfied with these successive profits, first in premium, next in interest, next in gold shipments in import months, next in the easy acceptance of "tolerance," the syndicate receives a monopoly of all issues for seven months to come. Having absorbed in a year nearly $100,000,000 of gold, and with every probability that the proceeds of the present issue will be gone long before exchange in July and August gives the syndicate its profit on its last shipments, Secretary Carlisle binds the Government to offer its bonds to no other customers before giving the syndicate an opportunity to take them. Whatever improvement there may be in Government credit due to the existence, whether in session or not, of a Republican Congress is skillfully secured to these foreign bankers, who step between the United States and its own bankers and investors.

When Secretary Carlisle wanted to keep his contract secret everyone knew that it must be a poor one; but no one imagined it was as bad as the truth. A rate 50 per cent higher than when Government credit was guarded by Republican policy and administration. A "call" over seven months for any part of $65,000,000 of bonds. A "put" limited to 300,000 ounces a month in return for the bonds asked for. All the advantage of "tolerance" secured to the syndicate. An option on all Government issues for seven months and a half.

And this bargain is negotiated by the financial officer of the richest country in the world, which has within a short time borrowed cheaper than Great Britain itself!

Our answer, Mr. Speaker, to all this ought to be that we will not do it. For the first time in the history of this country we are to put the word "gold" into our long-time bonds, and we do it for the purpose, with the stipulation, that there is a difference of three-fourths of 1 per cent between "gold" and "coin." That means something. This syndicate does not offer $16,500,000 for nothing. This syndicate does not understand that one bond is as good as another. It means more than that they will make a difference of sixteen and a half millions of dollars in the cost to the Government of these two loans.

The Rothschilds, who have held empires and kingdoms and republics of the Old World by the throat, come here and say to you, "Your system is obnoxious to us, and we want a different system. We are taking great interest in you these days, you Republic of America, something rather unusual for us, but we have concluded to do it, and we want you to change your system to conform to our notions. Tear up this old pod-auger, effete way you have of doing business. Get rid of this popular idea that a nation can be run on the patriotism and integrity of its people. Abolish this whole notion of yours that bimetalism can ultimately be upheld in this country. Strike it all out; and if you will, so deeply interested are we in your future happiness and your future prosperity that we will actually give you sixteen and a half millions of dollars in payments of a little over $500,000 a year. We will put you on our pension roll; we will pension you for thirty years at $500,000 a year, if you will just fix the terms of your financial system to suit us. It is disinterestedness on our part, of course, and everybody understands that. We want to put down these terrible Ickelheimers. We want to get rid of the Ickelheimer business; and we will give you sixteen and a half millions of dollars to get into a position where we can use our influence to crush the Ickelheimers."

What a fraud! What a scheme! What a bait! What an outrage! Go ask the Secretary of the Treasury if, in his judgment, in the event that we ratify and confirm this gold bond transaction, there will ever be any "coin" loans by this Government in the future. [Applause and cries of "No!"] And he will tell you frankly "No." He will admit, as every man of common sense understands, it is a complete revolution, organic and complete—a complete change of our economic system. It is not worth while for any gentleman to attempt to uphold his attitude here by talking about a "single transaction." Lombard street does not pay sixteen and a half millions of dollars to boot between a transaction like this for the mere question of the money involved in the single transaction. It is a blow at our whole system. It reflects backward, and it projects forward. Do this, and tell me what is to become of the hundreds of millions of dollars of our securities now in the hands of our people, negotiated, many of them, by our Secretaries of the Treasury upon the faith of that great history of this nation that it has always paid its obligations in gold.

One of the main stipulations is that it is to be paid in "gold," because it is better than "coin." Why better than "coin?" Why is this loan in this form worth sixteen and a half millions of dollars more than in the ordinary form? What is the alternative to the "coin" security? A future loan of any kind must be made with reference to our financial history, and at once there will be a marked depreciation between the one and the other. Carry this scheme into execution, bow to these people, and give them this bond, and to-morrow I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that the bonds now outstanding, behind which the highest faith of this Government is pledged, will be depreciated in the market in one day more than $16,500,000. [Applause.] I venture to say that whereas on the one hand it is held out to us as a bribe to pay for our dishonorable action [loud applause] if we shall ratify this gold contract we will not have to wait for thirty years to run to make the difference of sixteen and a half millions of dollars in the value of our securities. [Loud applause.] To-morrow when Wall street opens discount would strike every obligation of the Government; and it ought to. No man can borrow money and maintain his credit giving two kinds of obligations. [Renewed applause.] No man can give security for a loan of one nature and borrow money thereon and then borrow upon a different security another sum. [Loud applause.] And when you have steered away from the landmarks of the Republican party, and the Democratic party, too, since the war, you have started in to begin the destruction of bimetalism as perfectly as if every silver dollar upon the earth were destroyed. [Loud applause.]

We stand here as Republicans, pledged in our national resolutions to maintain the parity between these two metals. [Applause.] We come here and are asked by a bribe of sixteen and a half million dollars, payable in thirty years, to make a discrimination between the "gold" bond and the "coin" bond. Fellow-Republicans, let me read to you our platforms, the declarations of our principles, upon which we have marched both to victory and defeat. In 1892 we said:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

In 1892 we said:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal. * * *

Those are the declarations of our party, and those are the principles of the Republicans of the United States. And, Mr. Speaker, for one, faithful to these platform declarations, I will not vote for this measure. [Loud applause.] I believe that it is fraught with dishonor and not with honor. I believe that the people of the United States, when they look beyond the mere temporary expressions of this Presidential message, will stand by the men who in this storm have stood by the people and against this combination of European financiers. They will stand by the men who have stood faithful to the principles and the landmarks of their party. [Renewed applause.] No man will stand longer or fight harder for the honor of the Government than I will; but I will not permit the prostitution of the powers of this Government to the building up of one interest in this country or in any other country to the destruction and overthrow of all the interests of the people of this country. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

I criticize this contract in its details. What right has the Secretary of the Treasury to bind this Government to give to the moneyed men of Europe the first lien, the first option, upon all our money transactions for almost a year? It is a thing utterly unheard of—a thing unknown in our history; and I make this proposition, Mr. Speaker: If we vote down this resolution, if we refuse to permit this Government to be thus ruined, as it were, by this systematic manipulation, the holders of these bonds now issued under this contract will be put in a position unenviable in the extreme. Suppose one of these gentlemen, at the recurring of the first quarterly payment of interest, comes to the American people with a coupon and demands gold. What would be an unanswerable answer? It would be this: You presented an alternative proposition to the people of the United States. You said, "Give us a 'coin' bond and we will let you have the money at 3½ per cent. Give us a 'gold' bond and we will charge you only 3 per cent. We make a difference of sixteen and a half million dollars in a period of thirty years." Why did you do it? We say you did it because in the one case your bond would be payable in silver, and in the other case your bond would be payable in gold, and you got sixteen and a half millions of dollars of our money for the purpose of compensating you for the difference between gold and silver. Take your silver; it is your own construction of your own contract. And for the first time, Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States would be placed in the awkward position of paying more and higher by sixteen and a half million dollars than the construction put upon their own contract by the parties thereto.

Mr. Speaker, it was not the Republican party that proclaimed to the world the depreciation of American credit. It was the proclamation of a Democratic Administration. The credit of the Government when it was turned over to the Democrats by Mr. Harrison was higher than it had ever been before; and, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, even with a Democratic Administration, there was no need that the credit of the Government should ever have been thus destroyed. When the election of 1894 proclaimed to the Democratic party, proclaimed to the world, proclaimed to all mankind that the sober second thought of the people of the United States had reestablished the principle in the public heart of a protective-tariff system, as against free-trade and revenue-tariff efforts, the Democratic Administration found itself driven to offer some apology or explanation to the people of the country, and in an evil hour the Administration assailed the public credit. It was Grover Cleveland who assailed the public credit by his messages. We were going along as well as could be expected with a Democratic Administration. We could borrow money at 2½ per cent. It was a wonderful, it was a glorious situation for the Democratic party to be in. Unexpectedly strong were they, so far as my judgment was concerned, when they were able to borrow money at that price, and I for one was extremely delighted. But when the Administration cried out against its own credit and proclaimed to the world that American credit was gone, and began to tinker and tamper with the finances of the country, our credit began to go down.

This Administration has done more to depreciate our credit at home and humiliate us abroad than all the other Administrations this country ever saw; and it appears to thinking and intelligent men as though it were done to create a new issue in American politics, to supplement the fatal issue that the Democratic party has hitherto made upon the subject of the tariff.

Local considerations may influence a few votes in favor of this monstrous proposition; but the great mass of the Republican party in this House and everywhere else will go steadily forward along the lines and beneath the banner which has shed luster upon that great party organization and prosperity to the people of this great country. It will stand by the pledged faith of this nation, no matter to whom pledged nor by whom pledged. It will redeem the pledges of a Republican Administration no quicker nor with any greater integrity than it will redeem the pledges of a Democratic Administration. It will protect the obligations of the Government to the soldier and to the bondholder, to the laborer and to the manufacturer. It will stand by all and singular alike. But it will not create in this country two forms of obligation and thereby create two forms of money. It will not permit that in this country the bondholder shall receive one form of money and the laborer in the coal mine, the pensioner at the counter, shall receive another form of money. This is the first overt attempt. It will be defeated. "And whoso falleth upon this rock shall be broken; but he upon whom this rock shall fall it will grind to powder."

There is a spirit of Americanism abroad in this country that will denounce this scheme. There is a spirit of pride in the institutions of this country that will resent this attempt upon the integrity and the credit of this Government. There is a spirit in this country of approbation of the great history of the Republican party that will call it back to power; and when it comes back it will come back not with any new ideas, not with any disposition to tinker and tamper with the finances, but it will come back full-panoplied with the high spirit of Republican integrity, Republican honor, Republican intelligence, Republican patriotism, and recommissioned by the people of this country, it will disregard the futile efforts to disgrace its record and go forward to renewed triumphs. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I will occupy my time later, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] for five minutes, if he is ready to proceed.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, in the very limited time that is at my command, I shall approach the consideration of the subject that is now before the House immediately, without devoting any attention to what has transpired in the past or to the causes which have brought these difficulties upon us. They have been so graphically described by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], in whose remarks as to the misconduct and the deplorable effects of the course of this Administration I fully concur, that nothing further is required upon that subject from me.

But we are now involved in a position where we are substantially deprived of our free agency. It is simply a question of gain or loss to the country that we are now required to vote upon and to settle in the disposition which we shall make of the resolution that is pending before the House. A contract has been entered into by the Treasury Department of the United States, under the authority of the President, for a loan of this money from the persons who have signed this agreement, or their representatives, and it is now simply a question as to whether we shall charge the people with, or make them subject to, the loss of three-fourths of 1 per cent upon this loan or shall adopt the pending resolution.

We have no other alternative. The contract has been signed and it has been made under the authority of the law of 1876, by which the reserve in gold is to be maintained to the extent of $100,000,000 for the protection and redemption of the greenback currency of the United States. The contract, therefore, has been made under the authority of law, and however we may condemn it—and I join with members of this House in condemnation of the terms embodied in this contract—we have no power at the present time to change it or to rectify it in any respect whatever. It is therefore, I repeat, simply a question with us whether we shall subject the people of the United States for a period of thirty years to the payment of three-fourths of 1 per cent, amounting to nearly half a million a year, upon this loan more than they should pay, or whether we shall adopt the resolution which is now before the House.

It has been the practice of the Government of the United States at all times to borrow money payable in gold, and inasmuch as gold is to be received upon this loan the obligation of the Government would without being expressed be acknowledged and carried out to respond to the obligation to pay it in gold. It was therefore entirely unnecessary for the Administration to stipulate for the contingent additional sum of three-fourths of 1 per cent interest upon these bonds. The money could have been obtained without the addition of that burden. But that has been done, the terms have been arranged, the obligation has been assumed to take this money from the persons who have agreed to supply it to the Treasury Department for the purpose of restoring the redemption fund to maintain the gold reserve. The Administration has blundered in the exercise of its powers under the law of 1876. But we must now support this resolution or subject the people to the payment of nearly fifteen millions of additional interest in case it is defeated. It is now a choice of alternatives. We must support the resolution or impose this loss of fifteen millions of improper interest on the country. And in this dilemma, while I unqualifiedly condemn the conduct of this Administration which has brought so many disasters on the country, I find myself obliged to vote for the resolution and protect the country from this inexcusable loss.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Speaker, I trust that my colleague will be given some additional time.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has promised all of the time to other gentlemen.

Mr. DANIELS. I desire only two minutes more, although, under the circumstances, I do not feel that I should ask for any extension of time.

Mr. SICKLES. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House can change its order. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] be allowed to continue for five minutes longer.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I shall object unless it is understood that the extension is to be taken out of the time on that side.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] is recognized.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, two days ago I had an opportunity to express my views in relation to the financial conditions that confront us. It will be my effort to-day to avoid going over any of the ground that I then covered, as the few moments at my disposal will not permit it. The plain proposition before the House is that the new issue of bonds, amounting to a sum slightly in excess of $65,000,000, shall plainly express upon their face the fact that we will pay them in gold and in that way save three-fourths of 1 per cent per annum in interest.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], who opposes the bill, lays great stress upon the fact that in years past Republican Administrations had not been forced to make any declaration of their intention to pay our bonds in gold. He fails to take into account the fact that the conditions surrounding this question in those times were very different from those of the present day.

During the intervening years the contest between the two metals has been growing in intensity. It is true that on account of the compromise effected by the Sherman silver-purchasing act it was stayed for a while, but it has come upon us again with a greater intensity than before. The people at home and the nations abroad are watching the battle. They have come to believe that the result is doubtful. That belief has been strengthened by the decreasing gold reserve.

They begin to doubt the ability of the Executive, with the power now placed in his hands, to perform the task intrusted to him to maintain the parity of the two metals.

They have witnessed the repeated rebuffs that he has experienced at the hands of Congress. They have found this body time and again turning a cold shoulder to his pleadings for legislative assistance. Can you wonder that under the circumstances capital has become timid and requires new guaranties or an augmented profit?

By your action you have driven the Administration from its legitimate source of help into the hands of the capitalists and forced it to accept from them such terms as he could secure. This is a humiliating position for a great nation to occupy, but you and you only are to blame for it. The President has repeatedly warned you, but you have not taken heed. He has told you that if you would authorize the sale of bonds payable in gold, and so expressed upon their face, that he could go into the markets of the world and with them secure the gold to replenish our reserve. He told you, what you already should have known from your own observation, that the two experiments made in selling bonds at home afforded no permanent relief.

I will now turn to the question of the emergency that confronted the Treasury, and in treating this point I find some assistance from my experience as a merchant. The foreign creditors of our importing merchants, not caring to take the risk of this country going to a silver basis, have been for months marking their invoices "payable in gold." My house has always pursued that course in doing business with silver countries. The importers, as the time for payment approached, fearing that gold would go to a premium, began to hoard it. This is shown by the fact that the exports of it are far short of the withdrawals from the subtreasury. The withdrawals of gold from the Treasury, as published in the daily statements issued by the Treasury Department under the head of "Redemption of notes," gives us the following startling figures:

Thursday, January 24	$1,692,140
Friday, January 25	1,688,536
Saturday, January 26	3,272,682
Monday, January 28	7,197,021
Tuesday, January 29	843,335
Wednesday, January 30	3,607,933
Thursday, January 31	3,446,390
Friday, February 1	3,394,370
Saturday, February 2	2,309,613
Monday, February 4	1,554,625

I am informed that upon this last date it was ascertained that the amount of coined gold (free) available in the subtreasury at New York was only $8,700,334, and that all that could be spared from all other sources would not increase that amount to more than $20,000,000.

If the drain had been continued at the same rate Saturday ensuing would have found the Government with no gold in store to meet the demands upon it.

On that day it was announced that arrangements had been made for securing gold from abroad through the mediation of a foreign syndicate in case of failure of action by Congress, and the effect immediately showed itself in decreased withdrawals, as follows:

Tuesday, February 5	$50,649
Wednesday, February 6	16,930
Thursday, February 7	427,221
Friday, February 8	15,300
Saturday, February 9	745,309

On this day the message of the President announced the completion of the arrangements for the loan. Since then the withdrawals have been as follows:

Monday, February 11	$614,108
Tuesday, February 12	119,190
Wednesday, February 13	220,436

You can not fail to notice the quieting effect of the assurance given to the people by the completion of the contract. It responded as readily as the mercury in the thermometer to the variations of the temperature.

The sudden decline in the price of exchange which helped wonderfully was doubtless due to the action of the syndicate, and had an immediate effect.

The figures that I have given you are correct and can easily be verified by any of you. Will you not candidly admit that the emergency was a startling one, and that there was no opportunity for delay? That it was necessary for some one to take the responsibility of prompt action? Will you not try for a moment to dismiss partisanship and do credit to the men who saved us from the effect of the blunders of Congress? Or do you prefer to continue to indulge in cheap criticism and attempts to blacken the characters of men who have saved us from financial disgrace? Any criticism that you may make will come with bad grace from you who did not heed the timely warnings that were given you. Any bargain that saved our credit was a good bargain.

I do not know the particulars of the negotiation of the loan and can not tell whether other ways out of the difficulty could have been found, but have no doubt that the Secretary secured the very best possible terms, cramped as he was into so short a time in which to secure relief. He left a way open to save a very large portion of the sum that he was obliged to sacrifice and has placed upon you the responsibility of deciding whether it shall be saved or not. If you refuse to pass this resolution and save the $16,000,000 you will take the responsibility for that sacrifice upon yourselves and clear his skirts of it. If the emergency made it necessary for him to disregard your prejudices I am glad that he had the nerve to do it. At all events he has given the country an object lesson that it will not be slow to comprehend. The people will be able to estimate to some extent how expensive it is to send to the National Legislature theorists instead of men of good business judgment.

You say that it entails a sacrifice of rates not pleasant to contemplate. That is doubtless the case, but the loss is nothing when compared with the enormous depreciation of values that would have resulted from the failure of the Treasury to meet its obligations, or with the expense that would have been brought upon the nation in efforts to creep up again from a silver to a gold basis.

Those of us who are engaged in large mercantile operations often find it necessary in cases of emergency to act promptly and make large sacrifices in order to maintain credit or avoid larger losses. We measure one another's qualities as merchants by our ability to do these things. I want you to understand that the action of the members of this Administration in this business emergency will not only secure our confidence, but excites our admiration. We begin to feel that if it became necessary, with such men at the head of affairs we could very well get along without Congress.

The public credit will, therefore, not suffer on account of this emergency operation.

I notice that while the letter of the contract simply calls for the withdrawal of half of the amount of the gold from abroad, the other provisions make it necessary for the syndicate to really protect the gold reserve from sudden drafts.

The "option" that has been so violently attacked simply provides that the buyers shall have the first opportunity to take future offerings of bonds at the price at which the Government proposes to sell them before they are offered to others. This should not be complained of, as it is a measure of business precaution and does not bind the Government injuriously.

Gentlemen have made much of the fact that since this bargain was made our bonds have been sold in England at 114. They fail to see any connection between this rise and the arrangements at home to sustain our credit. In the same breath they claim that this action of the Administration has lowered the value of our bonds. I shall not attempt to reply to such contradictory statements.

Very extravagant estimates have been made of the amount of profit that will be realized by the purchasers. I have no doubt that as shrewd business men they have provided for a good margin of profit, but I also know that before the bonds are finally sold that profit will not be realized, and that in the meantime there are innumerable drawbacks in the way of manipulation of exchange and operations to sustain the prices of the bonds. They have to a certain extent become guarantors of the price of our bonds.

Now, while I am reconciled to all this, I must frankly say that I do not enjoy it.

I would rather that our Government, which is so rich and powerful, and which has within thirty years paid six billions of its war debt at the same time that it has paid another six billions for its running expenses, improvement of rivers and harbors, and defenses, should now, with a comparatively small indebtedness, not be put to the mortification of calling upon any individuals or association of capitalists to sustain it or even remotely to guarantee it.

As a citizen of this proud Republic I protest against the unnecessary humiliation.

Some one is to blame and we do not have to go far to find the culprit. It is not the Executive of the nation; the people will give him the credit of having done his whole duty. It is not the Secretary of the Treasury acting under his inspiration. The fingers of the nation point to the culprit, the legislative branch of the Government, and they hold it responsible. This branch of Government has virtually, for the time being, broken down. Confused in a maze of theories, it has groped, stumbled, and fallen helpless.

The executive, however, has proved itself equal to the emergency, and will, with such powers as were given it in other times, sustain the Government, whatever cost may be involved, and the people, regardless of party, will stand back of him and hold up his hands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

[Mr. McMILLIN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. BRYAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. HENDRIX] for five minutes.

Mr. HENDRIX. Mr. Speaker, if there is anything bad about the contract which the Secretary of the Treasury has made with the New York and foreign bankers, the gentlemen who oppose this bill will become responsible for it. [Derisive laughter.] If it goes into effect on the alternate proposition that the Government of the United States can get its gold at 3 per cent for thirty years, there is not a man on this floor, or anywhere in the markets of the world, who will not see that the contract is a good one.

It is necessary for you to go into the markets of the world, not to get your currency, not to get your own obligations, not to get silver; but it is necessary to go into the markets to get so many ounces of pure gold, and you must go there with an obligation which will get what you want, and not something which you do not want. You have in the Treasury plenty of your promises which you do not want and which you can not use. What you are after is simply the yellow metal itself. Now you have an opportunity of getting it on a 3 per cent basis. The world is not ready to deliver it to you upon any better basis than 3½ per cent at this time, unless you will promise to deliver it back payable specifically in the kind of metal that you get. The increased rate is the estimate of the risk which your creditors feel that they take.

Now, if this is a contract that is bad, you gentlemen who reject it make it bad for the Government. Pass this resolution, and you change it. You make a good contract out of it. You can not quarrel with a 3 per cent rate for gold. It is a low rate. Now it is open to you to make this as good a contract as any Government on the face of the earth can make. A contract such as you have it in your power now to sign, seal, and deliver, made in a country so remote from the great deposits of gold as this country is, where the coupons on the bonds are made payable at our own Treasury, where foreign holders of those bonds have to pay a commission for the collection of those coupons, is not a bad contract, and no business man can condemn it as a bad contract. Now it is with you to improve the bargain. Will you do it?

Now, you stick at the word "gold." Yet you say you expect to pay your obligations in gold. Then write it in the bond. The gentleman from Tennessee says he is going to take care of the credit of the country and will see that every obligation is paid in gold. How? Tell us how. You can not pay your obligations in gold until you have got the gold, and it is simply because you have not got the gold that you have got to go into the markets and get the gold. It is a question of dressing your goods for the market to which you expect to take them. Can you ask for gold and reserve the right to choose another metal for repayment?

The opportunity to stop all this business has been given to this House time and time again. So long as you maintain your demand obligations in the currency you must keep a reserve to redeem them or fail to keep faith.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend permit me right there—

Mr. HENDRIX. I have only five minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HENDRIX. The opportunity was given in the Springer bill. You have got either to put the Government further into the banking business or you have got to take it out, as every other civilized Government on the face of the earth has been taken out, in every particular. You must make of your Treasury a full-fledged bank or shelter it behind a big bank, as the Government of Germany, the Government of Austria-Hungary, the Government of Belgium, the Government of Bulgaria, the Government of Denmark, the Government of Spain, the Government of Finland, the Government of France, the Government of Greece, the Government of Italy, of Naples, of Sicily, of Norway, of Turkey, of the Netherlands, of Roumania, of England, of Russia, of Servia, and even Sweden and the Swiss Government are sheltered to-day.

Mr. COX. Let me say to the gentleman—

Mr. HENDRIX. I have only got five minutes and must decline to be interrupted. You have got to get behind some great bank.

Mr. COX. Let me say that the Government is bigger than any bank.

Mr. HENDRIX. If the Government is going to be a banker, let it be a fully equipped bank. If you are going to have the Secretary of the Treasury run a bank, give him the power to run a bank as he ought to do. If you are going to make him a one-legged banker, how do you expect him to do any better than he is doing? You men of the South here, why do not you come to the relief of the Secretary, from your own section of the country? Why do not you give him the power it is necessary for him to have? He stands upon the parapet trying to defend the credit of the country. He has been using the best weapons he can. He asks now for a Gatling gun, and you want to hand him a toy pistol. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. No; I would hand him a Gatling gun.

Mr. HENDRIX. If you mean that the Government is to pay these bonds in gold, why not say so?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRYAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk certain extracts from the poems of Thomas Hood. I ask that they be read in my time. I only have two minutes of time granted me, and perhaps these extracts will better illustrate the situation than anything I might say in so short a time.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Golden Ass, or Golden Bull,
Was English John, with his pockets full,
Then at war by land and water:
While beef, and mutton, and other meat,
Were almost as dear as money to eat,
And Farmers reaped Golden Harvests of Wheat
At the Lord knows what per quarter.

* * * * *
'Twas the Golden Leg! "she knew its gleam!"
And up she started and tried to scream,—
But ev'n in the moment she started—
Down came the limb with a frightful smash,
And, lost in the universal flash
That her eyeballs made at so mortal a crash,
The Spark, call'd Vital, departed!

* * * * *
Gold, still gold! hard, yellow, and cold,
For gold she had lived, and she died for gold—
By a golden weapon—not oaken;
In the morning they found her all alone—
Stiff, and bloody, and cold as stone—
But her Leg, the Golden Leg, was gone,
And the "Golden Bowl was broken!"

HER MORAL.

Gold! Gold! Gold! Gold!
Bright and yellow, hard and cold,
Molten, graven, hammer'd and roll'd;
Heavy to get, and light to hold;
Hoarded, barter'd, bought and sold,
Stolen, borrowed, squander'd, doled!
Spurn'd by the young, but hugg'd by the old
To the very verge of the churchyard mould;
Price of many a crime untold;
Gold! Gold! Gold! Gold!
Good or bad a thousand fold!

[Great laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Kansas for five minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to view this measure from the standpoint of a Populist for five minutes. [Laughter.] I have listened very patiently to gentlemen on both sides of this House upon this measure. I listened a few days ago to my Republican friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], and he said that he thought that Congress ought to act the part of the "Good Samaritan" toward the people. I have been looking that matter up, and I find that a certain gentleman in his journey from Jericho to Jerusalem fell among thieves; and so, I think, this nation, in its journey from Lincoln to Cleveland, has also fallen among thieves. I listened to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to-day in his eloquent address upon this measure, and one would think that they were the friends of silver coinage in this country.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are to-day but reaping the harvest sown by our Republican friends. Many of them to-day admit that we are on a gold basis. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] himself says that is the settled policy of the country. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that all our outstanding obligations are redeemable in gold. Then, if they are, why not accept the situation, and make them all payable in gold by adopting this resolution? One of the greatest evils that ever has come to this country, I think, is that which makes it possible for the Republicans to stand here to-day masquerading as the friends of the free coinage of silver, pretending that they want these obligations payable in coin, so that you can avail yourselves of silver.

They do not mean it. They do not wish that these obligations shall be redeemable in anything but gold; and one of the greatest calamities that is upon us is that it gives the Republican party a chance to return to power and continue the same policy that has brought us to the present evil. It was by the law of 1873, when you substituted a gold dollar for a silver dollar, that brought us to this pass we are in to-day—a gold basis; and the Republicans are entirely responsible for that legislation. We are to-day, as I said before, reaping the harvest that has been sown by the Republican party. Grover Cleveland comes out for the same policy with a little more straightforwardness. He comes up with a proposition to name in the bonds that they shall be paid in gold, when the Republican party said that by interpretation they shall be paid in gold. I want both sides to be put on record as to how they stand.

Now, the Populists believe that they are redeemable in coin, and that coin means gold and silver, and that we should avail ourselves of silver to pay these obligations. How are we ever going to satisfy the insatiable maw of this clamor for gold? Step by step, by legislation, for thirty years, you have led up to the present conditions, and you find yourselves with these gold bond speculators with their hands on the throat of the people.

How are you going to remedy the evil? You are never going to remedy it until you restore silver to its proper place in the currency of the country. You are never going to restore it until your Secretary of the Treasury obeys the law and redeems the outstanding obligations in silver as well as in gold. By doing so you will establish a parity between the two metals and relieve yourself from the grasp of these shylocks that have now got the country by the throat. Will you do it? We have no hope that you will do it. Both sides are playing for position—both the Republicans and Democrats are now playing for position, each one trying to put the other in the hole, and between you you have succeeded in putting the country in the hole; and there is no hope of it ever getting out of the hole until all decent, patriotic men in this country unite themselves with a party that will stand by the people.

Disguise it however you may, the contest is between the man and the dollar, and you must range yourselves on one side or the other. Why, our forefathers marched through the snow and camped on the bloody fields of battle in this country defending us against taxes imposed by Great Britain; yet under this process of legislation, for the past thirty years, you are subjecting the country to a greater taxation to Great Britain and more effectual than though our forefathers had failed in their struggle for liberty.

And may God grant us a good Samaritan in 1896 to rescue us from the hands of the thieves.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this resolution. In the short time allotted to me I will call the attention of the House to some of the reasons expressed in the message of the President of the United States why he entered into the contract with the Rothschilds and Morgans, of London, for the sale of our bonds. And the very reasons he assigns for the transaction, in my humble judgment, are abundantly sufficient why such a contract ought not to have been made.

The arguments of gentlemen who have preceded me in this discussion, who favor the adoption of this resolution and thereby declare in favor of indorsing the action of the President and his Secretary of the Treasury, have emphasized but one argument in its favor, and that is that in issuing gold bonds the Government will save three-quarters of 1 per cent annual interest, which for thirty years will amount to over $16,000,000.

In his message, which bears even date with the contract, the President says:

The privilege is especially reserved to the Government to substitute at par, within ten days from this date, in lieu of the 4 per cent coin bonds, other bonds in terms payable in gold and bearing only 3 per cent interest, if the issue of the same should in the meantime be authorized by the Congress.

This is the only privilege claimed for the Government under this contract. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], the honored chairman of the committee, says it is only a question of gain or loss to the Government, a business question simply. I deny the proposition. It is doubtless true that the Government will be compelled to pay a half million dollars a year for thirty years by the terms of this unwise, unholy contract, which has been secured by foreign capitalists. Yet we must remember that the holders of other Government securities have vested rights that must be respected by our Government.

The last one hundred million of bonds issued by Mr. Carlisle provided for the payment of principal and interest in coin. These bonds were put upon the markets of the world openly, not secretly, as in this case, and are held by American capitalists, who have faith in the honesty and integrity of our Government and its ability to pay its "coin" bonds in gold. And yet here is a contract entered into with European capitalists on the 8th day of February last, in secret, known only to the President, his Secretary, the President's former law partner, and August Belmont & Co., who represent the Rothschilds and Morgans, of Europe, foreign capitalists, who will not trust our Government on a coin bond, unless they are paid three-fourths of 1 per cent premium as interest.

Our own American holders of coin bonds must be protected. Because the moment our Government issues gold bonds to foreign capitalists, that moment those bonds go up to a premium or the coin bonds go down with a discount. The premium of the gold bonds would far exceed the three-fourths of 1 per cent and thereby insure to the foreign bondholders interest far in excess of the amount the Government will have to pay on the coin bond, while the holders of coin bonds will be injuriously affected many, many times more than the Government will have to lose by reason of a higher rate of interest on the coin bond.

Another reason the President assigns in favor of his contract:

At least one-half of the gold to be obtained—

He says—

will be supplied from abroad, which is a very important and favorable feature of this transaction.

Has it come to this, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that it is a favorable consideration that the gold will be supplied from abroad to fill our depleted Treasury; that we have to borrow from foreign capitalists and pay them a higher rate of interest than we pay our own people? Why does he say this? Is it true that we have no gold in this country to supply our Treasury? Why, Mr. Speaker, we have plenty of idle capital to-day in every city of our land only waiting investments like this. Our factories closed, industries paralyzed, every business enterprise stagnant, anxiety and apprehension existing everywhere, confidence in the party in power gone, our gold lying in the vaults idle, and yet the President tells us that the "gold to be supplied from abroad is one of the favorable and important features of this transaction." May the good Lord ever deliver us from such favors. [Applause.]

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] asks the question and says, "What difference will it make if we insert in these bonds the word 'gold,' principal and interest payable in gold, when our coin bonds are all paid in gold?"

Why, my dear sir, the President in his message answered your question before you asked it. Let me read what he says:

The arrangement thus completed . . . develops such a difference in the estimation of investors between bonds made payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold in favor of the latter as is represented by three-fourths of a cent in annual interest.

In this transaction the mere inserting the word "gold" in the bond, Mr. Speaker, makes a difference in favor of the foreign bondholder of $539,159 of annual interest, amounting in thirty years, or at the maturity of the coin bonds, to $16,174,170. In other words, in order to borrow gold of European capitalists, who will not trust us when we say we will pay our coin bonds in gold, we must either expressly promise to pay in gold or pay them over a half million dollars in annual interest to accept a "coin bond." In this case we, for their want of faith in our coin bonds, pay them a bonus of over $16,000,000. And now, Mr. Speaker, comes the most humiliating acknowledgment made by the President in this remarkable message. He says:

It is hardly necessary to suggest that, whatever may be our views on the subject, the sentiments or preferences of those with whom we must negotiate in disposing of our bonds in gold are not subject to our dictation.

Has it come to this, Mr. Speaker, that to pay the running expenses of our Government, to replenish the gold reserve, and to maintain the credit of our nation that we can not borrow money at home in an open market, but are compelled to negotiate our bonds in secret with foreign capitalists, who alone dictate the terms? What humiliation! What will the nations of the world think of us? Aye, what will our own people think of ourselves?

But I must hasten. Let me call the attention of the House and the country to some things quite as humiliating contained in the contract itself.

After specifying the amount of gold to be delivered to the United States Government, the time, place, and other matters pertaining thereto, it is stipulated that—

Should the Secretary of the Treasury desire to offer or sell any bonds of the United States on or before the 1st day of October, 1895, he shall first offer the same to the parties of the second part; but thereafter he shall be free from every such obligation to the parties of the second part.

Not content, Mr. Speaker, to secure the valuable benefits this transaction gives them, they bind the Secretary of the Treasury so that he can not even offer, much less sell any bonds of the United States Government, until after the 1st day of October next, nine months from the date of the contract, unless he shall "first offer the same to the parties of the second part." Look at this spectacle! Already the contract is signed, sealed, and delivered—signed by J. G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury (on behalf of the United States); by August Belmont & Co., for N. M. Rothschild & Sons, London; by J. P. Morgan & Co., for J. S. Morgan & Co., of London; witnessed by Francis Lynde Stetson, a former law partner of President Cleveland, and no doubt written by him.

Look at it! Our Government "bound hand and foot," and for nine months can not offer or sell a bond without first consulting with these foreign capitalists. What think you, capitalists of this country? What think you, Representatives of a country we are proud to boast of as the best the sun shines on to-day? Are you willing by your vote to-day on this resolution directly or indirectly to approve of such an unjust, unwise, unbusinesslike, unpatriotic proposition? No; never, never! [Loud applause.]

But this is not all. While the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] was addressing the House a few moments since on this resolution, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] asked him a very pertinent question. "What assurance," said he, "have we that withdrawals of gold will not continue in the future as in the past?" The gentleman from West Virginia did not answer the question. I wish he had. This House and the country would like to have heard it. Let me read the very last clause of the contract, which shows that the Secretary of the Treasury, the President, and his law partner were not entirely neglectful of the interests of our country, for they provided against this very contingency (?) in the contract. Here it is:

Fifth. In consideration of the purchase of such coin, the parties of the second part, and their associates hereunder, assume and will bear all the expense and inevitable loss of bringing gold from Europe hereunder; and, as far as lies in their power, will exert all financial influence and will make all legitimate efforts to protect the Treasury of the United States against the withdrawals of gold pending the complete performance of this contract.

If the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means had read this he would have answered the question of the gentleman from Tennessee without hesitation.

I am reminded of an old lady in my district whose husband died very suddenly. Her neighbors and friends gathered in to sympathize and weep with her in her great bereavement and to praise the many virtues of her husband. In the very midst of her sobs and tears she exclaimed, "Well, I have one consolation in the death of the old man—the loss is fully covered by insurance." [Laughter and applause.]

In this great financial embarrassment, in consideration of getting foreign gold to supply the Treasury, in consideration of giving them the option on all bonds to be issued by our Government for the next eight months, in consideration of the great loss sustained by our own American capitalists who are holding the "coin" bonds of the Government, in consideration of giving these parties bonds that were worth at the very moment they were delivered at least 112 and before thirty days doubtless will be worth 120 premium in the markets of the world, realizing a net profit to their purchasers of at least $10,000,000, the people of the United States are assured that our Treasury will be protected against any further withdrawals of gold by these foreign guardians. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, just think of it for a moment. If the other terms of the contract to which I have called the attention of the House were humiliating, this is degrading to our people. The Government of the United States, this great nation of ours, entering into a written contract with the Rothschilds of Europe, "party of the second part, to protect the Treasury of the United States against the withdrawals of gold from our Treasury," is enough to bring the blush to the cheek of every patriotic citizen of our country, and cause him to bow his head in sorrow for the disgrace that is brought upon our nation. [Applause.]

The tariff legislation of this Congress has brought our country to this deplorable condition. In consequence of the insufficiency of the revenues to meet the expenditures, the Treasury has been drained of its available resources, and that, combined with withdrawals of gold for export, has required the Government within the last year to borrow and issue bonds to the amount of over $165,000,000, realizing thereon, including premiums, the vast sum of $182,496,557.74.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate on yesterday, says that "the original gold reserve, augmented by the gold proceeds of the sale of bonds, was diminished during the period of the last twenty-five months to the extent of $172,674,315.47, of which $105,002,143.25 was directly or indirectly devoted to current expenses of the Government." This is one of the blessings that resulted from placing the Democratic party in power (?). This is tariff reform, a step toward free trade, reducing the tariff on wool and other imports and borrowing money of foreigners to pay the running expenses of the Government. [Applause.]

But, say the advocates of this measure, "We are into it, the contract is made, and unless we authorize the issue of gold bonds we will have to pay a higher rate of interest." That may be true, but the Congress is not responsible for this. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs. The President made this contract without consulting Congress or anybody else; now let him enjoy the glory or bear the ignominy that may attach to this transaction. I will not share either with him. [Applause.]

Vote for this resolution? Never, never, never!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, after careful inquiry and investigation I have been unable to learn that either England, Germany, Austria, France, Russia, or any other country has ever issued a bond stating upon its face that the interest and principal would be paid in gold coin. If this information is correct, I desire to ask if such action on the part of the greatest silver-producing country on the earth is advisable.

In the calendar year 1892 we produced 43 per cent of the silver of the world, and in 1893, notwithstanding our adverse legislation on the subject, we produced 37 per cent of the silver of the world; and the production of silver in the United States, as compared with the gold-standard countries, shows that during the last three years our silver production has been more than double the combined production of all the gold-standard countries of the earth.

To substantiate this statement I have prepared the following table:

Table showing a comparison of the amount of silver produced in the United States, with the amount produced by the gold-standard countries of the world in 1891, 1892, and 1893.

Country.	Production of silver in 1891.	Production of silver in 1892.	Production of silver in 1893.
United States (bimetallic).....	$75,416,500	$82,101,000	$77,575,700
Australasia (gold standard).....	12,829,300	17,375,700	26,507,000
Germany (gold standard).....	7,756,600	8,815,000	8,240,100
Austria-Hungary (gold standard).....	2,161,900	2,289,200	2,290,200
Sweden (gold standard).....	152,000	2,210	185,800
Norway (gold standard).....	235,400	186,800	188,800
Great Britain (gold standard).....	255,000	219,000	327,700
Canada (gold standard).....	406,200	410,700	321,400

This table shows very forcibly that the gold-standard countries of the world have very little interest in silver, and it is plainly to be seen that to demonetize silver would be of very little injury to them while it would be of very great injury to the United States.

I regret exceedingly that some gentlemen in discussing this measure have been so unjust as to impugn the judgment and even the motives of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury. No one who knows these two very eminent men can for a moment question their absolute integrity upon everything that pertains to public affairs. Because a man differs from me in a matter of judgment, it does not lessen the esteem and regard which I entertain for him. In a matter so important as the one now before us I think all will agree that we should all use our best endeavors to advocate that legislation which will most redound to the prosperity and happiness of the people and the glory of our country, each Representative keeping in view the interests of the section which he is here to represent.

I do not doubt but that the legislation proposed will be of benefit to the moneyed and creditor class of people, nearly all of whom reside in New England and the Northeast; but just in the measure that it benefits them, I fear it will become detrimental to the great producing class of people in the South, Southwest, and West.

A BLOW AT INTERNATIONAL BIMETALLISM.

I ask the House to carefully consider the impression this legislation will make upon the civilized world. For thirty years we have been exercising all the influence of this great Government in favor of international bimetalism; we have solicited monetary conferences with the principal nations of the earth; we have sent delegates to those conferences, every one of whom has declared that the United States is enthusiastic for and unalterably in favor of such an international agreement.

If we enact this resolution into law, will it not throw a serious obstacle in the way of accomplishing such a purpose? It seems to me that this legislation is contrary to the pledges, traditions, and declarations of our country for a third of a century. It seems to me its effect will be either to discredit and depreciate all obligations which are not payable in gold, or result in exactions from creditors that all renewals of mortgages and loans shall state upon their face that they are payable in gold.

OUR STOCK OF GOLD INCREASED WHEN SILVER WAS COINED.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury dated December 2, 1878, tells us that at the close of the year 1877 the coin reserve in the Treasury in excess of coin liabilities amounted to $63,016,050; and he also informs us that this was increased by the sale of bonds, etc., so that on the 23d of November, 1878, the amount of coin held by the Treasury in excess of coin held to pay all accrued liabilities was $141,888,100. On February 28, 1878, Congress enacted the Bland-Allison Act, requiring the purchase of silver by the Government and its coinage to an amount of not less than 2,000,000 ounces a month into standard silver dollars. At the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1878, the Secretary of the Treasury reported $128,480,203 as the total gold in the Treasury, the net gold being $103,562,523.

Under the operation of the Bland-Allison Act the gold in the Treasury had so increased that in March, 1889, when Mr. Cleveland surrendered the Government to President Harrison, the total gold in the Treasury was $326,700,939, and the net gold was $197,874,422, an increase of total gold in the Treasury of $193,240,736, and an increase of the net gold in the Treasury of $94,311,899.

STOCK OF GOLD DECREASED UNDER THE SHERMAN LAW.

Soon after Mr. Harrison was inaugurated the gold in the Treasury commenced to fall off, and at the end of June, 1890, the total gold amounted to $321,612,424, and the net gold to $190,232,405. The Sherman law was then enacted and continued in force until November 1, 1893. At that date the total gold in the Treasury had fallen to $163,274,171 and the net gold had fallen to $84,384,862.

These facts show that from July 1, 1878, to July 14, 1890, the Bland-Allison silver-coinage act being in force during that time, we gained a total of gold in the Treasury of $193,152,221, and an increase in the net gold of $86,669,872; and we see that during the operation of the Sherman law the total loss of gold in the Treasury was $158,338,253, and the net loss during the operation of the Sherman Act was $105,847,543.

GOLD EXPORT ACCELERATED AFTER REPEAL BILL OF NOVEMBER 1, 1893.

We are told that the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act would stop the flow of gold from the Treasury. We have seen that on November 1, 1893, when that law was enacted, the net gold in the Treasury was..... $84,384,862.26
Gold received by the sale of $100,000,000 bonds about..... 117,890,288.74
Shipment of gold from banks..... 5,829,228.04

Amount of net gold in Treasury to-day..... 207,594,374.04
166,254,193.04

These facts show that the repeal of the Sherman Act has not stopped the flow of gold from this country to Europe, but we see that since that period we have lost $166,254,193.04; and if we examine the following table we shall find that a few banks in Europe have, since November, 1893, gained $214,954,651 in deposits of gold.

Table showing amount of gold in eight principal banks of Europe at the date of the repeal of the Sherman Act and the date of latest reports.

Bank.	November, 1893.	January, 1895.
Bank of England.....	$126,416,000	$161,067,736
Bank of France.....	330,620,200	402,706,335
Austro-Hungarian Bank.....	51,954,400	74,228,725
Imperial German Bank.....	189,238,700	249,369,193
National Bank of Belgium.....	19,918,500	26,074,707
Netherlands Bank.....	13,923,000	19,908,985
Bank of Spain.....	38,536,900	38,951,406
National Bank of Italy.....	43,232,000	* 56,433,200
	613,890,700	1,028,794,361

* December, 1894.

GOLD LIABILITIES OF THE TREASURY.

The liabilities of the Treasury Department on February 1, 1895, payable in coin, were:

Treasury notes, act July 14, 1890.....	$117,130,225
United States notes.....	250,999,343
National bank notes.....	198,964,396
	575,143,964

I have included the national-bank currency in the above because this currency can be presented at the counters of the national banks for redemption, or it can be presented in the reserve city, where the banks located out of cities keep their accounts.

These reserve banks would of necessity redeem the national-bank currency in either greenbacks or gold or standard silver dollars, but practically they would redeem them in either greenbacks or gold, because there are only $55,873,630 standard silver dollars in circulation, and nearly all of these are in the hands of the people and not in possession of the banks.

THE THREE SHOCKS TO OUR FINANCIAL SYSTEM.

The first shock to our financial system was the surreptitious demonetization of silver in 1873. This obnoxious law was in part repealed by the silver-coinage act of February 28, 1878, and while that law remained upon the statute books gold flowed into the Treasury and our country was blessed with prosperity. This continued until July 14, 1890, when the Sherman law was enacted, which stopped all coinage after July 1, 1891. This caused the piling up in the Treasury of 160,000,000 ounces of unused silver, which has done more than all else combined to depreciate its value. The next blow was the act of November 1, 1893, which wiped from the statute books every line and word which provided for an increase in the money of the United States. The effect of these laws upon the gold in our country and the Treasury is shown in the brief table which I will read:

Table showing the gain of gold to the Treasury during the silver coinage period, and the loss of gold since the enactment of the law of July 14, 1890, repealing the silver-coinage law.

	Total gold.	Net gold.
Gain of gold to the Treasury from June 30, 1878, to date of coinage repeal, July 14, 1890.....	$193,152,221	$86,669,872
Loss of gold to the Treasury during operation of Sherman law, from July 14, 1890, to November 1, 1893.....	158,338,253	105,847,543
Loss of gold to Treasury from November 1, 1893, to February 12, 1895.....	192,410,801	166,254,193
Loss of gold to Treasury since the act of July 14, 1890, which repealed the silver-coinage law.....	350,748,144	272,101,736

Should this not admonish us that some new policy should be given at least fair consideration? We see here that the Treasury made a clear gain of $86,609,872 net gold during the twelve years that we coined some 3,000,000 standard silver dollars every month; and we also see that we have lost $272,101,736 net gold during the four years and a half which have elapsed since we repealed the coinage laws.

A FAIR REMEDY.

It seems to me that after we have replenished the gold in the Treasury, as has been done by the contract of February 8, it would be no injustice to anyone to provide that from that time the redemption of greenbacks and Treasury notes shall be in proportion to the gold and silver in the Treasury on the day such greenbacks and Treasury notes are presented for redemption. If we do not do this it is clear beyond question that the endless chain will continue to run and continue to drain our gold in the Treasury. That some such remedy as this is absolutely essential I believe no one will deny. I have therefore prepared an amendment which, it seems to me, ought to meet the approval of the conservative members of Congress. It is as follows:

Amendment of Mr. WHEELER of Alabama.

That after the $65,000,000 in gold secured by this contract has been received by the Treasury the payment of all obligations which are payable in gold or silver at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be paid partly in gold and partly in silver, in the proportion in which the two metals are held by the Treasury on the day the payments are made.

This is substantially what is done by the Bank of France and other European banks, and it has never disturbed the parity between the two metals.

SECRETARY CARLISLE'S OPINION.

On the 21st of January, 1895, Secretary Carlisle stated in a printed report that—

If the policy of reserving to the Government, at the beginning of the resumption, the option of redeeming in gold or silver all its paper presented, I believe it would have worked beneficially and there would have been no trouble growing out of it.

If it was right to do it then it is right to do it now, and a great Government like this ought to do what is right to all the people, whether they belong to the industrial debtor class or to the privileged creditor class. I believe that Mr. Carlisle might have added that no serious trouble could arise from such action now, and if it were done I am convinced that no trouble could come from it to be compared with the serious trouble and distress which is inevitable if the present system is continued. At least we might try an experiment. The legislation of the last thirty years has been too largely in the interest of the creditor class. Let us make at least one effort in behalf of the people.

In a speech which I had the honor to make on this floor on August 25, 1893, I read a table showing the amount of indebtedness of the people and corporations in the United States our census year, 1890. It is as follows:

Table showing some of the debts of people and corporations in the United States during the year 1890.

Railway debts of 163,420 miles of railroad as stated in Poor's Manual for 1891, Introduction, page 1:
Funded debt.....	$5,105,902,025
Unfunded debt.....	576,494,297
Current debt.....	271,145,250
Loans from 3,540 national banks, as shown by Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1891, page 31.....	1,986,100,000
Loans from 5,579 State, savings, stock, and private banks and trust companies, as shown by United States Statistical Abstract.....	2,201,764,282
National debt (Treasury report).....	801,860,104
State, county, municipal, and school district debts as stated by Statistical Abstract of the United States for 1891, page 9.....	1,135,351,781
Mortgages on farms and homes, not including those occupied by tenants.....	2,500,000,000
Mortgage indebtedness on real estate used in business and all other realty, not including the farm and home mortgages as stated above.....	3,500,000,000
Indebtedness of street railways, manufacturers, business enterprises, etc., as shown by the census of 1890.....	1,500,000,000
Total indebtedness.....	19,468,616,709

This does not include all the debts, but only such as I was enabled to ascertain from the Census reports and other documents issued by the Government. It is estimated that these debts have now increased to at least $35,000,000,000.

LEGISLATION AGAINST THE DEBTOR CLASS ALWAYS BRINGS DISASTER.

While I think legislation should be fair to all people, yet no nation ever was prosperous and happy which enacted legislation adverse to the interests of the debtor classes.

Mr. Speaker, who are the debtor classes of the people of the United States? They are the people to whom we owe all our prosperity, all our progress, all our development, all of our growth, and everything which has made this great and glorious country the pride and admiration of the whole world. It is the debtor class who make the homes in the virgin forests, in the vast prairies and plains of the gigantic West, and with their labor plant the seeds of civilization, and almost like magic create new and prosperous States.

It is the debtor class that organize together, build railroads, erect factories, inaugurate enterprises, and maintain schools and churches, and spread the great cause of religion and Christianity. Enact laws adverse to the debtor class and we strike a blow at progress, civilization, and Christianity.

Mr. Speaker, I insist that anything that makes it more difficult to pay the $25,000,000,000 owed by the American people, just in that measure throws obstacles in the way of material advancement.

In considering the proposed legislation we must always keep in mind that the United States is the debtor nation of the earth, and that our debts are largely owed to people of the nations who make this gold proposition to the Secretary of the Treasury. The propositions come directly from the great Rothschilds, bankers, who would be more benefited than any other people on earth by having the gold standard fastened upon the United States; and just in the measure that it would be a benefit to them it would be a hardship and burden to their debtors of this country.

One reason why the Treasury has lost gold since we have stopped coining silver, may be that the piling up of unused silver in the Treasury, together with other legislation adverse to that metal, has widened the margin of values between gold and silver. This has caused a scramble for gold, and it seems that we have been worsted in this contest.

DEMONETIZATION OF SILVER DESTROYS VALUES.

In the speech to which I have referred I read the following table, which utterly refutes the assertion that silver fell in value from 1873 to 1892, as compared to the staple products of the world. On the contrary, it shows that in 1892 silver was 67 per cent of its value in 1873, while the average value of the staple productions was only about 44 per cent of their value in 1873. The table also shows that the increase in the production of silver from 1873 to 1892 was less than the increase of production of the great staples produced by the American people. This shows that gold has increased in value and that silver has not fallen in value. The table is as follows:

Table showing increase in production of silver and various other staple American products from 1873 to 1892, their value in 1873 and 1892, also their value in 1892 compared with that of 1873.

In order to refute the statement that the fall in values has been caused by excess in production, I have prepared another table showing the production of these articles in the United States, so far as I could get the data, for the years 1892, 1893, and 1894. The table also shows the value in 1892 and the value in 1894; also, the percentage of value in 1894 to what it was in 1892.

* 1891.

One reason why money has been hoarded and prices have declined since the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act, may be that every step taken by this Government, which helps to fasten upon this country the gold standard, has a tendency to reduce the amount of money of ultimate redemption, which must lower prices; and when this tendency exists, all those who have money see that its purchasing power will increase, and therefore their interest is best served by holding and hoarding, instead of investing.

There is another element in this great question which should be considered. During the last forty-five years the production of gold in the United States has very materially decreased, while the property of the United States has increased fully tenfold. To illustrate this great disparity I have prepared the following table.

Table showing gold and silver production in the United States from 1850 to 1894, and the ratio of gold production to the property of the United States, and also the ratio of combined gold and silver production to property.

Year.	Gold production.	Silver production.	Property in United States.	Ratio of gold production to property.	Ratio of combined gold and silver production to property.
1850.....	$55,000,000	$5,000	$7,128,780,288	1 to 129	1 to 129
1853.....	65,000,000	50,000	7,500,000,000	1 to 115	1 to 115
1860.....	46,000,000	150,000	16,159,616,068	1 to 351	1 to 351
1870.....	50,000,000	16,000,000	30,068,518,507	1 to 601	1 to 455
1880.....	36,000,000	39,200,000	43,642,000,000	1 to 1212	1 to 607
1890.....	32,845,000	70,485,714	65,037,031,000	1 to 1980	1 to 629
1892.....	33,000,000	82,101,000	75,000,000,000	1 to 2272	1 to 652
1893.....	35,955,000	77,576,000	75,000,000,000	1 to 2085	1 to 669
1894.....	41,390,422	58,792,417	75,000,000,000	1 to 1812	1 to 757

We see by this table that since 1850 the property of the United States has increased more than five times as fast as gold and silver combined, and we see that property has increased fifteen times as fast as the production of gold. As all admit that money should bear a proper relation to the property of a country we are doubly admonished against upholding legislation which will confine the money of our country to one metal.

With all these facts before me I feel that it is my duty to the people I represent to oppose the resolution. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the passage of this resolution would forever close the door to international bimetalism. I believe it would place us irrevocably upon the gold standard. I believe that from the moment this resolution becomes a law all obligations will be discredited unless they bear upon the face the stipulation that they are payable in gold coin.

I believe that many of the mortgages which now exist can not be paid when they fall due. I believe that when mortgages are renewed creditors will exact a stipulation that the principal and interest shall be paid in gold.

I believe that every debt now owing by the industrious people of our country will become almost twice as difficult to pay. I believe that mortgages upon farm homes will be foreclosed. And I believe that a most disastrous blow will be struck at the industrial people of our land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask, has a single one of the 12,000,000 farmers of our country petitioned this body for this legislation? Has a petition come from any organization, except from banks and from chambers of commerce and boards of trade, composed almost entirely of moneyed men or people who are interested in banks or other moneyed institutions?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I can not, of course, within the space of time allotted to me, discuss all the questions involved here; and I rise only for the purpose of giving one or two reasons for my opposition to this resolution. I have not taken the time of this House in discussing financial matters at all, and I shall desire no more than a short time in order to give the reasons why I shall vote against this proposition. In giving such reasons I wish it distinctly understood that I do not oppose the passage of the resolution because I favor the free coinage of silver, or because I desire that any obligation of this Government shall not be paid in the best money that the Government can command, but I oppose it because in my humble opinion it is a distinction against all past action of this Government on subjects of this kind.

And in order to show the full force of my argument it will be necessary to devote a little time to the past history both of legislation and the construction placed upon that legislation by the various Administrations during the last thirty years. Prior to 1869 we had contracted an indebtedness reaching into the billions. We had borrowed vast sums of money upon sale of our bonds, the purchasers trusting to the credit of our Government for their redemption. When those bonds could be redeemed we little knew. Yet the people of our country, as well as of other countries, felt that the faith of our Government was pledged for their redemption in the best money which we could command. Prior to 1869 a violent discussion had arisen in our midst relative to the redemption of those bonds and our other obligations. On the one hand it was contended that the Government had the right to redeem all such bonds in other paper promises, called money, and that it was the duty of the Government to so redeem them, while on the other hand it was contended that the Government had no right to redeem one promise by substituting for it another.

General Grant was elected President in November, 1868, and was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1869, and one of the first acts passed by Congress and approved by the President was what was known as "the public-credit act," which in no unequivocal manner declared that good faith on the part of the Government demanded that all Government indebtedness, unless otherwise expressly provided for, should be redeemed in coin. There was no expression given as to what that coin should be, but thereafter all Administrations down to the present one and including the present one have interpreted said act to mean the best money that we could command, which has been found to be gold.

Since then all of our obligations have been made payable in coin. We have refunded such of our indebtedness as we could not pay, on long time and at greatly reduced rates of interest, but we have never in any of those obligations named the coin in which they would be redeemed. No person or class of persons since then until the present time ever questioned the good faith of the Government, or its intention or ability, to redeem all such promises in the best money of the world. No one before this time has ever asked that the word "gold" should be inserted in any bond. There are many hundred millions of such bonds now outstanding, providing by their very terms that they shall be redeemed in coin.

Congress has never, by act or resolution, named the kind of coin in which they should be redeemed, nor has it ever before the present time been asked to do so. Congress has ever sought to maintain, so far as it could, on an absolute equality, both in their purchasing and debt-paying power, the gold and silver coins of our country. At the extra session of Congress in 1893, when we repealed the silver-purchase clause, we enacted as a part of such repeal that the Government, by all of its power, would, so far as it was possible to do so, maintain at a parity the gold and silver in our Treasury. So two things are perfectly apparent. One is that Congress has never named any one of the various kinds of our money as being the money of ultimate redemption for our paper promises, and the other is that the various Administrations, while possessing the power to pay all such obligations in coin, have always construed that power to mean gold, because it was recognized among all civilized nations as being preferred because of its general use.

In later years in making our loans or refunding them no question has been raised by any person as to the terms of the bond. No one has ever suggested that there was the least danger in the world that such bonds would be paid in inferior money. President Cleveland has made two loans of $50,000,000 each by disposing of bonds payable in coin, and no one has questioned what such bonds meant. His last loan, made in January past, payable in coin, was negotiated at such rates as to make the interest about 2½ per cent per annum. No one up to that time had suggested the least doubt as to how such bonds would be redeemed.

Now comes the most disgraceful episode in the financial history of our country. At a time when our people had a right to expect that our Administration would stand like a wall of adamant in defense of the nation's credit, and especially of that part which had already been refunded, President Cleveland sends his special message to Congress casting a doubt upon his ability to negotiate any further loans payable in coin and asks Congress to authorize him to negotiate a fifty-year loan for $500,000,000, payable in gold. At this time of general business depression, when labor was unemployed, and when the millions of agriculturists of our country felt that bankruptcy was staring them in the face, comes the suggestion of the President that we must pass at once to a gold basis, and so discredit to some extent at least the money used in business, to pay labor, and to measure the price of farm products.

No wonder Congress took alarm and refused to confer upon him such power. Immediately succeeding that comes the astounding intelligence that the Administration, through a former law partner of President Cleveland, has entered into a contract with a syndicate of foreign bankers to borrow sixty-two and a half millions of money upon conditions which clearly recognize that gold is the only money which can be used in the payment of our debts, and which as clearly recognizes the fact that all other kinds of money are inferior in debt-paying power, and which also recognizes a higher rate of interest than was necessary to pay in either of our prior loans.

Look at the contract. On a long-time thirty-year bond such terms of sale are provided for as that interest is to be paid at 3 per cent if the bond and interest are payable in gold, and 3½ per cent if they are payable in coin. Such a bond is to bring $1.04 only. Remember, this contract is made and signed, sealed and delivered before Congress is notified of it, and we have no power to undo it or repudiate it. Think of an Administration, for the first time in the history of our country, contracting with reference to the difference in the value of our various kinds of money, and providing, by contract, that one kind is much more valuable than any other kind.

Think of the stupendous blunder of negotiating such a bond at $1.04, when an examination of the report of the sale of stocks and bonds in any of our markets would reveal the fact that Government bonds, with no more than twelve years to run and payable in coin, were selling at such a rate that if such rate should be applied to these new gold-bearing bonds they should net the Government $1.19½. Then, with no power on the part of Congress to affect such contract in the least except to authorize the sale of a gold-bearing bond which would make the interest at 3 per cent, the President calls upon us to authorize him, in order to save a little interest, to change the whole policy of our country for the last thirty-three years, under which policy our credit has grown so strong as to place us among the first nations of the globe.

But this is not all. By the contract which has been entered into this syndicate of foreign bankers has a mortgage upon the future loans of our country up to the 1st day of October, 1895, and no loan can be negotiated by our Government during that time without offering it first to these foreign bankers. Was ever degradation more complete? Shall we supinely vote that our credit is now at a discount? How did the President know that a loan could not be negotiated payable in coin? How did he ascertain such a fact? Has he ever attempted to negotiate a loan with our own people at any rate of interest and been refused? Has he ever attempted to negotiate such a loan to be paid in coin among foreign bankers and been refused? Has he ever attempted to ask the patriotic American people to subscribe to a popular coin loan at 3 per cent interest and been refused?

How can he answer any of these questions in the affirmative? If he can not so answer them, what right has he to assume that he can negotiate no loan except one payable in gold at 3 per cent interest, or in coin at 3½ per cent? But the supporters of the Administration claim that distrust has arisen in money circles fearing that a coin bond may be paid by the Treasury in silver, and that silver is now a depreciated money. But look at the contract that has been entered into. A difference of only three-fourths of 1 per cent interest is supposed to be the entire measure of this doubt. Does anybody suppose the Rothschilds will buy a bond about which there is no doubt and charge 3 per cent interest, or if our Government prefers, take a bond about which there is a doubt and charge only 3¼ per cent interest?

Who does not see these great moneyed men are simply forcing a weak and vacillating Administration to pay them a bonus of three-fourths of 1 per cent interest for just such a bond as for thirty years has been sought after by just such millionaires as among the safest and most stable investments of the world. And the Administration, yielding to their blandishments and wickedness, involves the American people in the contract which has just been made, and then fearing the deep damnation of that people when they learn of its weakness and perfidy, seeks to throw upon Congress, as servants of that people, the burden of ratifying its wrong and weakness. And the argument to support this monstrous claim is found alone in the fact that without the advice or knowledge of Congress a conditional contract has been entered into which, if Congress confers upon the Administration such power, will save to the people three-fourths of 1 per cent interest on the loan.

To save a little money which the Administration has wickedly filched from the people, we are called upon to condone and ratify a giant wrong. It is supposed that the people are such idiots as that to save the payment of a little money in the form of interest they will demand of Congress that it shall go back upon the history, laws, and traditions of our country for thirty-three years past, and do that which for all time to come will bind us in the grasp of those who own and hoard the gold of the world. But it is said by the supporters of the Administration that this contemplated loan, and the action of Congress in ratifying it, will not be regarded as a precedent to affect any future loans or the business interests of our country.

Can they be sincere in such a claim? Does anyone believe that if this loan and contract are ratified by Congress any future loan can ever be made except by its terms it is made payable in gold? Secretary Carlisle, in his hearing before the Ways and Means Committee, frankly admitted that this loan meant a change to the gold basis, and that all future loans must, by their express terms, be made payable in gold. Does this House contemplate the stupendous nature of this change? What the Government must do individuals, municipalities, counties, and States must also do, and all loans must hereafter be made or old ones refunded into gold-paying obligations. Are we ready for such a change? How can we excuse ourselves to our constituents for weakly surrendering to the dictates of foreign bankers, that they may grow rich on the hard-gotten gains of a hard-working and patriotic people? For one, I will not surrender. The friends of the Administration threaten with retirement to private life all those who refuse to support the Administration. Such retirement has no terrors for me, for I infinitely prefer it to a craven submission to foreigners who would dictate our financial policy to the ruin of our people.

But we are told that it is our duty to put aside all political differences and to support the recommendation of the President because there is a financial exigency which demands immediate action and instant relief, and I am frank to admit that this is the only argument which has the least weight with me bearing upon this important question. But it must be remembered that it will hardly be expected of an individual every time some financial strait arises in the history of the country that that individual shall lay aside all political preferences and well-established convictions of law to meet that exigency simply because it may be said that the times and occasion demand it.

Such an argument would wipe out all party lines and party principles every time the party in power shall see fit, rightfully or wrongfully, as it chooses, to force such a condition of affairs as demands immediate relief. It would hardly be expected of the Republican members of this House to vote in favor of any system for raising revenues which may be suggested by the President on the ground that we are sorely in need of revenue, for that would be to enable the Administration to force the opposite party to favor by legislative enactment any scheme which such Administration might see fit to advocate.

If a member of Congress has well-settled convictions of how an exigency has been forced upon the country, and what will relieve against that exigency, such member can hardly be consistently asked to forego his firm convictions simply because there is an exigency. In order to determine our duties at this time, we, as Republicans, must take into consideration all surrounding circumstances bearing upon the question. Two years ago this coming 4th of March a Republican Administration was superseded by the present Democratic Administration. During that Republican Administration our revenues were ample to meet all requirements made upon the Treasury.

In addition to meeting all legitimate demands made upon that Treasury, we had revenues sufficient to enable us to go into the market and buy our indebtedness not yet due, and to cancel the same to the extent of near $300,000,000. When that Republican Administration surrendered its power, all of the laws under which that ample revenue had been provided were in full force, and were powerful enough, if left intact or not threatened by repeal, to continue to fill our Treasury with money sufficient to meet all demands upon the Government.

The Democratic Administration succeeds to power, controlling not alone the executive but also the legislative department of our Government. It assumed power accompanied by a threat, which it was fully able to execute, that it would change, modify, or repeal all of those revenue-producing laws. It entered upon its work of destruction. It modified our revenue laws to such an extent that the legitimate expenditures are daily on an average of many hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of receipts. Through its weakness and vacillation it has now aroused the financial world as to the stability of our credit.

Our Treasury, running behind all of the time, is now open to attack on the part of those who hold Government obligations payable in coin. They present those obligations, have them redeemed in gold, the Government then treats that obligation so redeemed as being currency in the Treasury to be paid out to meet the ordinary expenditures of the Government, only to have that same obligation returned in a few days for redemption over again. The Republican party is not responsible in the least for this condition of affairs. It believes that if the Treasury was supplied with ample revenue to more than meet all demands upon that Treasury the drainage of gold would soon cease, for the world would see that we are able to pay our debts as fast as they fall due.

In view of all of these circumstances is it right to expect of us that we will now vote to reverse the traditions and history of the past third of a century, which tradition and history we were responsible for, and vote at the dictation of the despoiler of our revenues, and by so doing establish a precedent which, if adhered to, will destroy the very foundations of our party? For one, I am not so ready to vote. I stand here and affirm my willingness to aid by my vote and influence, whatever that may be, the passage of all such measures which, being consistent with our past tradition, history, and interpretation, will help to maintain the credit of our Government to stand in the very forefront of all nations' credits, so that our obligations can be redeemed in that kind of money which will most surely maintain the highest credit which it is possible for us to reach. I will go thus far, but I will not accede to the demands of the present Administration and vote for this resolution now under consideration. I have no further criticisms to pass upon those who vote for it.

I accord to them that which I demand, the right to vote according to the highest convictions of duty, and should the House this day adopt this resolution, its action shall be beyond my criticism, but shall be left to be criticised as they see fit, in such response as they may hereafter make, by the nameless, patient, and patriotic millions of our countrymen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important points connected with this matter has not been touched upon during the discussion up to this time. We are called upon as one of the great nations of the world to degrade ourselves, to humiliate our people, and yield one of the rights which we claim under our Constitution by ignoring, in the Constitution of the country, the sovereign power given under it to coin money. If all of the contracts of the Government are to be made payable in gold, and not in coin as heretofore, and that step be taken not at the pleasure of our own people, but by the coercion of foreign powers, it means that a sovereign people are to surrender their rights upon a question embodied in their Constitution to coin money and to regulate the value thereof.

We have always as a people reserved the right to pay any and all of our obligations in coin; and why? Because under the Constitution we have the sovereign right to coin money and regulate the value, whether it be gold or silver. Now, we are asked to abandon that right to coin one of the moneys of the Constitution in the interest of shylocks from foreign countries and to surrender a great constitutional principle, namely, the right to coin both metals if we see proper, because we are told that otherwise the bonds can not be negotiated.

If we are to surrender to the demands of this resolution which comes to us under the dictates of foreign bankers, it means, as a matter of course, hereafter, in harmony with the resolution offered a moment ago by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] as an amendment to it, that all bonds issued prior to the proposed issue of bonds covered by this resolution shall be payable in gold, and therefore all of the obligations being not coin but gold obligations, we signify our abandonment of the right of the people to coin either money, gold or silver; and I repeat, we do it at the demand of foreign people who will not furnish gold, they say, on any other condition.

Mr. Speaker, the Democratic party in a history of rule in this country of eighty years never was so cowardly as to submit the American people to the indignity of being compelled to enact legislation at the dictates of Great Britain or any other nation with reference to money matters or any other great question of government.

It is an indignity, it is an insult to our people, it is un-American, and no man who votes for it can justify the vote. He must admit that he has humiliated himself not only in the eyes of his people, but in the eyes of the world by absolutely abandoning at the behest of foreigners the sovereign right this country enjoys of coining money and regulating its value.

There never was such a proceeding in the past history of our country as is sought to be enacted here to-day. Never has there been an obligation of the Government issued at any time that was not made payable in coin, and this is the first that ever was issued, if Congress is so humiliated and so contemptibly cowardly as to pass into law this resolution—this is the first that ever was issued which was specifically declared to be payable in gold. [Applause.]

With the day that resumption of specie payments began we started on a bimetallic standard to a certain extent. It is true that silver was dropped from the coinage in 1873. But before the day of resumption we had coined some twenty-eight million silver dollars, which were equal to gold in value in the payment of all obligations; and Mr. SHERMAN himself, Secretary of the Treasury at the time of the resumption of specie payments, said that the coinage of silver made the resumption easier, as it gave him the right to redeem the legal-tender notes in gold or silver coin. If he had carried out this policy we would not now be in trouble. If it had been put in force and maintained no bond would be called for now and no new issue demanded. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has stated that if this bill passes the Government of the United States abandons the right to coin silver under the Constitution of the United States. How he can say that that issue is involved in the passage or the defeat of this bill is a mystery to me. Silver has been demonetized for more than twenty years, and the question of its remonetization is not involved at this time in any way, nor can it be affected one way or the other by the passage or the failure to pass this bill.

The Government of the United States has declared in several enactments that it will maintain the parity of all coins of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. Then, why do you want to issue gold bonds? Let it alone and under free coinage you will have the parity of the metals.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it maintains the parity, as the Government has pledged itself to do, then practically there is no difference in value between silver and gold, and there is no pecuniary difference to the Government in paying either metal in its transactions. If one is as good as the other, and the Government will make them so, why does the gentleman say this bill will depreciate the one metal or deprive the Government of a right to coin silver, which is inherent in the Constitution? It is simply begging the question altogether. The Government of the United States will never pay in depreciated coin or depreciated paper any of the obligations of the Government.

It has declared that it will maintain the parity of all these obligations, and if it means to keep that promise here is a good place for the Government to declare that fact to the world, so that there may be no doubt hereafter upon the subject.

The gentleman from Illinois, my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS], said that if we promised to pay these $32,000,000 in gold it involved an obligation to pay $100,000,000 in gold at some other time. I do not see that that question is involved here. I do not see how we can increase our obligations an iota by the passage of this bill, either as to our bonded debt or as to the individual indebtedness in this country.

If the Government of the United States intends to maintain faith with its creditors, and to pay them in coin which is equivalent to gold, worth as much as gold in the markets and in the payment of debts, as the Democratic party has pledged that it would do and as the Government has declared, there can be no pecuniary loss whatever to the Government in promising to pay these obligations in gold. The only question presented here, Mr. Speaker, is whether, upon an existing contract made in pursuance of law, and which we will carry out to the letter, we can reduce that obligation over $500,000 a year, and in the thirty years during which these bonds run save to the Treasury of the United States over $16,000,000; whether we shall give the Rothschilds $16,000,000 as a bonus, or whether we should save this amount to the people of the United States.

That is the only issue involved here, and that issue must not be distorted or evaded by calling it a question of free coinage, or of the demonetization of silver, or the abandonment of the right of the Government to coin silver. That is not in issue, and it can not be pleaded here to prevent the Government from saving what it can save by changing this contract, by passing this law within the time specified in this contract. Therefore I hope this side of the House, which believes in economy in public expenditures, will pass this bill and show to our constituents and this country that we mean to save this amount of money in this transaction, and that we mean, in addition to that, that our bonds are payable in gold or in its equivalent.

That is all that is involved, and no other issues ought to be raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] or anyone else. He believes in free coinage, because he claims it will raise the value of the silver dollar to the value of the gold dollar, commercially as well as in law, and if he intends to do that, who is injured by promising to pay in gold, if the gold dollar is no better than the silver dollar in the markets and in the payment of debts? I hope gentlemen will not allow their minds to be diverted from the true inwardness of this question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND. How are you going to bring silver to par if you are going to make everything payable in gold, and nothing payable in silver?

Mr. SPRINGER. My time has expired, and I have no time, therefore, to answer that. But the way to maintain the parity of the coins is to give our creditors the option as to which he will receive.

Mr. KEM. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication relating to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the members of the People's Party, greeting:

As early as 1865-66 a conspiracy was entered into between the gold gamblers of Europe and America to accomplish the following purposes: To fasten upon the people of the United States the burdens of perpetual debt; to destroy the greenbacks which had brought us safely through the perils of war; to strike down silver as a money metal; to deny to the people the use of Federal paper and silver—the two independent sources of money supply guaranteed by the Constitution; to fasten upon the country the single gold standard of Britain; and to delegate to thousands of banking corporations, organized for private gain, the sovereign control, for all time, over the issue and volume of all supplemental paper currency. Thus they doubled the demands for gold; forced upon the country an appreciating money standard, entailing an indefinite period of falling prices; robbed enterprise of its just profits, condemned labor to idleness, and confiscated the property of debtors.

For nearly thirty years these conspirators have kept the people quarreling over less important matters, while they have pursued with unrelenting zeal their one central purpose. At the present moment every device of treachery, every resource of statecraft, and every artifice known to the secret cabals of the international gold ring are being made use of to deal a final death blow to the prosperity of the people and the financial and commercial independence of this country. They seek to accomplish their fell purposes before the blow can be averted by an awakened public through the ballot. Their plans have been long matured and their line of action is fully chosen. They address themselves to the one subject—the money question—in all of its breadth and magnitude. This brings the country face to face with a perilous issue which calls for immediate and united action on the part of the people. Every behest of patriotism requires that we shall at once meet the issue and accept the challenge so defiantly offered.

We must meet the issue as it is presented to-day. To falter now is to invite disastrous failure. We earnestly urge the Populists throughout the country to concentrate their entire force and energy upon the tremendous contention presented and thus meet the enemy upon his chosen line of battle. Invite the aid and cooperation of all persons who favor the immediate free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, the issue of all paper money by the General Government without the intervention of banks of issue, and who are opposed to the issue of interest-bearing Government bonds in time of peace. In a word, to extend the hand of fellowship to all who agree with you upon the money question, which is certainly the mightiest and most fundamental controversy evolved during the present century.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, for thirty years both political parties of this country—when I say political parties I mean the dominant parties—have been masquerading with the financial question and deceiving the masses as to their real purpose. The few people who have been opposed to the legislation that is now proposed, and to all legislation kindred to that, have had to fight a concealed enemy all these years. But I am thankful for one thing, and that is that at last the enemy is uncovered, that the mask is thrown aside, and we are confronted with the plain proposition from the executive department of this Government of bonds payable in gold. I am heartily glad of this, for it is much easier to fight an open enemy than one in ambush, and I take it, Mr. Speaker, that from this on the fight along these lines will be easier than it has been in times past.

I heartily coincide with the severe arraignment of the Executive made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], and I say that in my opinion the English language is not adequate to express the severity with which he ought to be arraigned for this bond transaction as presented to this body for ratification.

But I want to say in that connection, Mr. Speaker—and I have endeavored at all times to hold these facts before the people—that the President is not wholly and only responsible for this state of affairs, but it is because of past Republican legislation that this thing was made possible.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the affirmative of the proposition to use a portion of their time. The negatives have used two hours and five minutes and the affirmatives have used one hour and seven minutes.

Mr. REED. Has the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] spoken?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. REED. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I defer very much to the better judgment of my associates on this floor on all questions, and especially those involving our financial system. I have no great pride of opinion on those subjects. I do not wish to speak to-day in any oracular way, nor do I hope, sir, in the brief time allotted to me to successfully contend against the prejudices engendered by the tendencies of recent politics. I shall endeavor to-day to maintain that view to which I think all political parties will assent, and that is that the burden is on this Government to maintain the equality of all its currencies.

Such has been the traditional policy of the American people from the foundation of our institutions; and since the resumption act passed we have had to maintain a gold reserve for the redemption of our Treasury notes. No one who resists this measure has said one word against the policy of that system. It is obvious to all that we have a paper currency issued by the Government amounting in round numbers to $500,000,000; we have as much more of silver money, in round numbers, the parity of which with gold, under existing law, is also to be maintained; and to keep this vast sum of a thousand millions on an equality with gold we have in the Treasury $40,000,000 of gold. No candid man can dispute the necessity of increasing this gold reserve.

Our revenues are now all paid in silver and silver certificates. It follows as an inevitable conclusion that in order to reenforce the redemption fund under the law it is necessary to resort to loans, and also to stipulate that the money it receives in exchange for its bonds shall be gold. Nobody has dared to suggest that the Treasury should go into the market and sell its bonds for silver. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] affirmed in the outset of his remarks that the word "coin" in our obligations and in our fiscal statutes means "gold."

It may be fairly assumed that it is the law and also the concurrent opinion of all parties that it is the duty of this Government to provide gold in order to redeem its notes and to maintain the parity of all its currencies.

Now, in all fairness, when our Government, in order to sustain the tottering fabric of our credit, goes into the market to procure the most precious of the metals, should it reserve the right to pay for it in any other?

If we have to borrow gold, why should we not be willing to pay gold? And as a matter of fact, when we give "coin" bonds for gold everybody knows that our creditor has a right to expect gold in return. Why, then, should we stickle for a reservation which it would disgrace us to enforce?

Those gentlemen who object to the use of the word "gold" know that the bonds which have been issued within the last few months—

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman permit a question just there?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I have but a few minutes.

Mr. TERRY. If coin means gold, why did the syndicate charge us a higher rate of interest upon a coin bond than upon a gold bond?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. My friend, if he will reflect but a moment, will understand the nature of the storm under which the Treasury of the United States has been struggling. He can not be indifferent to the events of the day. There has existed in this country for many months past a feeling of distrust, a want of confidence, which has paralyzed all our business and almost suspended our fiscal operations. This distrust relates to the question of the ability of the Government to maintain its plighted faith. It is not so much a fear as to what our obligations may be held to mean, but it is an apprehension as to whether we can maintain our top-heavy system.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said the other day that they knew in New York and that they knew in London that this Government would pay all its obligations in gold. When the President of the United States in his message to this body said that some doubt or suspicion had been cast on the ability of the Government to redeem its obligations in gold, he knew that within the past few months two or three hundred millions of our paper money had been presented at the Treasury and redeemed because our own people, as well as those abroad, had begun to fear that we would not be able to redeem this currency. In case a collapse should come a bond payable specifically in gold might be more marketable.

But, sir, it makes no difference what may be our fiscal policy on this subject; it makes no difference about the requirements of the resumption act; it makes no difference how we regard the contract the Secretary of the Treasury has made. These are things that are settled and fixed. Nobody proposes to invalidate the contract which the Secretary of the Treasury has made with the gentlemen who have purchased our bonds.

The question now is whether we will stand by and see that contract go into effect, under which the Treasury will receive sixty-five millions of gold coin and pay as interest on it  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent per annum, or whether we will avail ourselves of the option offered to nominate "gold" in the bond and pay a rate of interest less by three-quarters of 1 per cent. By this business view of it, as to the particular transaction reported to Congress by the President, we can save to the people of these overtaxed States half a million dollars a year, about \$16,000,000 in all, if these bonds should run for the period of thirty years. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH was recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, in that brief time I can hardly state anything like my full reasons for appearing as a pallbearer at this financial funeral [laughter], but I want to state very briefly why I am so unalterably opposed to the passage of this resolution. If the distinguished gentleman from Georgia who has just taken his seat [Mr. TURNER] would reflect for a moment and appreciate that the resolution he is voting for to-day and supporting on this floor by his logical reasoning, from his standpoint, and his eloquent voice was setting an example and prescribing the kind of money in which every debtor in the United States—State, municipal, and personal—must pay his collective or individual bond, he would understand something of the interest the people take in this question aside from the bankers, the money lenders, and the money shavers of the United States.

This House has been flooded with petitions from national banks and boards of trade asking members to vote for this bill. As an answer to this money demand I have had placed in my hands within the last thirty minutes a personal letter written by one of the most distinguished citizens of Kentucky, an ex-governor of that State, for years an honored member of this House, and a sound political philosopher, who is now professor of political economy in the college in which you [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] graduated; an ex-governor of your State and to-day one of the most influential and honored citizens of Kentucky—

Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky. You refer to my friend Proctor Knott? [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Yes; Hon. J. Proctor Knott, of Kentucky. It is as follows:

I do not know when my Democracy has been more completely outraged than by the last insolent demand of the goldites that the Government shall issue $500,000,000 in gold bonds and retire the Treasury-note circulation with the proceeds. They do not seem to want to leave us even a hereafter.

[Laughter.]

You know, as everybody else must who has half as much sense as a sucking guinea pig, that whenever this Government agrees to pay that amount or a tithe of it in gold, silver is doomed, so far as we are concerned, to all eternity. As old Judge Forbush said to Johnny Moore, it had "jest as well say good-bye, world, and how d'y'e, hell."

[Laughter.]

Great God! how rapidly this long-suffering people are being driven to the dreadful alternative of slavery or internecine strife, to determine whether they will tamely hold out their hands and have the shackles of a remorseless plutocracy riveted upon their wrists or fight.

Now mark what I say, if the inexorable law of cause and effect has not been expunged from the statute book of the Almighty, unless a halt is called p. d. q. you may expect to see the horrors of the French Revolution put on the American stage with all the modern improvements, and that within the next decade.

I remember I was suspected by some of my friends of political lunacy in 1890 because I predicted that in the event of Mr. Lincoln's election there would be a war between the States. They could not see why it ought to be so. Neither could I, but I knew the causes which were at work, and which would in the long run produce that result, and I regarded his election simply as the spark which would explode the mine. So, when the fiery cloud appeared in less than one short year which deluged the country in blood for nearly a lustrium some of those who had thought me a croaker, a mere dyspeptic pessimist, began to regard me as Byron did Jeffreys—as "a d—d, discerning fellow." I tell you, Senator, in all seriousness, I see far more reason to apprehend the speedy approach of a terrible revolution in this country than Lord Chesterfield saw in France when he wrote his historic prediction from Paris. Nor am I alone. That gentleman, Astor, who went to England some time ago, bought him a place on the island, and became a British subject, saw what is coming as plainly as I do, so he took time by the forelock and skipped out when there was not such a rush for staterooms as there will be after a while. He knew very well that if things should keep on as you and I have seen them for some years past, the time was not far off when there would be such a crowd of his class of people hurrying aboard every outgoing steamer he might be shoved off the stage plank.

[Laughter.]

Our good friend, Mr. SIBLEY, sent me a copy of his magnificent speech against the Carlisle abortion the other day. I was sick in bed when it came, lonesome and low-spirited, my wife in Louisville under treatment for her throat trouble, and not a God-blessed friend near me to cheer me up. I read it over, in some places two or three times, and it stirred my old blood like the call of the trumpet stirs that of the war horse, or perhaps you will understand me better when I say it acted on me like good wine—King Solomon's favorite prescription to "those that be of heavy hearts." (As the average United States Senator is not presumed to be familiar with the writings of that eminent author, see Proverbs xxxi, 6, 7.) SIBLEY and free silver forever.

[Applause.]

I will not ask to detain the House, Mr. Speaker, but will avail myself of the privilege under the rule to say a few words more in regard to the pending measure under the general leave to print.

The strongest point made in the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], who has presented this question to the House with his personal indorsement and approval, is embodied in the proposition that the $500,000,000 of currency known as greenbacks, legal tenders, and Sherman notes are not only redeemable, under the interpretation of the law and the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, in gold, but that, under the terms of the law, when redeemed they can not be retired, but must be reissued. That is mandatory.

This provision of the law has been denominated on the floor a "revolving wheel" or an "endless chain," and these $500,000,000 become multiplied as often as the avarice and the interest of the gold shavers and gold exporters of the country demand their redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is the settled policy of this Administration, inherited from a Republican Administration and the action of a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, that these notes, one and all, must be redeemed in gold to preserve the credit of the Government and the parity of the metals.

Let me suggest to the Secretary of the Treasury how this "revolving wheel" may be destroyed and this "endless chain" may be broken in the interest of the people. Every one of these notes bears upon its face a statement of the act under which it was issued, and the notes are all lettered and numbered. Let the Secretary of the Treasury, under his interpretation of the law, redeem them in good faith, according to his discretion, in gold, but when so redeemed, and before they are reissued, let him make an exact identification by letter and number of each note so redeemed, and notify the shylocks and exporters of gold, who, under the present system, present these notes again and again in order to make a profit out of the exportation of the gold, that when these notes are presented a second time they will be redeemed in silver dollars.

This the Secretary has a right to do under the law. He can do it and preserve the integrity of the position he now occupies, and not one man out of a million in the United States or the world who believes in fair play will ever question his right or criticize his discretion in thus stopping this dishonest drain upon the Treasury which exists because of an imperfection in the law. Let him do this, and the "endless chain" will become a myth and the "revolving wheel" will be broken in the interest of honest government and of all the people of the United States. If the Secretary will do this the financial cloud now hovering over us will be dispelled, the prices of farm products will advance, prosperity will again bless the land, and a Democratic Administration will be restored to the confidence and love of a majority of the people of the United States. Amen! [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has two minutes of his time remaining. [A pause.] Five minutes of the hour which the Chair has been disposing of remain for the affirmative. The Chair will recognize some gentleman who desires to speak on that side.

Mr. COOPER of Florida rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to speak on the affirmative side?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have sat here to-day and listened to some remarkable contributions to a discussion supposed to involve business matters and practical government. The contribution which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has just inserted in the RECORD, coming from a distinguished gentleman from Kentucky and written to a Senator from that State, is one which I think the gentleman from Missouri, when he reads it in cold print, will wish for his own sake and for the sake of the man who wrote it, and for the sake of the State of Kentucky, had been kept a private document. [Applause.]

Now, what is the proposition before us to-day? It is a business proposition. We are not asked to discuss a loan; we are not asked to discuss the sale of bonds; we are asked simply to discuss and vote upon a proposition that, a loan having been already made which every one of us here knows is to be paid in gold, whether we shall simply say that we will do what we are going to do anyhow, and thereby save the American people $16,000,000, or whether we are going to throw this money into the coffers of those who furnish this loan, or wherever else you please, for the sake of indulging our personal prejudices or pride of opinion.

Sir, I speak to the Democrats here. The most discouraging thing on this side of the House is the fact that so many men who are Democrats, and supposed to be a part of a dominant party conducting the Government, seem to have no sense or apprehension of the responsibilities and duties belonging to the conduct of responsible government. We are in charge of a great governmental machine, and our first duty is to run it. It seems to me that a great many men on this side of the House do not realize that that is any part of what they are here for. They seem to enjoy the pastime of helping to scuttle the ship that they are embarked on. I for one propose to vote in this matter just as I would in private business. The town in which I live voted a few months ago a million dollars of bonds for municipal improvements. When they went out to negotiate them they found that they could make far better terms if they stipulated payment in gold; so they redrafted their ordinance and made the bonds payable in that way. That is a precise illustration of what the Government is asked to do to-day.

I believe there is a great future for the Democratic party. Gentlemen who think this party is dead forget the past. They forget all that we have survived and overcome. I say to you that the party of Thomas Jefferson, of Andrew Jackson, of Samuel J. Tilden, and of Grover Cleveland [applause] will never die. For days gentlemen here have carped at and criticized the President. Whether he has made the best bargain or not in this matter, I do not know; but it does not lie in our mouths to utter those criticisms. We have left him to struggle with a desperate situation as best he could. We have left him to negotiate a bargain with money lenders, with inadequate means and inadequate laws. He has done the best he could.

Further than that, he stands to-day higher in the confidence and affections of the American people, and he has more following to-day in the United States than either the Democratic or the Republican party. [Applause.] The people of this country, its business men, a great majority of its population, are sustaining the President. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] has informed the Chair that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has yielded him the two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, the pending resolution changes the character of United States bonds.

Heretofore those bonds have been payable in coin. This resolution requires these bonds to be payable in gold. It is a move in the direction of sending gold to a premium. The plain inference is that gold is better than coin. And yet the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means informs us that coin means gold. If it does, why not say coin, and have all our bonds uniform?

The effect of this proviso is to take this class of money out of circulation and put nothing in its place. If money is what the Administration wants, it can get a thousand million dollars of our own people on a simple 3 per cent bond, as proposed the other day by the gentleman from Maine. Such bonds could be sold to the people. But the banks are opposed to that. The people would take their money from the banks and lend it to the Government. Then, again, no lawyers or middlemen could get rich out of this loan.

The resolution discriminates against existing bonds. If it passes one of two things must happen, existing bonds must be paid in gold or they will be depreciated—they will without doubt be depreciated, because coin does not necessarily mean gold. It may mean silver, for coin includes both. The liability to depreciate Government bonds now outstanding is a good reason why this resolution ought not to pass.

This resolution has the effect to retire sixty-five millions of Treasury notes and greenbacks and thus contract the currency to that extent—

Provided, however, That no part of the proceeds of the sale of such bonds nor of the notes redeemed with such proceeds shall be available for the payment of the current expenses of the Government.

This is the language of the resolution.

The reason given for the passage of this resolution is that we have made a bad bargain, that the Secretary of the Treasury has made a contract which binds us to pay $16,000,000 "shave" to somebody in order to borrow $62,000,000. That in order to get rid of that contract we must pass this resolution. Now, my proposition is that he has made no such contract. He has no power to make a contract and bind the Government with covenants. He has power only to sell bonds or to buy gold. He has no power to make an executory contract. This contract is entirely executory, and therefore void. He has not in this contract even agreed to buy gold; he has not agreed to sell bonds.

We are not compelled to pass this resolution by the stress of a bad contract.

The great argument is that we can save a sixteen million shave which we are compelled to pay under that contract by passing this resolution. A careful examination of the contract shows that the Government has made no covenant whatever. It has neither agreed to sell a bond nor to take an ounce of gold. The contract itself is wholly executory. It is to be performed in the indefinite future. The Government assumes no obligation. If it accepts gold it is at a certain price—but it need not take any—that is all. The Secretary of the Treasury can not bind the Government by an executory contract. He may sell bonds and he may buy gold; that is all the authority the law gives him.

By this contract the Government does not bind itself to sell bonds or buy gold. The agreement is practically unilateral, and without doubt was intended to be so. Covenants can not be implied in such a contract.

No court would imply a promise on the part of the Government to sell sixty-five millions of bonds where no promise is expressed. No court would imply a promise on the part of the Government to take sixty-five millions of gold where no promise is expressed to take that amount or any other.

Before it can be said that this is a contract which binds the Government to sell this large amount of bonds and take this large amount of gold there must be interpolated into the contract terms which are not expressed.

The Rothschilds syndicate can only ask for a legal construction of the contract as written. If such a construction is given the Secretary of the Treasury can refuse to pay a shave of the $16,000,000 on a loan of $62,000,000. He can avert the great scandal by giving a legal interpretation of this contract.

The argument, therefore, based on the stress of the contract, falls to the ground.

I asked, as politely as I could, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to point out in this contract any promise the Government had made to either buy these millions of gold or sell these millions of bonds. He intimated in a lordly way that it is a matter not worth considering. It was the reply of a man who could not successfully answer the question.

Mr. REED. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as much time as he desires.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, language is inadequate to express my condemnation of the folly of this contract which has been entered into on the part of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury with these bankers representing both domestic and foreign syndicates. I believe that there was no excuse for sacrificing our bonds at the rate proposed in that contract.

On the day it was done bonds of the United States, having twelve years to run, at the same rate of interest, were selling on the market at 110½. Here are bonds, having thirty years to run, sold at 104½ to this syndicate! According to the figures of our experts, the value of the bonds and the added value arising from the length of time in which the bonds are to run, these bonds were worth that day in the open market of this country 119½. Here was a direct sacrifice of $9,200,000 to these bankers who had their hands on the throat of the Treasury and were squeezing out the last cent from that institution and the last drop of blood from the taxpayers of this country. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all of the contract. It goes further than that. The Treasury is tied up absolutely until the 1st day of October next in any issue of bonds it may desire to make or find necessary to make in that time. It seems as though there was not anything that could be suggested to make the contract any worse for the country and for the taxpayers that was not suggested and written into the contract.

Here, then, is a body of men getting away with $9,200,000 of the property of the taxpayers of the United States, money that must be earned by the common people of the country in the sweat of their brow and the toil of their hands; these men are getting away with it, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] asks, Do you propose to make yourselves particeps criminis?

I answer no, Mr. Speaker, not if I understand myself I do not. [Applause.] I wash my hands of the entire transaction; and yet I see this condition existing: I see these men getting away with the hard-earned money of the people and making out of our taxpayers this $9,200,000. If I ransom my goods in the hands of a thief, do I become particeps criminis? Do I consent to a contract by simply saving what I can from the avails of it, after my agent has made it doubly binding, acting within the limits of his authority?

What is the alternative? The Government has an option. It has an option by nominating in the bond the word "gold," that by that means we may save this $9,200,000 to the common people of the country. What, then, under the circumstances, is my duty as a representative of the people?

The agents of the people, selected by the majority of the people, selected, thank God! without any help from me [laughter] and against my best endeavors to defeat, and yet the constituted authorities of the people, having the legal right to make this contract, have entered into it with foreign as well as domestic bankers composing the syndicate. We find this syndicate getting away with the money to the extent that I have stated. Their hand is already in the Treasury. This $9,200,000 is in their clutches, so to speak. Now, do I sacrifice anything as a representative of the people by aiding, as far as I can, in rescuing that vast sum of money for the good of the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. Speaker, our bonds are already payable in gold. It has been the settled policy of this country for more than thirty years to redeem every bonded obligation, where the word "coin" is mentioned, in the best metal that any bond or the obligation of any country on the face of God's earth is redeemable in.

Mr. COOMBS. Then why not say so?

Mr. PAYNE. We simply have to put it in the bonds. "Why not say so?" my friend asks. I only say so because I want to ransom this money that these men are getting away with. It was not necessary to say it on the 28th of January, until that unfortunate message of the President came here demanding a gold bond. We had been getting money at 2½ per cent only in the markets of the world. Our credit was not injured. Our credit was good, and we could borrow all we needed on a coin bond and on the faith of the people in all parts of the world in the honesty, fair dealing, and good faith of the people of the United States. But that very message discredited our bonds here, and discredited them abroad; and yet, notwithstanding this fact, our bonds were selling in the market on the 8th day of February at a rate of interest less than 3 per cent. Then this infamous contract was made, and still they can not wreck the credit of the country, because this day in the markets of the world our bonds, with twelve years to run, are selling at a rate of 110½.

So we come back to the only question, the vital question here, shall we save this $9,200,000 to the Treasury of the country and to the people of the country and to the taxpayers?

Mr. Speaker, for myself—others can do as their duty seems to lead them—but as for myself I can see no other way than to ransom this money from the men who are getting away with it. [Applause.]

Mr. REED. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, from a Republican standpoint I can see no reason why we, as Republicans, should not support this resolution. We are in an unfortunate predicament, brought about by bad management on the part of this Democratic Administration. We are in a condition where, like a person who pawns our clothes or our property, by failing to redeem the pawn, we may lose by it. We shall do nothing but spite ourselves by the failure. This proposition will enable the Government to save at least half a million dollars a year. The President of the United States has appealed to us as Republicans, in the name of patriotism, and no one ever made that appeal to the Republican party in vain. We have stood by him on two different occasions, and in my judgment we should stand by him now, for in so doing we stand by the country.

Mr. HARTMAN. Did he make that contract in the name of patriotism?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I condemn that contract as severely as you do, but we can only undo that contract by passing this resolution, and it is because I am opposed to that contract that I shall vote for this resolution, and thereby obtain a better contract.

An issue is raised here as to whether these bonds shall be paid in gold or in coin. By refusing to pay them in gold we practically say that we did not intend to pay in gold the ones we have already issued; and I say, Mr. Speaker, that good faith toward the bonds we have already issued calls upon us to stand here and not quibble upon this issue. Let us pass this resolution, whether it becomes a law or not. Let us do our duty to the country regardless of the question from which side of the House this resolution emanates.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-two minutes.

Mr. REED. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], after graphically describing the situation to be that of a thief bearing away more than $9,000,000 of the people's money, asks the question, Do we sacrifice anything in trying to rescue this ill-gotten gain? I answer him that we may; and I want to call his attention to the fact that he proposes in his rescue, or attempt at rescue, to change the whole policy of his party, to go back upon all of the declarations of his party, and to institute a new method, a new policy, and call for new following.

There has never been a day since this party of his has been in existence that it has not contended for the equal status of gold and silver in the United States. [Applause.] If there is one proposition more certainly impressed upon the minds of Republicans than another, it is that we will as a party, by all means within our power, see to it that these two metals have equal potency in this land.

Here is a new departure. I am told that the Secretary of the Treasury yesterday, in his interview with a committee of this House, admitted that if this bond was issued, if this country now started out upon the policy of gold bonds, no other kind of bonds would probably ever be known in its entire history. Are we ready for that? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

I call attention not only to what the Republican party have said, but also to the declarations made by the party of the Speaker. We have been accustomed to fiery rhetoric in the platforms of that party. I can recall an instance where I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who a few moments ago spoke in favor of this bill, quote from this platform. Ah, how resonantly the sentences rolled from his tongue. Let me call his attention to the platform that he then quoted from. I read from a Democratic platform:

One currency for the Government and the people, the laborer and the officeholder, the pensioner and the soldier, the producer and the bondholder.

[Applause.]

Ah, Mr. Speaker, I can imagine that your own heart has been warmed many times by that ringing sentence. [Laughter.]

But again, in a later day, these same gentlemen said in their national platform:

We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage; but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be equal in intrinsic and exchangeable value, to be adjusted through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of the dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts.

Now you gentlemen propose to say in this authoritative way, with the authority of a statute, that the silver to which you are pledged, the silver that you are bound as honest men to maintain, to maintain the debt-paying power of—you now say that in the markets it is not to have the same debt-paying power as your gold.

But the Republican party has been equally explicit in its utterances. It says:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism; and the Republican party demand the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals, and the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether silver, gold, or paper, shall at all times be equal.

Equal! And here we are called upon now to declare that this dollar of ours, this silver dollar of ours, has not the same debt-paying power that a gold dollar has. I affirm, notwithstanding the language of the gentleman who stood a few moments ago where I stand now and said that our indebtedness was payable in gold alone—I say, not so. [Loud applause.] There is not an obligation of the United States save the gold certificate that may not honestly be paid in silver dollars [applause], and every creditor of the United States knew that fact when he permitted himself to become a creditor of the Government.

Gentlemen draw distinctions between moral and legal obligations. I say there are no such distinctions in governments—that there is no moral obligation that rests upon the Government outside the limitations of law; and he who will stop to think will agree with me. When you consider that we have human agencies in the administration of governmental affairs—the officer—who dares not go beyond the plain written authority of the law, what right has the gentleman to talk about moral obligations? A gentleman illustrated the same thought here the other day when we were discussing the moral obligations that might be involved in pleading the statute of limitations. He said, "What attorney of a corporation would refuse to plead the statute where he had the opportunity and duty called?"

All agreed with him; and we can quite well see that a failure to perform a duty of that kind would result, or might result, in his disbarment. He was bound to plead the statute; he was bound to insist upon the legal obligation. Why? Because he acts in a fiduciary relation. And so it is with an officer of the Government; and I insist that when action is thus dependent and when action is thus limited by law it is unnecessary to talk about moral obligation, even if such existed in the case, where the alternative is at all times preserved on the part of the Government to pay in coin—gold or silver. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes remaining. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

[Mr. BRYAN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, that doctrine of the union of the South and West has been preached before, and by prophets whose inspiration lasted longer than that of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN]. [Laughter.] But it has been a failure. It always will be a failure. We of the East not only send our property West, but we send our children there, and no man who crosses from East to West can fail to be struck by the fact that there is after all a unity of sentiment between the two sections of the country that no language will ever blot out or destroy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Southern and Northern Democrats may not be able to live together. I am glad they are not able to live together. [Laughter.] But I say to you that the Republicans of the East and of the West, of the North and of the South, have thus far found some method of living together and they will in the future. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now let me address myself to the comparatively small matter at hand. [Laughter.]

It very often happens in the history of this House—for I have been here a long period of time and I have seen the rise and fall of many patriots [laughter]—I have witnessed periods of great emotion and I have noticed that it very often happens in the history of this House and of this country that events often have some phases which seem to be very stirring and striking and to portend a tremendous future, but which are not thought of much a fortnight after the occurrence.

I admit, however, the importance in many ways of the resolution before us, but not of the proceedings of this House at this time. I wish the result were not a foregone conclusion. I wish that there were something more than language left to us to-day. But that being all that there really is in doubt as the matter will turn out, as gentlemen who hear me well know, it seems to me very important that whatever we say here will have a tendency to strengthen the credit of the Government.

We are not through with our difficulty. We have long months in front of us before the period of recuperation sets in. We ought not to say anything or do anything which will make that period of revival longer in coming than it ought to be. I therefore feel called upon, for my part, to reinforce the remarks so ably made by my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as to what the Government has done in the past with its bonds. Its bonds to-day ought to stand in the front rank of national bonds, if honesty of effort in payment of the same could count for anything in the history of this world.

Gentlemen say that we are at liberty to pay these bonds in something else besides the equivalent of gold. Whether we are or not, the fact remains that, urged on by an inexorable law, we have thus far paid in gold or its equivalent, and every man in this House believes that we shall do so in the future. [Applause.]

This does not in any way militate against anybody's belief as to bimetalism, whether international or national. For men who are in favor of the free coinage of silver are so because they believe that free coinage of silver would bring silver to a parity with gold. Therefore all sides of this House, in parties which are recognized in the government of the country [laughter], are agreed as to the result. And it is a great pity that we should be in a condition so that anybody could make any other charge. But diseases lurk, ready to attack a system which has been weakened by other disease, or by cold or exposure. A man may have in his body the germs of consumption, and it may never strike him, because his system may never be reduced to the point where it is possible that such a thing should happen.

Now, the trouble of our situation is that our body politic, our Government, has been so reduced by two years of party rule of such a character that our expenses are not paid by our income, and that the Government of the United States is for the time being running behind.

Whatever severity of criticism is bestowed upon the present situation, a greater severity of criticism is to be bestowed upon the past, and this agreement presented here for the inspection of the House is of a piece, it seems to me, with the Government of this country for the last two years.

It may be that I judge harshly. It may be that this agreement is the result of the unfortunate condition in which the Government was found. It may be that no guilt attaches to this, except so far as it is the result of causes which never ought to have been set in motion. However that may be, that contract is not presented to us for approval or disapproval; that is a responsibility the Administration must bear. It can not thrust it on Congress. It is a contract made by the legitimate agent of the Government, as my friend from New York says. I repeat that the agent—

Mr. MEREDITH. What is the authority of this legitimate agent?

Mr. REED. That agent of the Government—

Mr. MEREDITH. What is his authority?

Mr. REED. That agent of the Government, as I was about to say when I was interrupted [laughter], has made a contract. Gentlemen who are opposed to this proposition now before the House say that he had a right to make it. I presume, therefore, that he had. He has made it, and it is not submitted to this House; but there is a proposition submitted to this House, which is that that money will be furnished to us for the lower rate of interest provided that we put the word "gold" in our bonds. Now, that word is there now by everybody's understanding on both sides of this House; and the question is, what shall we do about it? If it were the establishment of a policy, then it might be discussed from some other of the standpoints that are presented to-day. But it is not the establishment of a policy. It is the action of the House of Representatives upon a single transaction.

Gentlemen say that the result would be that the Secretary of the Treasury will try other transactions of this kind upon the House and Senate in the future. I do not believe, after the expression of the American people upon that subject, that he will do it again. I admit that it is an unpleasant argument; but I deny that it is the establishment of any principle whatever. I should say that the gentlemen who are in favor of silver or of greenbacks or of any other form of our currency would make a sounder and wiser objection if they objected to any of these bonds being sold for gold when silver was presented. But this is a peculiar kind of transaction.

In a Democratic Administration, following what has been the custom of the country for many years, ever since the resumption of specie payment, we have provided that we will furnish gold for greenbacks; and therefore we issue bonds to obtain gold. Does any man believe—is there any member of this House who would insist—that the money which was specifically demanded in gold should be refused a gold payment when the time came? Mr. Secretary Sherman announced, on such a question being raised, that these bonds, being issued for gold, for the express purpose of obtaining gold to carry out the operations of the Government, would necessarily be redeemable in gold.

Now, that is the situation. Where the blame ought to be thrown is here—that this Administration has not made the people understand from the beginning that these bonds are just what they are, just what the custom of payment on the part of the Government has made them to be. It establishes no new policy, even if these bonds were made specifically payable in gold, all of them. And I say to men who are on the other side of the question that they are not treating this matter fairly when they speak of it as determining the policy of monometallism or bimetalism. Gentlemen who are interested in national bimetalism, if their views are correct, will find that at the proper time the consensus of opinion of the world will sweep us by any little affair like this without its counting for an instant, and if they are international bimetalists everybody in the world will hold it as a triumph to secure both metals on equal terms, and then it will be of no account how bonds read.

Let me give you one example, and I trust the House may not misunderstand my motives. Let me give you just one example of the way in which men get to be willing to pay Government bonds in the best money. You see the Government can not be sued. It can not be brought under the hands of the sheriff. A nation stands by itself and upon its honor, and it acts just as a gentleman does who stands upon his honor. He fulfills the obligation as the other man understood it, if it is a straightforward and honorable understanding; and such is the effect of being in power, that the most radical opponents of the policy of paying the best come at once to the front as the defenders of it.

Now, let me illustrate this. I can remember that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] not long ago stood up in his place and with considerable rapidity of language declared that we must have the free coinage of silver. Nothing less would do him. Perhaps it would not be improper for me to name some others; but I will just read one or two names, whose votes will be found recorded in the year 1890, on the 25th day of June, as in favor of the free coinage of silver.

Mr. WILSON, a member from West Virginia [laughter]; Mr. SPRINGER, a member from Illinois; Mr. BYNUM, a member from Indiana [laughter]; Mr. TURNER, a member from Georgia. [Laughter.]

I beg to say that I am not presenting this with any idea or desire of raising a laugh, because all of us here can be laughed at for having changed our minds. [Renewed laughter.] I am not presenting these names with any such purpose, nor for the purpose of reproaching any of these gentlemen. And the list includes Mr. MONTGOMERY of Kentucky and Mr. TARSNEY of Missouri.

I repeat, I am not using these names for any purpose of reproach. I am simply using them to show the constraining influence of being in power. [Applause.]

And, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that certain gentlemen who are about to retire from this House without having belonged to either party except occasionally to the Democratic party [laughter], if they should be put in power—and it is a great gratification to me to know that I can never prove what I now say [laughter]—I have no doubt that if those gentlemen should be put in power the like circumstances would constrain them in the same way. A nation's credit is its great stronghold. Disasters may happen to a nation. Democratic Administrations may occur to it. [Laughter.] Everything is possible within the range of human affairs. Under such circumstances the most precious thing in this world is a nation's credit, and it ought always to preserve it if it can.

Now, do not let our indignation about a contract which we can not interfere with, and which, perhaps, deserves all the reprobation it has received—do not let that prevent us from taking a business-like view of the present situation. Do not let us involve ourselves in "policies" and things of that sort, but let us face the situation as it stands. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. WILSON.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that anything I can say will throw further light on this question or give any additional information to the members of the House. To my mind this contract is a very simple one, and although it has been severely criticised by some gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber, for my own part I see nothing wrong in any of its provisions. The objection raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] that it will retire $65,000,000 of greenbacks is without foundation. Under its operation not a single dollar of the greenback currency will be retired. It simply prevents the Secretary of the Treasury from paying out, upon the current expenses of the Government, the coin that may be obtained by the sale of bonds or the currency that may be redeemed with such proceeds. It does not modify or repeal the law which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue the greenback currency.

That currency must still be used for the redemption of the national-bank notes, and may under certain circumstances be exchanged for gold coin, and in this manner would still be kept in circulation. There is not the least excuse for the assertion that the enactment of this resolution will result in the contraction of the currency.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the President and the Secretary have been criticised, whether from sincere motives or not I do not pretend to say, because it is alleged that the purchasers have been given an option on any future issues that may be made. The clause criticised is not an option, it is simply a requirement that if additional bonds are issued before the 1st day of October that these parties shall be given the first offer; and, in my judgment, this provision is as much a protection to the Government as to these individuals. The only reason I apprehend why the purchasers of these bonds insisted upon, or at least desired, the insertion of such a right was that they might have an opportunity to prevent the sale of a future issue at a price lower than they had paid, thereby depreciating the value of the securities held by them.

The Government is not required to accept from these parties any offer they may make, but they are simply accorded the first right of making a bid.

It is said that the Secretary committed an error in negotiating a sale without first advertising for bids, as if it was an easy matter to secure $65,000,000 of gold by going into the open markets. The critical condition of the Treasury was such that, in my judgment, no other course was open. To hawk about financial centers and advertise in the columns of the press the dire necessities of the Government and the intentions and plans of the Administration for restoring the revenue and maintaining the public credit would have proven disastrous and probably have defeated all negotiations. This was not a sale of bonds; it was a purchase of gold, and there was nothing left for the Secretary to do but contract with the parties able to furnish the required amount upon the best terms he could secure.

Gentlemen will know that the last issue of bonds put upon the market was almost wholly paid for with gold drawn out of the Treasury by those who desired to secure them. Had the Secretary advertised openly for bids and accepted an offer without any guaranty that the Treasury gold should not be raided, the $41,000,000 now there would have been drawn out before the contract had been concluded. The stipulations which he secured for the defense of the Treasury are wise and wholesome. Half of the gold is to come from abroad, and the part furnished at home is to be secured without drafts upon the amount held in Treasury, and, in addition, the purchasers agree to use their influence and efforts in protecting the Treasury from future drains and the country from exportations. How they may do this is not a matter of detail or investigation, but certainly no one will gainsay that they can in times of stress render valuable aid.

Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised—I say it frankly—that Government bonds can not be sold at the price they brought a few months ago. If the present banking system of the Treasury be not reformed and the gold reserve continues to be raided in the future as it has been in the recent past, it will be difficult to negotiate future sales upon as favorable terms as have been secured in this last agreement.

Gentlemen say that the passage of this resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a bond payable in gold coin will require every private contract thereafter made to be paid in the same medium. Mr. Speaker, it is for the purpose of protecting the credit of the Government, the credit of our States, the credit of our municipalities, and of individuals that I desire to see this stipulation inserted in our bonds. It is because of the fear that this Government is not going to adhere to the policy of making its payments in the best money that these stipulations are being required from domestic borrowers.

If it goes out to-morrow morning that the House of Representatives of the United States, the Representatives of the people, have declared their intention and purpose to adhere at all hazards to the policy which we have maintained ever since the close of the war there will be no desire on the part of anyone to require that all obligations shall stipulate for payments in gold coin. Creditors will say, "The policy of the Government of the United States is unalterable; and so long as the Government maintains that policy every dollar of paper and every dollar of silver will be worth as much as a gold dollar, and payments in either will be the equivalent of the other." This is why I believe this measure to be for the benefit of the people; this is why I believe it to be for the benefit of every borrower in the markets of this or foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, if there has been any one principle cardinal with the Democratic party, it has been the maintenance of the credit of the Government and the payment of its obligations in the best character of money on the face of the earth. Why, sir, the charges, the insinuations, the denunciations that are now hurled at the President have been hurled at former Democratic Administrations for maintaining Democratic principles in the midst of adversity.

When Jackson issued the specie circular, and when his successor, Mr. Van Buren, adhered to it in spite of the numerous assaults that were made upon him by the representatives of the banks and the politicians, he stood as firm as the rock-bound coast against which the waves may dash but rebound to be broken asunder upon the ocean's bosom, and reestablished the finances of the Government upon a sound basis, and restored confidence among the people. In my judgment the present Administration will not be deterred by the brutal assaults that have been made upon its policy from adhering to this cardinal principle of the Democratic faith and preserving the credit of the nation free from suspicion. For this patriotic effort it will receive the commendation of all patriotic citizens and the support of the great body of the American people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] now has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the later discussion of this resolution has cleared the atmosphere of a great deal of fog which was thrown around it earlier in the debate, and has presented to the House the single issue which I tried to present when I opened this discussion. That issue is simply this: A contract has been made which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, had to be made; it has been made on terms which he, on whom rested the responsibility, declares to have been the very best terms possible to secure under existing conditions. The terms are undoubtedly hard terms, but we can not dictate them.

It is within the knowledge, certainly, of every member of the Committee on Ways and Means that the Secretary of the Treasury made efforts in many directions to secure better terms before entering into the agreement. But conceding, as we all must, that a new loan in this country for the purpose of getting gold would have been futile, would have been taken up with our own gold, the only way to prevent such a thing and to keep gold in the Treasury—to prevent the continuance of the drain of gold from the Treasury and the export of gold from the country—was the step which has been taken by the Secretary, a step which he was obliged to take, just as Mr. SHERMAN was obliged to do in preparing for the resumption of specie payments prior to 1879; that is to say, he had to negotiate for gold in the countries which are now drawing gold from us by exportation.

The proposition before the House is, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says, exactly what Secretary Sherman had confronting him. If I had time I could read the language of Secretary Sherman's report, in which he says, pending the subscriptions for the bonds, that he had officially addressed a letter to the contracting parties in which he said that as the Government exacted gold from them it was not probable that the Government, either by legislation or by administration, would ever attempt to pay them in anything else than what it got; and he said, and truly, that such an agreement was the only one consistent with the honor and integrity of the Government.

Now, we have already purchased, under a contract which is perhaps a hard contract, but the very best that could be made, in the markets where we were obliged to make it, three and one-half million ounces of gold. The contract has been signed by the Secretary. The question, then, for the House to determine is, will you give authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise the option which the contract allows and bring that down to a contract which will save the taxpayers a half million of dollars a year?

How may this be done? Simply by writing into that obligation that we are going to do just what has always been done and what every man here knows we will do, and that is, pay in gold.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is objected by some gentlemen that the proviso to the joint resolution is going to contract the currency; and members have come to me on the floor of the House and stated that they were unable to vote for the resolution because of the proviso. But what is it? Simply this, that no part of the proceeds of the sale of such bonds nor of the notes redeemed with such proceeds shall be available for the payment of the current expenses of the Government.

That is to say, that no part of the notes that are redeemed by the proceeds of these bonds shall be again used. For what? Why, for the current expenses of the Government. We want it to be distinctly understood that we are not borrowing money to run the Government; we have abundant money to run the Government. Does anybody want the gold to be taken from the Treasury for this purpose when we get it? And as the greenback goes in and takes out gold is there any contraction of the currency? Every dollar of greenbacks that goes into the Treasury takes a dollar of gold out.

Mr. BLAND. But is not the gold already out?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. We want to get the gold in so that it will not go out. But suppose the greenback takes the place of the gold. The only difference will be that the gold is circulating in the country, and there is not the contraction of a dollar, because, I repeat, for every dollar that goes in a dollar goes out.

But there are other purposes than running the Government for which the greenbacks could be used if exchanged for gold. They can be exchanged under the existing law for national-bank notes, and gotten into channels of circulation in that way. But if the credit of the Government is restored, as we hope it will be restored, then there is no danger of the greenbacks going into the Treasury for gold. Gold is money to be hoarded; the greenback is money to be used; and if there is a demand for currency in the country, people will take gold to the Treasury and get the workable money out with it.

Mr. BLAND. But if you redeem the national-bank notes with the greenbacks do not you retire the national-bank notes and to that extent retire from circulation or contract the circulation just that much?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Not at all; because for every dollar of national-bank notes that is redeemed or retired another dollar takes its place.

Mr. BLAND. Then you are not expanding the currency?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. The national-bank notes can be used for any purposes the Government chooses to use them for.

Mr. Speaker, this is a point I want to impress on members of this House, that for the greenbacks in the Treasury there will always be a demand whenever more money is needed in the country. That was the experience under the resumption law. Men brought gold to the Treasury and exchanged it for greenbacks. Men brought gold to the Treasury and exchanged it for silver certificates. Why? Because in the form of paper currency it was the more convenient circulating medium; and nobody wants much gold for circulating medium.

Establish the fact, as we hope it will be established, that the Treasury is going to be as solvent for purposes of redemption as it ever was and you will find men bringing gold voluntarily to get the better business currency in the place of it, and the greenbacks in the Treasury, if they get there, can be used for the purchase of gold.

Mr. HARRISON. As a matter of fact, will not the currency be increased to the extent of the gold brought from abroad?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Certainly; and as a matter of fact, as my friend says, for every dollar of gold brought from abroad there will be an increase in the currency of the country.

Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky. Will the gentleman explain how that will be?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Because it will bring gold from outside the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, in conclusion, the Secretary of the Treasury needs no defense as to his integrity from any man who ever served in this House with him. However men may differ with Mr. Carlisle as a financier—and I believe he has confronted the most difficult conditions that any financier ever had to confront in his Department—no man will so degrade himself as to intimate anything derogatory to the integrity of John G. Carlisle. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Under the order adopted by the House, the previous question is now ordered upon the resolution to its final passage, and the question first is upon the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. BLAND. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. TRACEY and Mr. HARTMAN.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution will, when their names are called, say "aye," those opposed "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 167, answered "present" 2, not voting 60; as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, excused on account of the severe illness of a member of his family. If present he would vote "nay."

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BRANCH. If he were present he would vote "nay." I would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCALL. If he were present I would vote "nay."

Mr. PENCE. I ask that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] be excused on account of sickness. If present he would vote "nay."

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. BOUTELLE, is detained at home by sickness.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused on account of sickness of a member of his family. If present he would vote "nay."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already been excused.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, Mr. COCKRAN, is detained from the House by the illness of his wife, and I am paired with him. I therefore desire to withdraw my vote. I also desire to ask that my colleague, Mr. CULBERSON, be excused from attendance on the House on account of sickness of his wife.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HARTER, has answered to his name?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. KILGORE. I am paired with him.

Several MEMBERS. How would you vote?

Mr. KILGORE. I never hide my light under a blue button. [Laughter.]

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. OUTHWAITE, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that my colleague, Mr. WHITE, be excused on account of sickness. If he were present he would vote against the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CABANISS, is necessarily absent. He is paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MOON. He desired me to say that if he were present he would vote for this resolution; Mr. MOON would vote against it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BOWER, is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "nay."

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ABBOTT with Mr. WEVER.

Mr. CABANISS with Mr. MOON.

Mr. WOODARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. BAILEY, on financial matters.

For this day:

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. SIPE with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. MAGNER with Mr. HICKS.

Mr. McDANNOLD with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. McALEER with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. SOMERS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. JONES with Mr. McCALL.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. COUSINS.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. COOPER of Texas with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. McETRICK with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. BURNS with Mr. BELDEN.

On this question:

Mr. DUNPHY with Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. NEWLANDS.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. HARTER.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. BRANCH.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. MILLIKEN.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that my train was late. If present I should have voted "yea."

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I understood that my colleague, Mr. WOODARD, was recorded as voting in the affirmative. He is absent and paired against the measure, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. He is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. CRAWFORD. He is away and paired against the resolution, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. His name will be stricken off the list of those voting. On this question the yeas are 120, the nays 107, present and not voting 2. [Loud applause.] The nays have it, and the House refuses to order the joint resolution to a third reading. The joint resolution is lost.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the joint resolution to a third reading; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the latter motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. McLAURIN obtained leave of absence, on account of sickness in his family.

CHANGE OF CONFEREE.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was excused from further service on the conference on the bill (H. R. 6885), and Mr. TAWNEY was appointed in his stead.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. RYAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (S. 2511) with amendments granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeny. (Report No. 1833.)

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, from the same committee:

A bill (H. R. 7264) granting a pension to Michael Costello. (Report No. 1834.)

A bill (S. 2275) granting a pension to Elizabeth New, widow of Jethrow New. (Report No. 1835.)

By Mr. LACEY, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 7430) granting an increase of pension to Gilman Williams. (Report No. 1837.)

By Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Claims: A bill (H. R. 4339) for the relief of Emile W. Blum, late commissioner to the Barcelona Exposition. (Report No. 1838.)

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely the bill (S. 2591) to pension Martha Allen; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1836), was ordered to be printed, and indefinitely postponed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8861) for the relief of Dobson Johnson, of Dekalb County, Tenn., and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McDEARMON: A bill (H. R. 8873) authorizing the Dyersburg and Mississippi River Railway and Improvement Company to bridge the Obion River in the State of Tennessee—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DUNPHY: A bill (H. R. 8874) to provide free alcohol for use in arts and manufactures—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SICKLES: A bill (H. R. 8878) for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of certain Pennsylvania military organizations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 8875) to place the name of Mary V. Hennessy, widow of Col. John A. Hennessy, Fifty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 8876) correcting the military record of Daniel Leclear—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8877) granting a pension to Martin V. Shears—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: Petition of Keen & De Long and 15 other printing houses of Chicago, against the printing of any except postage-stamped envelopes by the Government—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of the Shipmasters' Association of the Great Lakes, asking for the establishment of hydrographic offices at the principal lake ports—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Shipmasters' Association of the Great Lakes, calling for certain legislation affecting masters of sailing and steam vessels upon the lakes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: Petition of citizens of Spencer, Gunnison County, Colo., protesting against any further suspension of assessment work on mining claims—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, petition signed by 50 inmates of Soldiers' Home at Monte Vista, Colo., protesting against removal of Home to St. Lyon, Colo.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of 90 citizens of Colorado Springs, relative to right of franchise for aliens—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 15, 1895.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant calling for information relating to the establishment and maintenance of the military post of Fort Totten, upon the Cut Head Sioux Indian Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, with inclosures, giving a history of the post; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, calling for the report of the engineer, dated on or about February 8, 1893, in regard to the railroad bridge over the Sakonnet River, Rhode Island, and what action, if any, has been taken thereon by the Department, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with a report made by Capt. W. H. Bixby, Corps of Engineers, upon the subject, and also copies of other papers of various dates showing the action of the Department thereon; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th ultimo, certain information as to the number of post-offices in the State of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the 15th ultimo, calling for information as to the number of gallons of whisky, high wines, alcohol, and proof spirits taken out of bond each day for the sixty days prior to the 28th day of August, A. D. 1894, etc., transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; which, on motion of Mr. GORMAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Treasurer of the United States recommending that in the appropriation for "Salaries, office of the Treasurer of the United States (national currency, to be reimbursed by national banks)," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, there be provided, in lieu of one principal bookkeeper at $2,500, two clerks of class one, $2,400; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, certain information concerning all examinations and tests that have been made within twelve months past of coals taken from any coal mines in the United States, showing the constituents of such coals, their value for steaming purposes, etc.; which, on motion of Mr. PLATT, was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company was read twice by its title.

Mr. HILL. I desire the bill to lie on the table for the present. The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. HALE. What is the bill concerning which the Senator from New York made the request?

Mr. HILL. It is the bill relating to the Suburban Railway Company of this city.

Mr. HALE. The House bill?

Mr. HILL. It is the House bill.

Mr. HALE. Then, of course, it should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Senator, I take it, does not intend to ask any action upon it until the Senate committee which has jurisdiction of those subjects considers the bill.

Mr. HILL. I should regret to make that promise. If the Senator will indulge me a moment I will state that a bill of precisely a similar character to the one which has passed the other House has been before the Senate District of Columbia Committee for eight months. Since December last I have been endeavoring to get a report from the committee and have been unsuccessful. The bill has been considered in committee and it is being considered there now. I am advised that this morning, in the committee, it stood 5 to 5. There is no reason why this bill, which has now passed the House of Representatives and which is precisely like the Senate bill, should go to the committee. A meeting of the committee is to be held on Monday next, I believe, when this subject will be again brought up. I can see no reason why this bill should not now remain in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry that in any instance of the very many where the Senate is being constantly raided in the direction of the desires of street-railway corporations to get possession of the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia the Senator from New York is giving his great force and influence in aid of these projects. He has given what to me seems the best of reasons why the bill should be referred to the committee. The only reason he has given why it should not be referred is because the committee in its deliberations has found itself to be tied, the vote being equal one way and the other; in other words, that the committee declines to report the bill to the Senate. That is a very good reason why the bill should be sent to the committee for its deliberation and action; and if that committee, which is our chosen organ, does not report the bill to the Senate, then we can act as we choose after the committee has had an opportunity to deal with it.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Maine has seen fit to suggest any undue anxiety upon my part to obtain control of any of the streets of the District of Columbia for this or any other particular street railroad. I have been engaged, sir, in no such strife. Some friends of mine from New York having some interest in the bill suggested to me that they would like to have a report upon the bill.

Mr. HALE. How can they get a report upon it unless we send it to the committee?

Mr. HILL. In a moment. I am referring to the bill that has been before the committee for eight months, and action upon which has been promised me repeatedly since the 1st day of December last.

Mr. HALE. But if a majority of the committee is not in favor of the bill, how does the Senator expect that he can get favorable action upon it?

Mr. HILL. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. HALE. He is seeking to down the committee.

Mr. HILL. I am not; but this bill must be treated the same as other bills.

Mr. HALE. That is what I want to have done.

Mr. HILL. Therefore, I simply suggested that I had repeatedly urged the committee to report the bill in some way or other that it might have the consideration it deserved in the Senate, and if the Senate does not see fit to pass the bill that ends it. But I did object, and I do object now, to doing by indirection what can not be done directly; and I submit that fair treatment requires that the bill should be reported in some form to the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, a bill—

Mr. HALE. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HILL. The motion is debatable.

Mr. HALE. Only in a very narrow line.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from Maine and the Senator from New York will permit me, I think that perhaps I can make a suggestion which will avoid all further discussion in regard to the matter at the present time. There is to be a meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia at 2 o'clock on Monday. I would suggest, if there be no objection to the course proposed by the Senator from New York at this time, that the bill lie on the table, with the understanding that no further action be taken until after the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to that course, provided it is understood that the bill shall not be called up until after the committee has had its meeting. I can not be here at all times, because I am engaged on other committees.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Maine permit an interruption?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think there should be a word said further than that which was said by the Senator from West Virginia. There has been not a reflection but a direct statement by the Senator from New York that the Committee on the District of Columbia has been derelict in its duty, and for eight months had custody of a bill and failed to act upon it. There is in the Senate, so far as I know, no such hard-worked, patient, and conscientious committee as the Committee on the District of Columbia. There is in connection with that committee a subcommittee of three having direct charge of the chartering and extensions of charters of District street-railway lines. That subcommittee brings to its work consideration and industry and care greater than that which most men exercise over their own affairs. I speak with greater freedom of it because I am not a member of the subcommittee, and in the District of Columbia Committee I am probably the least industrious of any member. I know that that committee has painstakingly and carefully and conscientiously considered every bill that came before it.

Some eight months ago or so it is true the bill to which the Senator from New York refers was sent to the committee. At that time the tariff measures were under discussion, and I am told the members of no committee could be got together to consider bills. There were 28 bills relating to street railroads pending before that subcommittee. In December, after Congress met, some members of the committee felt it desirable to go back to their own States in matters pertaining to the election of Senators. Since their return this particular bill has been taken up and considered with the utmost care. The merits of the bill, in the opinion of many people, are of but the slightest character. The reason why the bill has not been reported long ago has been largely a disinclination to offend the Senator from New York and others, because I understand the Senator from New York has had a perfectly proper but an unusual interest in the consideration of the bill, and he addressed the committee, I think, in writing on the subject.

The committee has given the bill all possible consideration. There has been a desire to deal with it with the utmost liberality of purpose. It has been considered most carefully and most intelligently. The Senator from New York will be gratified with a report upon the bill sooner or later. He says himself that a bill exactly similar is now before the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia for consideration, and he asks that a bill which has passed the other House, exactly like the one which the District Committee is now considering, shall be left upon the table to be considered by the Senate without first going to the District Committee. I can imagine no greater or more unwarranted rebuke to the Committee on the District of Columbia than would be exercised by such a vote if carried.

Mr. HALE. A great many matters are pressing in the morning and I do not wish to occupy any more time. The suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia and in addition the very pertinent remarks made by the Senator from Colorado show the situation. I am willing to consent that the bill for the present shall lie upon the table, with the understanding that it shall not be called up or attempted to be called up until after the Committee on the District of Columbia has had the opportunity of a meeting for a report upon the bill before it. I will reserve the right, if I think it is the proper thing, to move then to refer it, but for the present I will not insist upon my motion.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to the request made by the Senator from West Virginia. I have no idea in the world that on Monday next the measure will be specially taken up by the committee. The time of the committee is to be devoted to another matter. I think it perfectly fair and open to say that I do not think the situation of the Senator from New York will be bettered or changed or altered in the slightest degree by the meeting of the committee which is to be held on Monday, and I shall object to any unanimous agreement which would necessarily bind the committee to some specific action on Monday next.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President—

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from New York will permit me, I was perfectly justified in making the statement I did on the remark of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] in the committee in reference to action next Monday and the instructions to the subcommittee under a resolution adopted by the committee this morning. It will be perfectly within the jurisdiction of the committee to consider at its meeting next Monday that or any of the bills that came over from the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will understand that I did not mean it was not within the jurisdiction of the committee. I meant that as a matter of fact the bill will not be considered at that time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask that the request of the Senator from New York be complied with, and that the bill lie on the table until next Monday. After the next meeting the Senator from Maine can move to refer. That will allow one more meeting of the committee to act upon the measure.

Mr. HALE. Then let the bill go to the table with my motion to refer pending, with the understanding that nothing will be attempted about it until after Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STRIKING OF JURIES IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 8724) to provide for the striking of juries in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg to say that there is a Senate bill on the Calendar, No. 952 in the Order of Business, in the exact words of the bill passed by the House of Representatives, and that that bill has been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee, through the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. I ask, instead of the House bill being referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that it may be now considered, and put upon its passage.

Mr. PLATT. I think that bill ought to be passed. It is a bill which has come from the House of Representatives, and a similar bill has been very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and unanimously reported. There is reason for speedy action upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. What is the bill?

Mr. PLATT. I will state to the Senator that the bill provides for struck juries in the District of Columbia under certain circumstances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

SURVEYOR OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. HANSBROUGH were appointed.

WOMEN TRUSTEES IN DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public-school trustees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MARTIN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. HOAR were appointed.

MRS. EVALYN N. VAN VLIET.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 684) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2521) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1813) providing an additional circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit; and

A bill (S. 2595) to establish a life-saving station at or near City Point, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 116) for the erection of a public building at Brockton, Mass.;

A bill (H. R. 863) granting a pension to Pauline M. Pooler;

A bill (H. R. 2051) to grant a pension to Eunice Putman;

A bill (H. R. 3988) granting a pension to Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.;

A bill (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Richard R. Knight;

A bill (H. R. 5642) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brower, a hospital nurse during the war of the rebellion;

A bill (H. R. 6076) to repeal the special act granting a pension to Louisa M. Sippell;

A bill (H. R. 6131) granting a pension to Sarah E. Roebuck;

A bill (H. R. 6433) granting an increase of pension to Julia Weeks;

A bill (H. R. 6868) for the relief of Catherine Ott, widow of Joseph Ott;

A bill (H. R. 6974) to pension Mrs. Mary L. Clark;

A bill (H. R. 6985) granting a pension to William Armstrong;

A bill (H. R. 7359) to pension Samuel F. Tenant; and

A bill (H. R. 7602) to pension Mary R. Williams.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of S. G. Martin Lodge, No. 169, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Newark, Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 5603, to ameliorate the condition of American seamen; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 45 citizens of Fremont, Ohio, and a petition of 60 citizens of Melmore, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PEPPER. I present three petitions, which are on the blanks sent out by the Dry Goods Economist, of New York City. The petitions contain the following passage:

Recent developments have strongly impressed upon us the necessity of a national bankruptcy system which shall insure a fair division of the assets of a bankrupt among his creditors and a discharge from further liabilities of all honest debtors.

There is another paragraph of a somewhat similar character. Then the petitions pray for Congressional legislation by way of the passage of the bankruptcy bill which is now pending before the Senate.

The first petition is signed by Maxwell & McClure, wholesale notion dealers of Wichita, in the State of Kansas; the second is signed by the Harris-Emery Company, of Des Moines, Iowa, and the third by Steele & Co., of Keokuk, Iowa. These are responsible firms who do a large business in the localities indicated.

I move that the petitions lie on the table, as the bill to which they refer is now pending before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF MILK IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the memorial from the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, with reference to the bill (H. R. 8231) to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, now on the Calendar be reprinted with the additions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2754) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Oakland, in the State of California, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2750) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5711) to authorize the adoption of children in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. WHITE on the 11th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report with amendments an amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to the Indian appropriation bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana particularly to it, as his amendment is materially amended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1251) to accept, ratify, and confirm certain agreements heretofore concluded with certain Indians, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 909) for the relief of Thomas Antisell, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8122) to further amend section 9 of the act for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico, passed March 2, 1899, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6430) granting increase of pension to Jesse C. Pinney, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1581) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2541) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells in the arid districts of South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSOM, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PASCO on the 12th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVENUE LAW.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8310) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which took effect the 28th day of August, 1894, to report it without amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to enter a motion to recommit with instructions the bill just reported from the Committee on Finance. I ask that the motion to recommit may go upon the Calendar with the bill, and that the motion to recommit with instructions may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 8310, together with the bill H. R. 7971, now on the Senate Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back said bill H. R. 7971, being a bill "to exempt from duty sugars, molasses, etc.," to the Senate favorably with amendments, as follows:

First. To reenact the reciprocity provisions contained in the third section of the tariff act of October 3, 1890.

Second. To provide for the payment of a bounty to the domestic producers of sugar in accordance with the terms of said tariff act of October 3, 1890.

Third. To provide for any deficiencies in the revenue that may arise from the removal of all duties upon sugar or from any other cause by the imposition of a customs duty upon wool and by increasing the customs duties or the internal-revenue taxes upon articles of luxury.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to know whether the bill as reported by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the committee is reported with an amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. It is not amended. It is reported without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the motion and instructions submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island should be printed in connection with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered, and will be placed on the Calendar with the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the instructions offered by the Senator from Rhode Island be printed in the ordinary way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

COAST FISHERIES OF FLORIDA.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PASCO on the 13th instant, reported it without amendment; and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Fisheries is hereby directed to make inquiry in reference to the extent, methods, and present condition of the coast fisheries of Florida, more particularly the sponge and oyster fisheries, and to report as to the desirability of establishing a station for investigation, experiment, and fish culture at some suitable point on the coast.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2763) granting an increase of pension to Caroline B. Bradford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2764) to amend the charter of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, it was Ordered, That petition introduced in the first session Fiftieth Congress to indemnify John George Ryan be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Ordered, That the petition introduced in the third session Fifty-third Congress to increase the salary of the fire department of the city of Washington be withdrawn from the Committee on Appropriations, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] very kindly consents that I shall proceed with my remarks now before the disposition of the Post-Office appropriation bill, and, if agreeable to the Senate, I shall be very glad to do so. I therefore call up the resolution which I offered the other day in regard to the consideration of what is known as the pooling bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Carolina that the morning business has not yet been concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I am trying to get the resolution up, Mr. President, and then, if any Senator desires to present morning business, I shall be very glad to yield to him for that purpose. However, I shall accommodate myself to the wishes of the Senate in that respect.

INDIAN DEPREDAATION CLAIMS.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be requested to transmit to the Senate of the United States a list of all judgments which have been rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases since the adjournment of the first session of the present Congress against which no motions for new trial have been filed or appeal taken and which have not been appropriated for.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I inquire of the Senator from Idaho whether the cases decided prior to the time fixed in this resolution have been sent in?

Mr. DUBOIS. They have been sent in. I have inquired as to that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is requested to furnish the Senate with a statement of the number of acres of land now owned by the Union and Central Pacific railroads which are a part of the lands granted to said railroads by the United States.

Also, the number of acres of said grant not patented to said railroad companies; also, any information he may have in relation to the sale of any of the granted lands before they were patented to said companies, the date of such sale, the number of acres.

Also, the number of acres patented to said companies during the year 1894; also the number of acres embraced in any list now on file by said companies for which patents are asked.

CONDEMNED CANNON TO GRAND ARMY POSTS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 209) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned cannon to Asher Gaylord Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Plymouth, Pa., and to Eckley B. Cox Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Freeland, Pa., to report it with amendments. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I shall be compelled to object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I will state to the Senator from South Carolina that the consideration of the joint resolution will only take a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. On that statement I withdraw my objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 7, after the words "cannon balls," to insert "to the William H. Tarbee Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of McGrawville, N. Y., four light pieces of condemned cast-iron cannon and twenty balls."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 9, after the words "cannon balls," to insert, "also to the R. Carpenter Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Chelsea, Mich., two condemned cast-iron cannon and twenty cannon balls."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 128) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 655) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia and to regulate the proceedings before them;

A bill (H. R. 27) to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Paterson, N. J.;

A bill (H. R. 155) to erect a public building at Pottsville, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 4658) granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea and repealing an act approved March 3, 1871;

A bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 5740) incorporating the Society of American Florists;

A bill (H. R. 7731) for the relief of certain Winnebago Indians in Minnesota; and

A bill (H. R. 8486) to relieve Abraham D. Prince.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE M. C. LISLE.

The message also communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House on the death of Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions just received from the House of Representatives may lie on the table. I give notice that at an early day I shall call up the resolutions and ask their consideration by the Senate, that proper tribute of respect may be paid to the memory of my deceased colleague in the other House from the State of Kentucky.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

OFFICERS ON RECEIVING AND TRAINING SHIPS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer a resolution for immediate consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall have to object to it. I have yielded now a half dozen times. The Senator can offer the resolution after I have concluded my remarks. I am sorry, but I must object.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, has morning business been declared closed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been declared closed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask to have the resolution received.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate whether or not during the last four years officers of the Navy attached to the ships Richmond and Constellation, stationed at Newport, R. I., and drawing sea pay and commutation for rations at sea, have been furnished and assigned, and have occupied quarters for themselves or their families, or for both, on shore in public buildings or elsewhere, at the expense of the Government, and if so, to state the nature and extent to which this practice has prevailed, and whether or not it is in accordance with any authority of law.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the resolution goes over under the rule.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. BUTLER. I now call up the resolution heretofore submitted by me, and upon which I desire to address the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate, and it will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That when the two pending appropriation bills, the diplomatic and consular and Post-Office bills, have been disposed of, the Senate will take up House bill 7273, being an act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and consider the same until disposed of.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, before proceeding to explain in detail the provisions of House bill 7273 I desire to correct, if I can—

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator from South Carolina in order in discussing a resolution which he has introduced and which has not yet come before the Senate? It is now 1 o'clock, and my impression is it is not in order, but that the appropriation bill which it has been announced will be considered is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from California is laboring under a misapprehension. I have simply offered a resolution, and I now propose to speak to it. I think I am entirely in order. If I am not—

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to make an inquiry before he proceeds? There will be no attempt to obtain a vote upon the resolution to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not prepared to say when the Senate will vote upon it.

Mr. ALLEN. There will be no effort on the part of the Senator to bring it before the Senate for a vote?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that I shall have an opportunity to ask for a vote to-day.

Mr. PLATT. The resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina some days ago is now before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. It has been called up.

Mr. PLATT. It has been called up, and is now before the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit that the resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina is before the Senate only by unanimous consent for the purpose of enabling the Senator from South Carolina to submit some remarks which he wants to make. That was the request made by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the exact status.

Mr. PLATT. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. For that purpose only.

Mr. BUTLER. For the purpose of enabling me to address the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. That is in accordance with the custom of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I have never known an instance where such a request was refused.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand that in addition the Senator from South Carolina, after the conclusion of his remarks, is to follow with a request for a vote upon the resolution?

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the contrary, as soon as the Senator from South Carolina shall have finished his remarks it is my purpose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it the intention of the Senator from South Carolina that we shall proceed to consider the resolution after he is through?

Mr. BUTLER. Let me state to the Senator from Colorado the agreement which the Senator from Kentucky and I had. I requested him to allow the appropriation bill to be laid aside informally in order that I might call up the resolution for the purpose of submitting some remarks on the subject. That I believe has been done—

Mr. PLATT. Always.

Mr. BUTLER. From time immemorial in this body.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have never known it to be refused.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course when I shall have concluded my remarks the Senator from Kentucky will call up the appropriation bill; and I presume the Senate will consider that bill until it is disposed of to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is it.

Mr. BUTLER. Then what action the Senate may take in regard to the resolution—

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say that the Senator from South Carolina proposes to proceed strictly in accordance with the customs of the Senate. I will also state that if there is an attempt to pass the resolution there will be further debate upon it, so that there is no danger that the resolution will be adopted to-day.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There will be no further debate on the subject to-day.

Mr. BATE. Furthermore, I understand the bankruptcy bill is the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bankruptcy bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who has it in charge, is not now present.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Mississippi and I had an understanding. I have not the slightest intention to displace the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. BATE. All right.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, before proceeding to explain in detail the provisions of House bill 7273 I desire to correct, if I can, some misapprehensions which appear to exist as to its effect on what is known as the antipooling section of the act of 1887 (section 5). It is assumed in some quarters that the bill proposes to repeal that section, whereas it reenacts it in terms, although in a modified form, as I will show when I come to consider the bill by sections. I think there is also misconception of what pooling is. An impression prevails that when two or more railroad companies agree to pool, they embrace within the terms of that agreement the rates of freight and passenger traffic that each shall charge under the pooling contract.

A pooling contract has no reference to rates. It is simply an agreement to apportion to each party to the contract a certain percentage of tonnage, or the earnings therefrom, transported over the respective lines between given points, and in case one line exceeds its percentage, it must account in gross or net earnings, as may be agreed upon, to the other parties to the agreement.

Rates are made entirely independent of the pooling contract, and it is the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to see to it that they are just and reasonable. In fact, the law of the land requires that they shall be reasonable, and this was the law before the Commission came into existence.

Another very grave misconception prevails as to the effect of the bill on the transportation lines of this country that I would like to correct. This misconception finds expression in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the remarks he made in support of it, and I now beg leave to call attention to that amendment. It is as follows:

Preliminary to the filing of any such contracts the parties thereto shall present to the Commission schedules of their existing rates of fares and freights upon the classes of passengers and merchandise to which the contract is applicable, and if an order of disapproval shall not be made, the Commission shall certify in writing upon the contract that the existing rates of fares and freights are, upon the facts then appearing, just and reasonable. Every such contract shall be made for a fixed period of time, not exceeding four years, and shall become void at the expiration thereof, and the rates of fares and freights existing at the time of making such contract shall not in any case be raised during its existence without the prior approval of the Commission, certified in writing and filed with the contract.

In his speech on his amendment the Senator says:

The authority given by the foregoing paragraph is stupendous. Under such authority all the railroads of the country may pool all their gross or net earnings from all sources.

Referring to the modification proposed in the pending bill to section 5 of the act of 1887:

They may virtually unite or form one company or partnership with a capitalization, if equal to that existing June 30, 1893, of $10,506,235,419; the gross earnings of which were for the year then ending $1,230,751,874, and the net income, after paying fixed charges, was $111,058,034. They may agree to commit the management and disposition of this gross or net income to a managing board of ten, or seven, or three officers of the various roads. This board can be given authority and discretion to pay out for the purpose of controlling legislatures, State or national, or other public officials, or for any other purpose, such portions as they may see fit to use of the gross or net earnings of this gigantic partnership, and afterwards to divide the remainder of the net earnings among the various companies according to arbitrary fixed portions of 100 per cent of the whole.

After the partnership is formed the companies composing it may raise rates of fares and freights to any height they please, uncontrolled by national law, and may proceed to collect those rates from passengers and from shippers of freight.

Surely, the Senator has a very poor opinion of "the legislatures, National or State, or public officials," when he imputes to them such corrupt characters. How can the companies "raise the rates of fares and freight to any height they please" when the Commission under existing law can put its restraining hand upon them?

Again the Senator says:

Although the contract is to go into operation "and to become lawful and enforceable between the parties thereto" unless the Commission shall make an order of disapproval within twenty days from the filing of the contract in their office, yet here is plainly given to the country the promise that the Commission shall investigate the existing rates of fares and freights and shall find them to be reasonable. If it is not intended that the Commission shall make such investigation, then the promise is a fraud and a deception upon the people. But the Commission can not find the rates to be not unreasonable without affirmatively finding them to be reasonable. What objection, then, can there be to allowing the Commission to certify upon the contract that they are of the opinion that the rates are reasonable? No tenable objection can possibly be stated.

Moreover, if the finding of the Commission is that existing rates are not in fact unreasonable, but are indeed reasonable, why should not the public, against a general raising of rates, after the pooling contracts are made, be guarded by a provision of law that there shall be no raising of rates until the rate sheets making such increases of rates shall be submitted to the Commission, approved by the Commission, and filed with the contract? If the public are to be protected in the first instance against unreasonable rates under the pooling contracts by the finding of the Commission before the contract goes into effect that the rates are not unreasonable, but are in fact reasonable, why then should not the public also be afterwards further protected by requiring that any raising of rates before it goes into effect shall be approved by the Commission, certifying that the increased rates are not unreasonable, but are in fact reasonable? I believe that no negative answer can be found to this question consistent with the proper protection of the just rights of the people of the United States who use the 176,461 miles of railroad in the country.

It is true that the bill under consideration provides that after the pooling contracts have gone into effect the Interstate Commerce Commission shall observe the working, operation, and effect of such contracts, and may make orders terminating such contracts; but any such order is subject to review in the courts, and the private shipper or individual traveler upon the railroad must prosecute an investigation before the Commission and a law suit in the courts in order to secure redress for a grievance which he has already suffered. One individual must fight $11,000,000,000 of consolidated capital. To this mockery of control I do not believe the public should be forced to submit.

I make these full extracts from the Senator's remarks because they embrace about all that has been or can be said in opposition to the bill, and that I may expose the fallacies of his argument, and point out how extravagant they are and how little they comport with well-established and admitted facts. And first as to the necessity of requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon and approve affirmatively the rates of fare and freight before sanction is given to proposed cooperative or pooling contracts. I assert with absolute confidence that it would be utterly impossible for the Commission to execute such a provision of law. But before discussing that branch of the subject let me show that the requirement is wholly unnecessary.

The Commission has the rates and fares now on file under the present law. There is no present public contention that they are unreasonable except in perhaps two or three instances now pending before the Interstate Commission.

The amendment requires the Commission to judge of pooled rates before they are complained of by the shippers. It only permits them to consider the reasonableness of nonpooled rates after they have been complained of. The larger part of the business of the country will be local and not pooled.

There will therefore be two procedures under the same law and the result will be discriminating legislation.

So much to show that the requirement is unnecessary. The Commission has under existing law ample power over the matter of rates. But admit for the sake of argument it has not, the question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of rates is a question of fact to be determined by the courts outside of and independent of any power Congress may confer upon the Commission. This proposition is too well established to require further remark.

Now, a word to show how impossible it would be for the Commission to execute the law if the amendment should be adopted; and in passing let me remark, the Commission itself, as I am informed, does not desire to be clothed with such power, for the very obvious reason it prefers to be left free to terminate the contracts if after observing their operation they should be found prejudicial to the public interests.

In this connection I feel at liberty to read a dispatch which I received from one of the Commissioners while this matter was under consideration by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, he happening at that time to be at Milwaukee, Wis.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., January 23, 1895.

To Senate Committee Interstate Commerce:

Am strongly opposed to changes in bill amending act to regulate commerce; especially object to amendments which would make Commission a party to pooling contracts by permitting them to make conditions relating to rates and requiring them to formally approve such contracts before they take effect. Sincerely trust that this important and needful measure may not be imperiled by amendment which I deem unwise and undesirable.

MARTIN A. KNAPP.

The examination of freight rates and passenger fares to determine reasonableness is impracticable by reason of the number of such rates, and will be unintelligent and inconclusive because of lack of railway experience in the Commission. It will be impossible to determine within twenty days, considering the extent of the country. It will be impossible to determine them justly without consulting expert testimony, as would a court, and understanding the circumstances and conditions which decided them. It is impracticable because of their number. Let me reinforce this statement by a few practical illustrations which may be relied on for accuracy:

Assuming that only Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Toledo, Peoria, Louisville, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, and St. Louis were pooled eastward (10 points in all), and that freight rates were given from Chicago to but 3,000 points (the actual number being greater), there would be 30,000. Assuming six classes in each tariff, 180,000 rates would be involved. Assuming that the freights passing through Chicago and each of the other points came from 2,000 places beyond them to the Pacific Coast (the number is greater), there would be 120,000 more rates, or 300,000 in all.

It will be noticed from the foregoing that, taking 10 pooling points, by way of example, the Commission would have to pass upon 300,000 rates relating to only 10 points before it could determine whether they were reasonable or unreasonable. I say, therefore, it would be an utter impossibility for the Commission to comply with the requirement of the amendment. Certainly they could not in twenty days.

I am told that the railroads have sought to adjust rates between opposing points—say Toledo to Chicago—as compared with Cincinnati to St. Louis. In such adjustments the amendment may require whole argument made before the Commission. Fifty committees of the Central Traffic Association have worked on this subject for twenty months. The amendment proposes that five shall determine this subject and all others like it all over the United States in twenty days.

I might multiply examples like these to sustain my contention; but what I have said will, I am sure, satisfy the minds of Senators that I am not mistaken.

Coming to another phase of the argument of the Senator from New Hampshire, I find his speech blazoned with these remarkable headlines:

RAILROAD POOLING.

AN $11,000,000,000 RAILROAD PARTNERSHIP—ALL RAILWAY COMPETITION ABOLISHED BY ACT OF CONGRESS—RATES OF FARES AND FREIGHTS ON 176,461 MILES OF ROAD AND THE WAGES OF 873,693 WORKMEN TO BE FIXED BY THE PARTNERSHIP.

And then at the bottom of the same (front) page will be found the following:

These eight great railroads have decided that the bill shall pass the Senate exactly as it came from the House.

Now, sir, if I had found these startling announcements at the head of an article in some daily newspaper of the sensational order I should not have been surprised, but that they appear on the frontispiece of a carefully prepared speech of a Senator of the United States, and published presumably by his authority, is a little short of amazing, and reach very near to the domain of Munchausenism. Let us contrast these lurid headlines with a few simple facts.

According to Poor's Manual for 1894 there are 1,946 railway corporations in the United States.

The largest number of railway companies which pooled prior to the act of February, 1887, when they were free to do so, was as follows:

a. East of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio River .....	22
This has been reduced by consolidations to .....	19
(Six Atlantic coastwise steamship lines formerly pooled and are now free to do so.)
b. West of the Mississippi River and south of a line from Kansas City to Denver there were no former pools of any moment. All lines of that territory which would now pool would be not more than .....	15
c. West of Chicago and St. Louis and north of a line St. Louis to Denver ..	16
d. In the territory east of Chicago and St. Louis, and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers to the seaboard:
East of Buffalo and Pittsburg in that area .....	13
West of Buffalo and Pittsburg in that area .....	20
Total number which would probably pool .....	89

Or 4½ per cent of the whole number. Twenty of these 89 companies have not heretofore pooled. In other words, out of 1,946 railroad corporations, but 4½ per cent of the whole number would pool, or did pool.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator from South Carolina willing to be interrupted?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator says these are all the railroads which will pool. The point I made in the speech which he has pleased to characterize as teeming with Munchausenism is simply that authority to pool was given to all the railroads in the country. The Senator from South Carolina answers my statement by saying it has been estimated that only so many railroads will pool. Will the Senator from South Carolina tell us what reason he has for supposing that all the roads will not pool exactly as they are authorized to do by the language of the proposed act?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will be patient I think I shall convince him that all the railroads can not pool, and, of course, the statement I make is based upon the experience when, prior to 1887, pooling was not illegal. That is the guide by which I am governed in making this statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. The headlines to which the Senator has been pleased to allude, and which I am glad he has incorporated in his speech because they will get a much wider circulation than they otherwise would have reached, were merely a statement of the authority given by the bill to $11,000,000,000 of capital to consolidate in pooling contracts, if it chooses to do so. Now, the Senator says it will not do it. I want to know how he knows it will not.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from New Hampshire anticipates me. If the Senator can stand the circulation of those startling—as I call them lurid—headlines I certainly can.

Mr. CHANDLER. Through the medium of the Senator's speech is the only way I can get them into South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think they will be very creditable to the Senator even down there, if he will pardon me for saying so.

Assume that all the 1,946 companies would pool. Each must receive a percentage which would average about one-half of 1 per cent to each company. How are the New York Central and the Carbon Creek Railroad of Wyoming to determine their relative shares, and is pooling between them even a remote possibility? The bare mention of it makes the proposal preposterous—a railroad in New York pooling with a railroad in Wyoming, or a railroad in Maine pooling with a railroad in Texas. It would seem to me, as I said, to be little less than Munchausenism. Certainly it would be preposterous to assume any such absurdity.

These facts—not fancies—ought to dispose of that "eleven-billion-dollar-pool" bugaboo which the Senator disports so confidently in flaming headlines to his speech. And also of his less conspicuous but equally extravagant assertion "that these eight great railroads have decided that the bill shall pass the Senate exactly as it came from the House," meaning, I presume, the roads running to and from the city of New York.

I want to insert here, without reading in full, a statement furnished by Mr. George R. Blanchard, chairman of the Central Traffic Association and vice-chairman of the Trunk Line Association, which two cover 67 per cent of the tonnage of this country, who, I believe, is conceded to be one of the ablest, if not the ablest, expert on such questions in this country or Europe, every word of which he is prepared to verify from the records if called upon. To my mind the facts herein stated prove beyond dispute that the statements of the Senator from New Hampshire are very wide of the mark and entitled to no credit whatever.

Mr. Blanchard, in response to an inquiry from me, gave examples showing that out of over 700,000,000 tons of freight moved in 1893 but 40,000,000 would be pooled, and I take it for granted he knows better what he is talking about than either the Senator from New Hampshire or myself.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. It is not fair to presume that wherever there are two lines between which there is competition they will pool.

Mr. BUTLER. I will come to that question after a while. The Senator is anticipating me somewhat. I think I can convince the Senator that the competition of which he speaks will be promoted instead of injuriously interfered with. Mr. Blanchard says:

Poor's Manual for 1894 states the total tons of freight moved in 1893 on American lines was 757,464,460 tons.

Not over forty millions of this quantity would probably be pooled. For example, all the through freight of the Pennsylvania Railroad both ways does not average more than about 13 per cent of its total tonnage. This small proportion of the total which would be pooled is because although all lines from Chicago eastwardly may pool their freights from and through Chicago, they do not pool from their thousands of local stations east of Chicago which furnish by far the greater volumes of their tonnages.

It should also be borne in mind that even the largest companies only pool their traffic from the largest competing points where the great number of routes prevents such harmonious arrangements as can be secured from points at which there are only two or three competing lines.

It is the veriest assumption to say that a short local line in Maine will pool with one in California, that a line in Oregon will pool with a fruit carrier in Florida, or that a lumber route in Michigan will pool with a live stock line in Texas. There is not only no community of interests but geographical antagonisms, and they could not be induced to pool together.

It is an equal absurdity to assume that competing cities will pool: that is, that lines from Boston will pool with those from New York, that Philadelphia will pool with Norfolk, or Albany with Baltimore.

The lines from each important point may pool, but rival points having rival industries and geographical antagonisms will not pool.

Nor would the railroads from Chicago or other pooled point ever assume under any contingency to declare how much of their total pooled business should go to Baltimore as compared with New York, or Pittsburgh as compared with Buffalo, or New Haven versus Providence.

This illustration might be multiplied throughout 3,000 eastern destinations. If a pool is made from Chicago eastwardly, it will extend only to Buffalo, Toronto, Pittsburg, Wheeling, etc.

The reason for this is that certain companies west of those points have no common ownerships or interests east thereof, and vice versa.

The Lackawanna and Lehigh railway companies, for example, do not extend west of Buffalo.

The Chicago pool will nevertheless include all freights not only from Chicago City but from all points west thereof which pass through it, and also all such traffic which stop at Buffalo, etc., and that which passes through Buffalo, Pittsburg, etc.

If, therefore, a through rate is made on cotton from Dallas, Tex., to Lowell, Mass., or from Meridian, Miss., to Fall River, such tonnage would go into the pool eastwardly from Chicago.

What rate on such business shall the makers of the Chicago pool contract attach to such contract under the Chandler amendment? Will it be the through rates which they did not make or publish, or only the proportions of through rates which accrue between Chicago and Buffalo, etc.

Whose duty will it therefore be to report such through rates? Shall each company which shares such through rates report its part thereof which it may pool?

Suppose that the initial line which makes the rate is not in a pool because the business starts from its local stations. In such event who is to report the rates?

Some of the same freights may also go via routes which do not pool on any parts of such routes. May such lines not charge higher rates, or at least be freed from the prior judgment upon the reasonableness of their rates?

Apply these illustrations also to passenger tariffs.

The mover of the amendments should show how the fare for a ticket, for example, sold from San Francisco to New Haven is to be adjudged just and reasonable.

In what pool, or how many pools, would such fare or parts of fare be reported?

Would each pool report only its part of the through fare, or would each company in a pool report the full fare?

If a proportion, the different companies charge different proportions, varying with length of route, etc., would they all be reasonable?

If the originating line at San Francisco which published the through fare was not in a pool nor the terminating line at New Haven, would only the intermediate lines be required to report, and how could they be held for the reasonableness of the through rate, especially when the author of such rate was exempt?

All these queries apply not only to the rates and fares as fixed and submitted with the contracts, but more forcibly to any possible and subsequent increase thereof when they must be argued before the Commission.

That is a very intelligent criticism of the provisions of the bill, which any Senator can inform himself about if he chooses to take the time to do so.

It seems to me, Mr. President, I have disposed of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, and shown how impracticable it is, how inapplicable to the present bill, and how impossible of execution by the Commission, and shall now address myself to the provisions of the bill as it stands. I will remark in passing that this bill and the subjects relating to it have been under consideration for two years by the committee of the House. It had careful consideration and full debate in the House, and passed that body by a strong majority.

The committee of this body have given it most careful consideration, after long and patient hearings, and it came from your committee in its present form as the sense of a majority of that committee.

I may say, furthermore, it has the indorsement of a majority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, some of these gentlemen thinking, perhaps, it is not all that is to be desired, but all concurring in the opinion it is an improvement on the present law. I shall adopt the analysis of the bill made in the report of the House committee, as it is full and exhaustive and more satisfactory than any cursory explanation of mine.

The first section of the bill amends the fifth section of the act by reenacting the section substantially as it is in the act, and then providing that the inhibited contract may be made under the restrictions and limitations set out in the section. The contract must be in writing and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission for twenty days before it can go into effect. If it is not disapproved by the Commission it goes into effect twenty days after it is filed, but it is made the duty of the Commission to disapprove it, if it shall appear, on inspection, that it will result in unreasonable rates, unjust discrimination, inferior service to the public, or otherwise contravene the provisions of the act.

Should it go into effect, then the Commission, which is clothed with plenary power to examine and to investigate the operations under the contract, may, at any time, if it should appear to result in unjust discrimination, unreasonable rates, inadequate service to the public, or otherwise contravene the act, make an order disapproving the contract, and in that event the same shall terminate at the date named in the order, not less than thirty days from its entry. Should the contract be disapproved in the first instance within twenty days, it can never go into effect, unless the circuit court, on review, shall so decide, and not then until the Supreme Court of the United States shall so decide, should an appeal, as provided, be taken by any of the parties to the contract of last resort.

From an order disapproving the contract, made after it goes into effect, the parties thereto may file a petition in the circuit court for an order or decree reviewing the same, and from the decision of the circuit court an appeal lies in favor of any of the parties to the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the meantime, the contract is illegal and unenforceable until the court of last resort, in reviewing the decree of the circuit court and the order of the Commission, shall approve the same. The practical effect is to place the contract under the exclusive control of the Commission, subject to final review by the Supreme Court of the United States; and, unless that court should reverse the action of the Commission, and approve the contract, it can not exist a day longer than the Commission determines; and, while proceedings are pending in the courts, the action of the Commission has the effect to render the contract illegal and unenforceable, and the parties to it are relegated to section 5 of the act and must observe it.

The power thus conferred on the Commission is great, and can be wielded summarily in the interest of the public. The Commission has nothing to do with the contract as between the parties to it, and has no power to impair its obligation or efficiency. It can only act on behalf of the public and interpose where it appears that the contract is detrimental to the public interest. The Commission is authorized to act on its own motion and of its own volition, and on evidence elicited in any manner it sees proper. In view of this extraordinary power, it was deemed proper to give the parties to the contract the right to apply to the circuit court to review its action, subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the contract to remain, in the meantime, illegal and unenforceable. Should the parties to the contract apply to the circuit court to review the action of the Commission it must be made a party defendant, and the court must speedily determine the matter as a court of equity. Either party may appeal to the Supreme Court, and that court is required to advance the cause as in cases of appeal where the United States is a party.

Should the Commission choose not to disapprove the contract, it is clothed with power to issue an order requiring the parties thereto to change, modify, or correct such rates, charges, or practices as are deemed hurtful to the public; and if the parties to the contract refuse compliance, then the Commission may apply to any circuit court, within the jurisdiction of which any of the parties has its principal office, to enforce its order. The papers, exhibits, and testimony on which the Commission acted must be filed with the petition; and should the court, on the record thus presented, be of the opinion that the order of the Commission is lawful and proper, then it is authorized to issue a preliminary injunction compelling obedience to the order of the Commission to remain in force until the decision of the court upon the hearing.

In all other respects the litigation is to be conducted as prescribed in section 16 of the act to regulate commerce.

The second section of the bill amends the sixth section of the act by adding thereto four clauses, whereby copies of all schedules and tariffs of rates, fares, and charges filed with the Commission as required by law, all contracts, agreements, or arrangements between common carriers, filed with the Commission as provided in the first section of the bill, and all statistics, tables, and figures contained in the annual reports of carriers made to the Commission as required by the provisions of the act shall be preserved as public records in the custody of the Commission, and shall be receivable in evidence as prima facie correct for the purpose of all investigations made by the Commission, and in all judicial proceedings.

It is then provided that certified copies, under the seal of the Commission, of such public records, or certified copies of extracts therefrom, shall also be receivable in evidence in like manner as the originals. The importance of the addition to the act of these clauses will be apparent when it is stated that heretofore all these records were not public and not receivable in evidence in any judicial proceeding. They were merely information for the Commission, and when any matter of dispute arose between the Commission and the railroads it had to be determined on evidence taken after judicial proceedings were instituted.

The third section of the bill amends the tenth section so as to read as it is set out in the bill. It is a recast of the tenth section. The penal features of the act as it now stands are exceedingly imperfect, and are practically nugatory. The corporation which is subject to the provisions of the act is not punishable, but its officers and agents are liable to indictment, and if found guilty, to severe penalties in the way of fine and imprisonment. Shippers guilty of a violation of the law are placed in the same category with the officers and agents of the corporation. To illustrate, if an officer or agent of the corporation should allow a shipper a rebate or drawback each would be equally guilty under the law. The result is that neither can be made to testify because he might give criminating evidence. Under the latest decisions of the Federal courts either could claim exemption from testifying, even though promised immunity from punishment by the Government. The result is that prosecutions have signally failed for the want of evidence. Section 10, as redrafted in section 3 of the bill, is intended to obviate this fatal defect in the law.

There are two separate and distinct offenses which the bill attempts to reach, one committed by the consignor or consignee and the other by the corporation through its officers or agents. Wherever a shipper, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, false report of weight, false representation of the contents of a package, or by any other misrepresentation, deceit, or device, obtains transportation at less than regular rates, he is guilty of a fraud and liable to a fine for each offense not exceeding $5,000. It will be observed that such a fraud, while resulting in injury to the general public, is distinctively a fraud on the railroad company. The shipper is, therefore, alone made amenable, and no offense is attributed to the corporation, its officers or agents. The result is that its officers and agents are competent witnesses, and can be made to testify against the shipper. Aside from this, when competing carriers are permitted to enter into contracts for the division of their net or gross earnings, all motive to shield false shippers is removed, and the carriers will be prompted by the highest considerations of self-interest to ferret out and bring to justice such offending shippers.

The other offense consists in any device, by whatever name called, whereby a corporation subject to the provisions of the act through its officers or agents makes any unjust discrimination or otherwise in any way violates the interstate commerce law. The corporation is made liable criminally for any such acts of its officers or agents, whether authorized or not, and for each offense is subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000. Neither the shipper nor the officers or agents of the corporation are amenable to the law for this offense. It is distinctly the offense of the corporation, and the shipper, as well as its officers and agents, will be compelled to testify against it in the courts.

As the corporation can not be reached by corporal punishment, and the necessities of the case require the exemption from punishment of its officers and agents, punishment by imprisonment has been altogether abolished. The corporation may be indicted in the judicial district in which the offense was committed, and service may be had by delivering a copy of the indictment or information to any officer or agent resident in the judicial district wherein the proceedings may be instituted or wherein such corporation has its principal office.

In addition to this, any party injured by such discrimination is secured a right of action on the case against the offending corporation.

It is confidently believed that the amendment of the tenth section of the act, as proposed in the third section of the bill, will largely contribute to the efficient administration of the law. When the grand juries can indict for each separate offense, it is evident that through their inquisitorial powers they will be enabled to protect the public in a large measure, if not altogether, from the evils of unjust discrimination and the railroads from the depredations of false and dishonest shippers.

The fourth section of the bill simply provides that oral testimony taken before the Commission, or any one or more of its members, shall be taken down by stenography or otherwise as it is given, and before the decision is rendered shall be written out and filed with the papers relating to the investigation.

The fifth section of the bill amends the sixteenth section of the act so as to read as therein set out. The sixteenth section, known as the "procedure" section, has proven defective, because proceedings in the courts to compel compliance with the orders of the Commission have been accompanied with so much delay, incident to the retaking of all evidence on which the parties relied, as well as delay in reaching the case in its regular order on the docket.

The Commission often proceeds with its investigations and makes an order on a railroad company with which it refuses to comply. Then the Commission is required to make its application to the courts to compel obedience. The cause stands on the docket as other causes until it is reached in its turn, and then all the evidence is taken de novo. The result is that the court passes frequently on a case materially different from the one on which the Commission acted, the railroad company frequently ignoring the Commission and offering no evidence until it appears in court, and the issue is there made up.

To obviate these defects which have resulted in interminable delay and vexation, section 16 is so amended by the bill as to give cases brought into court by the Commission priority over the other business of the court. Then all the pleadings, papers, exhibits, and testimony, or copies thereof, certified by the secretary of the Commission and adduced before the Commission in the course of its investigation, resulting in the order which it seeks to enforce, are to be filed with the court and received in evidence. The court is to hear the case on the record so made up unless it shall consider it necessary to take additional evidence. In that event the additional evidence is to be taken under the direction of the court by the Commission, and on taking such additional evidence the Commission may reconsider and modify its order.

In such case it will, when it certifies the additional evidence required by the court, also certify its supplemental order, showing wherein its order in the first instance was modified. The court is then to hear the case on the record, the additional evidence, and the supplemental order of the Commission. In this way all the labor of the Commission in the way of making investigations and taking evidence is utilized before the courts, and in every instance the court passes on the exact case which has been considered by the Commission.

Section 16 is further amended so as to limit the court in its decision to material errors prejudicial to the carrier or plainly affecting the recommendations, decision, order, or proceedings of the Commission; and, in case of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by any of the parties, the case is to be advanced as other cases in which the Government is a party.

It is further provided that the Commission may, with the advice and consent of the Attorney General, employ other counsel than the district attorney in proceedings to enforce its orders.

Section 6 of the bill adds a new section, to be known as section 18a, to the interstate-commerce law. This section is intended to supply another defect. It is apparent that the Commission should not be forever precluded by any order made by it or by any court. It is constantly dealing with problems which change and shift with the exigencies of commerce. A rate reasonable under certain conditions might be unreasonable under others. This section is intended to give the Commission power to grant rehearings and make such modifications and changes of existing orders as may seem equitable and just. And after it has gone into court, and applied for and obtained a decree enforcing its order, this section provides that the Commission is not precluded by such decree, but it may on a subsequent rehearing modify and change the same to meet the equities of the case.

Section 7 of the bill amends section 20 of the act so as to authorize the Commission to require all common carriers participating in interstate commerce, and all companies owning railroads over which interstate commerce is conducted, to make annual reports, to prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and give specific answers to all questions on any subject on which the Commission may need information.

Such reports are to contain all the required statistics for the period of twelve months, ending on the 30th day of June in each year, and shall be made out and filed with the Commission at its office in Washington on or before the 15th day of September following. Should default be made in filing such reports in the required time, then the company shall forfeit $5 for each day in which it is in default, and each day it shall continue in default shall be deemed a separate offense. The district attorney of the judicial district in which such company has its principal office may on information received in the district court of such district the penalty imposed.

The eighth section provides that all cases now pending in the courts shall be heard and determined as now provided by law.

A question has been raised as to the constitutional power of Congress to pass this bill, because the Interstate Commerce Commission is an administrative or ministerial body, and that therefore Congress can not give jurisdiction to the courts on an appeal from a commission which has no judicial functions. The provisions of the bill to which criticism or objection applies are as follows:

Orders and findings of the Commission disapproving any such contract, whether made upon inspection thereof as aforesaid or in any subsequent proceeding after the same has gone into effect, shall be subject to review by any circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in a judicial district in which any party to the contract has its principal office, upon petition filed by any party to such contract stating the facts and making the Interstate Commerce Commission, under that name, a party defendant; said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity in the manner provided by section 16 of this act as nearly as may be, and shall make such decree or order as may be just and equitable, determining whether the contract in question shall be lawful and enforceable notwithstanding the disapproval thereof by the Commission.

The principles involved in these provisions have been passed upon and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the case of The Interstate Commerce Commission vs. Brimson, 154 U. S., 447, 465-9, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, said:

As the Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States to all cases in law and equity arising under that instrument or under the laws of the United States, as well as to all controversies to which the United States shall be a party (art. 3, sec. —) and as the circuit courts of the United States are capable, under the statutes defining and regulating their jurisdiction, of exerting such power in cases or controversies of that character, within the limits prescribed by Congress (25 Stat., 434, c. 806), the fundamental inquiry on this appeal is whether the present proceeding is a "case" or "controversy" within the meaning of the Constitution.

The case of Brimson arose on a petition filed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the circuit court, under the twelfth section of the act to regulate commerce, to obtain an order from the court to compel the attendance and testimony of Brimson, and the production of documents, books, and papers in an inquiry before the Commission. The Supreme Court held that the proceeding under the twelfth section did constitute a case or controversy within the judicial power of the United States.

The further point is made that because the Commission's power to disapprove is discretionary, therefore the provisions in question seek to authorize the review by a court of the exercise by an administrative, nonjudicial body of a discretionary power, which Congress can not constitutionally do.

Of course the power lodged in the Commission is an administrative power in the sense that it is not a judicial power. The judicial power of the United States is lodged, by the Constitution, in the Supreme Court of the United States and in such inferior courts as Congress may establish. The Commission is not a court; no commission established by Congress is a court; but the fact that the Commission is not a court and therefore does not exercise judicial power has no bearing whatever on the question whether the proceeding in court under discussion constitutes a case or controversy within the meaning of the Constitution.

The act of Congress of March 3, 1851 (9 Statutes at Large, 631), established a board of commissioners to settle private land claims in California. The act of Congress of August 31, 1852, provides for an appeal from this board of commissioners to the district court of the United States. The proceeding provided by the statutes came before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The United States vs. Ritchie (17 Howard, 525), and again in the case of Grisar vs. McDowell (6 Wall., 368). The very objection suggested here was urged in those cases.

In the Ritchie case the Supreme Court said:

It is also objected that the law prescribing an appeal to the district court from the decision of the board of commissioners is unconstitutional, and this board, as organized, is not a court under a constitution and can not, therefore, be invested with any of the judicial powers conferred upon the General Government.

But the answer to the objection is that the suit in the district court is to be regarded as an original proceeding, the removal of the transcript, papers, and evidence into it from the board of commissioners being but a mode of providing for the institution of the suit in that court. The transfer, it is true, is called an appeal; we must not, however, be misled by a name, but look to the substance and intent of the proceeding. The district court is not confined to a mere reexamination of the case as heard and decided by the board of commissioners, but hears the case de novo upon the papers and testimony which had been used before the board, they being made evidence in the district court; and also upon such further evidence as either party may see fit to produce.

The suggestion that the power of the Commission is discretionary is answered by the proposed act itself. The very fact that the decision of the Commission is not final, but the final decision is given to the circuit court, or the Supreme Court on appeal from the circuit court, shows that the power is not discretionary in any sense. The question which is left for the decision of the Commission in the first place, and in the second place to the decision of the courts, is whether the contract for the division of traffic or earnings, either on its face or by its operation, contravenes any of the provisions of the other sections of the act to regulate commerce, either in the matter specified or otherwise.

The decision of this question involves the application of the laws of the United States regulating interstate commerce to the facts of the particular case, precisely as do all other decisions of the Commission in the discharge of their duties under the act. The questions involved are essentially judicial in their character, and the fact that they are left in the first place to the decision of the Commission does not destroy their judicial character any more than the leaving of the private land claim in California to the decision of the board of commissioners under the act of 1851 destroyed the judicial character of the questions involved in the decision of those claims.

I need not enlarge further on this point, Mr. President. The questions have been judicially determined by the courts and may therefore be treated as settled law, and that both in form and substance the proceedings authorized under this bill are constitutional and proper. I will take leave, however, to introduce one more citation from the case of The Interstate Commerce Commissioners vs. Brimson (154 U. S., 475) above referred to. The court said:

What is a case or controversy to which, under the Constitution, the judicial power of the United States extends? Referring to the clause of that instrument which extends the judicial power of the United States to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or that shall be made under their authority, this court, speaking through Chief Justice Marshall, has said: "This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States when any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting on it. That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law. It then became a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States." Osborn vs. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat., 728, 819. And in Murray vs. Hoboken Co., 18 How., 272, 284, Mr. Justice Curtis, after observing that Congress can not withdraw from judicial cognizance any matter which from its nature is the subject of a suit at the common law, or in equity, or admiralty, nor, on the other hand, bring under judicial power a matter which from its nature is not a subject for judicial determination, said: "At the same time there are matters involving public rights which may be presented in such form that the judicial power is capable of acting on them, and which are susceptible of judicial determination, but which Congress may or may not bring within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, as it may deem proper." So, in Smith vs. Adams, 130 U. S., 173, Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, said that the term "cases" and "controversies" in the Constitution embraced "the claim or contentions of litigants brought before the courts for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs."

As has already been shown, the proceeding here is one provided to enable a party to a contract to obtain a decision of the question whether that contract is prohibited by the act of Congress—a question of mixed law and fact, but involving the interpretation and application of the laws of the United States. The proceeding arises under the laws of the United States, and is brought before the court by a litigant in the ordinary form of proceeding established for the protection and enforcement of rights. It is therefore a case arising under the laws of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

It may not be out of place to introduce here the provisions of the act of August 31, 1852, under which the cases of the United States vs. Ritchie (17 How., 525) and Grisar vs. McDowell (6 Wall., 368) above cited were brought before the courts.

The provision of that act was as follows:

In every case in which the Board of Commissioners shall render a final decision it shall be their duty to have two certified transcripts of their proceedings and decision and of the papers and evidence on which the same are founded, made out, one of which transcripts shall be filed with the clerk of the district court and the other transmitted to the Attorney-General of the United States; and the filing of such transcript with the clerk shall ipso facto operate as an appeal for the party against whom the decision shall be rendered; and if such decision shall be against the private claimant it shall be his duty to file a notice with the clerk of the court within six months thereafter of his intention to prosecute the appeal, and if the decision shall be against the United States it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General within six months after receiving the said transcript to cause notice to be filed with the clerk aforesaid that the appeal will be prosecuted by the United States, and on the failure of either party to file such notice with the clerk the appeal shall be regarded as dismissed.

It was with reference to this proceeding that the Supreme Court said, in the Ritchie case, that "the suit in the district court is to be regarded as an original proceeding, the removal of the transcript, papers, and evidence into it from the Board of Commissioners being but a mode of providing for the institution of a suit in that court. The transfer, it is true, is called an appeal; we must not, however, be misled by the name, but look to the substance and intent of the proceeding."

In many, if not all the States, the legislative branch of the government has provided by law for commissions or boards, which if not strictly on all fours with the Interstate Commerce Commission are certainly similar in character and object, whose powers are merely administrative or ministerial, and whose acts and orders and transactions are reviewable by the courts on appeal or transfer of their proceedings or by whatever name you may call it. I may mention among others boards or commissions to condemn private property for public use under the power of eminent domain in the State, commissions to open public highways and assess damages, boards of State canvassers, commissions to partition the land of an intestate estate, and others of like character.

These various bodies have no judicial functions, or many of them have not, and yet their findings and orders are appealed from to the courts under proceedings provided by law, and I do not remember a case where the power of the legislature to confer jurisdiction on the courts for such appeals has been questioned.

Having disposed of that branch of the subject, as I hope, satisfactorily and conclusively, I beg now to address myself to the policy of this proposed legislation.

The bill is indorsed by the popular branch of Congress, by a majority of the Interstate Commerce Commission—very emphatically by some of them—by every State railroad commission with perhaps one exception, by every commercial body in the United States except a very few, and by a number of shippers and business men. It is not indorsed by all the railroad companies as is erroneously supposed, but is indorsed or approved by a majority of them. The opposition to the bill comes mainly from persons and localities who have been the beneficiaries of secret arrangements and discriminations which they have enjoyed to the detriment of the general public. Outside of these, I know of no opposition to the passage of the bill.

It has been assumed by some, I must think without investigation or reflection, that the legalizing of pooling or cooperative contracts between certain railroads will result in the destruction of competition, raising of rates, etc. Just the opposite is the truth. As I have attempted to show in the early part of my remarks, pooling and rate making have nothing whatever to do with each other. The rate-making power is now under the absolute control of the Commission and the law, certainly to the extent of saying rates shall not be unreasonable but must be reasonable. So there is literally no ground for apprehension on that score.

Then the only question, as it occurs to me, is, Will the legalizing of pooling contracts and making them enforceable and binding between the parties and the public under the direction and supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as is proposed in this bill, be contrary to public policy and prejudicial to the public interests? After giving to the subject the most careful thought and investigation of which I am capable—of course I speak only for myself—I answer without the least hesitation it will not.

Pooling contracts under this bill will, in my judgment, accomplish the following very beneficial and desirable results:

First, they will prevent unjust discriminations by the railroads in favor of large monopolistic shippers and against the small shippers.

Second, they will protect the weaker railroads and avoid the necessity of consolidation between railroads or prevent such consolidation.

Third, they will prevent discriminations against one locality in favor of another and against one person in favor of another.

Fourth, they will make competition fair and stable and just as against cut-throat preferences and discriminations in freight and passenger traffic, which destroy competition and unsettle business calculations, precipitate bankruptcy where it is not deserved, and offer a premium to dishonesty and unfair dealing.

Fifth, The only relation that I understand pooling contracts can have to rates is that they will make rates uniform, stable, and reasonable. Uniform and stable because the incentive to cut rates in favor of a few below the point where they will earn a fair remuneration on the capital invested will be removed, and because all the parties to the contract will participate in a division of the traffic transported by the pooled lines at a percentage stipulated in the contract. It is not pretended that the provisions of this bill will change the relations of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the nonpooled lines, or to those operated entirely within the limits of a State, from those obtaining under existing law. According to the best information I can get 90 per cent of the rail companies of the country will belong to the nonpooling class.

It has been found in England and on the Continent of Europe, in fact wherever railroads are employed, that pooling is the best and only method for preventing unjust discriminations and the destruction of fair and honest competition. In those countries where some of the railway lines are owned by the Government and some by private individuals, the Government lines pool with private lines and thus protect the public against ruinous discriminations and unfair competition.

Such catch phrases as "competition is the life of trade" have no place in the consideration of transportation questions. There is no element of trade or speculation in transportation and none can enter it. The Interstate Commerce Commission has said in its first report "excessive and unreasonable competition is a public injury." This is nothing more than a statement of what is universally and everywhere known to be true.

With these general propositions, which I announce with great confidence in their soundness and verity, I shall leave for future discussion, if they should be controverted, the evidence and authority upon which they are formed, and direct my attention to one other suggestion touching the duration of these contracts. It has been intimated that some limitation of time ought to be put upon them in this bill. That matter was discussed in committee and there decided by a majority vote that such a provision was inexpedient and unnecessary.

These contracts are entered into by railroads in relation to the business between competitive points, and only in such cases. Each party to the contract is credited with a certain percentage of the traffic and earnings, and these percentages are determined by taking the average amount of traffic done by the respective lines for a given period in the past. The conditions of transportation and traffic are subject to constant changes which necessitates a readjustment of the percentages at comparatively short intervals. With these readjustments I can not see the public has any peculiar interest. And, therefore, the duration of contracts is not a matter of much moment.

In this connection it must not be forgotten that the Commission is charged with the duty of observing the operation of these contracts, and if it should appear they "would result in unreasonable rates, unjust discriminations, inferior service to the public, or otherwise contravene any of the provisions of the act," it is the business of the Commission to institute measures to terminate the contracts, or any of them. So that the time when the contracts shall run is under the control of the Commission by the terms of this bill.

I will not detain the Senate longer, Mr. President, in the discussion of this bill. I may say in closing, that after most careful, painstaking, patient, and thorough investigation, exhaustive discussion, and candid consultations, this bill is a compromise of conflicting opinions, as all wise measures of legislation are. It represents, not fully, perhaps, but approximately, the views of the Interstate Commerce Commission, composed as it is of gentlemen of high character, ability, and intelligence, who may be said to represent the Government and through the Government the public. It represents the expressed wisdom of the popular branch of Congress, who represent directly the people at large, and it represents the views of the railroads, through their officials, speaking for the vast, complicated, and valuable interests embraced in railway transportation.

I wish to say in this connection that I have never permitted myself to indulge in a wholesale denunciation of railroad corporations simply because they are rich and powerful. I do not think it is fair in dealing with railroad corporations that we should consider them as public enemies; and that is about the attitude in which they are placed by many people. Railroads, like other corporations and other persons, ought to be subjected to obedience to law. They have no special immunities or privileges in the eye of the law which individuals have not.

I venture the assertion, sir, that there is not a Senator on this floor who has not, at some time in his life, encouraged the creation and organization of these corporations to facilitate the development of the community in which he lives. If they are evils they are necessary evils. I would deal with them as I would deal with any other class of people in the country. Personally, I doubt if there is a man upon this floor who is under less obligations to them than I am, because it has so happened in my professional career that I was usually on the other side; but, sir, in dealing with a great public question like this I shall bring to bear upon it the best judgment that I can command, without regard to any popular clamor which may prevail for or against it.

The bill, Mr. President, now only awaits the action of the Senate, the representative of the States, and of the Chief Executive, who represents all interests. I trust it may receive the approval of both and become a law.

I have not gone as largely into the details as perhaps the occasion would justify, but in the course of the debate, if one should arise on this bill, I would be very happy to give any information that I may possess or answer any questions which Senators may choose to propound to me.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. What has become of the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina completed his remarks, and the Senate voted to proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriation for the postal service for the ensuing fiscal year, on which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire, with the permission of the Senator from Kentucky, to state that I shall ask to have the resolution taken up at some future day with a view of submitting some remarks thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out, in line 2, page 5, "$196,614.22" and insert "$176,952.80;" so as to read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Boston, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $176,952.80.

Mr. ALDRICH. There should be a full attendance of the Senate when the amendment is voted on. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Coke,	Hunton,	Perkins,
Allen,	Cullom,	Kyle,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Davis,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Bate,	Dixon,	Lodge,	Ransom,
Berry,	Dubois,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Blanchard,	Frye,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Brice,	George,	Martin,	Turpie,
Butler,	Gibson,	Mills,	Walsh,
Call,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Oreg.	White,
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell of Wis.	Wolcott.
Carey,	Hawley,	Morgan,
Chandler,	Hill,	Pasco,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Peffer,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. The Secretary informs the Chair that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. RANSOM. No; the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am speaking from memory, but my recollection is that the yeas and nays were asked by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but were not ordered.

Mr. RANSOM. They were not ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the vote be taken by a division.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am content.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. There is a quorum here.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let the roll be called.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nothing is in order but a call of the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Coke,	Hoar,	Platt,
Allen,	Cullom,	Hunton,	Pritchard,
Bate,	Davis,	Kyle,	Pugh,
Berry,	Dixon,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Blanchard,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Roach,
Brice,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Smith,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Stewart,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Teller,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell of Wis.	Vest,
Camden,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Paaco,	Walsh,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Peffer,	White,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Perkins,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], on which a division has been demanded.

Mr. SHERMAN. We may as well have the yeas and nays, Mr. President. There will be no quorum otherwise.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the question stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is a reduction of 10 per cent upon the $196,614.22.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, page 5, after the name "New Orleans," it is proposed to strike out "$196,614.22" and insert "$176,952.80."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is necessarily temporarily absent, and therefore I withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HUNTON (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is at home sick. He is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not being advised how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am informed that an arrangement has been made to pair the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and therefore I vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LINDSAY (after having voted in the affirmative). Under that arrangement, being paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—18.
Allen,	George,	Mills,	Teller,
Bate,	Harris,	Peffer,	Vest,
Berry,	Kyle,	Roach,	Wolcott.
Call,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Martin,	Smith,
NAYS—31.
Alldrich,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Pritchard,
Blanchard,	Frye,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Mitchell of Ore.	Pugh,
Butler,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Ransom,
Camden,	Hill,	Murphy,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Dixon,	Hunton,	Perkins,	Washburn.
Dubois,	Lodge,	Platt,
NOT VOTING—38.
Allison,	Davis,	Jones of Ark.	Quay,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Jones of Nev.	Shoup,
Brice,	Gordon,	Lindsay,	Squire,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Turpie,
Carey,	Gray,	Mantle,	Vilas,
Clark,	Hale,	Mitchell of Wis.	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	White,
Coke,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,
Daniel,	Irby,	Power,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask whether the Chair has laid before the Senate the unfinished business coming over from yesterday?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that without prejudice the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In line 15, on page 4, I move to strike out the words "three million two hundred and five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "two million eight hundred and eighty-four thousand five hundred dollars," which is a reduction of 10 per cent upon the existing rates paid for the rental of postal cars.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to inquire if that is the estimate of the Department?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Exactly the amount the bill now carries is the estimate of the Department, which is $3,205,000. As the bill came to the Senate from the House it was $3,105,000. The Committee on Appropriations reported to amend by adding $100,000 to this item in the bill as it came from the House, which brought the amount up to exactly the estimates of the Department. The amendment I submit is a reduction of 10 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On the estimates?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not on the House bill, but on the estimates of the Department.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the amendment of the Senator prevails, there will be a reduction of 10 per cent from the amount estimated by the Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There will be a reduction in the rates of 10 per cent upon the estimates of the Department.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. A reduction of the total amount appropriated?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Precisely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, after the word "service," it is proposed to strike out "$3,205,000" and insert "$2,884,500;" so as to read:

For railway post-office car service, $2,884,500.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in the course of the discussion upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky a day or two ago, I asked that Senator, he being in charge of the bill, why the Committee on Appropriations had recommended an increase over the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives, and he then said it was necessary in order to extend the postal-car service. I have no doubt that the statement he then made was the correct one, and I am surprised that the Senator having the bill in charge, the Senate having voted down by a vote which I might say was almost an overwhelming one a similar amendment in Committee of the Whole, should come here now and ask to have this appropriation cut down.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Rhode Island, as usual, Mr. President, is technically correct. I did not say that this increase was necessary. I said that the Postmaster-General said to the subcommittee that, if the existing rates were to be maintained, the service being a constantly expanding service, it would be crippled to that extent by the reduction of $100,000 which the House of Representatives had made below the estimates.

The Senate now having refused by a rejection of the committee amendment yesterday to peremptorily order a reduction of 10 per cent, the amendment which I now submit simply proposes to make a reduction of 10 per cent on this $3,205,000 appropriation. There is nothing involved in the pending amendment except the naked question as to whether there shall be made in the discretion of the Postmaster-General a reduction of 10 per cent upon the payments he is now making to the railroad companies.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what he had before him or what the committee which he represents had before it, which would seem to justify the reduction in the interest of the public service or the interest of economy?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If necessary I will go back over the debate which has been indulged in by various Senators for the last four days. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] submitted a tabulated statement as to the present cost, showing that in less than every sixteen months the Government is paying for this postal-car service a rental per annum equal to the cost of the construction, maintenance, repair, and operation of these postal cars. That being undisputed and indisputable, I thought it was fair to assume that no injustice would be done to the railroad companies if a reduction of 10 per cent be made. For that reason I have submitted this amendment; and that is the only question involved.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. I understood him to say while on the floor a moment ago that this reduction was in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not. I said the rates of pay were in his discretion.

Mr. HUNTON. But the rates of pay can not be in the discretion of the Postmaster-General if he has not the money to pay them. As I understand, if this amendment prevails, it will be an absolute reduction below the estimate of the Postmaster-General as to the amount necessary to run the postal cars.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Below the estimate of the Postmaster-General, predicated upon the idea that the present existing rates were to be continued.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; it was predicated upon the idea that the Postmaster-General still had to run the postal-car service on the old plan.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the word of the Senator from Virginia is good, provided it is given upon any proposition that is within the realm of his personal information; but I should like him to furnish anything in the shape of substantial evidence in support of the statement he has just made.

Mr. HUNTON. I said upon the estimate of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Postmaster-General makes an estimate, which the House of Representatives lacks $100,000 of giving him, predicated upon the continuance of existing rates. This amendment is predicated upon the idea of a reduction of existing rates.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator one other question, if it does not disturb him.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is the Senate to understand that this proposition is the proposition of the committee or of the Senator himself?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is my own proposition. The committee has not authorized it, and the amendment is offered upon my own responsibility.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then the situation is just this: A bill comes from the other House appropriating a certain amount of money for a certain public service; the Committee on Appropriations, of which the distinguished Senator from Kentucky is the able organ, propose to increase the amount $100,000 for reasons which, it must be assumed, were entirely satisfactory to the committee. The bill comes before the Senate, and now the member of the committee in charge of the bill, without authority from the committee, proposes a reduction of 10 per cent on the estimate of the Department. I confess I get muddled over two contradictory propositions of that kind, and scarcely know what I ought to do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am very much obliged to the Senator for having furnished me the opportunity of showing how unfair his statement is.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not want to be unfair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the Senator does not, and that is the reason I am glad to correct him. The House of Representatives sent this bill here for the support of the postal service for the coming fiscal year with a reduction in this item of $100,000 below the estimates of the Department. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, increased that amount by $100,000 of shortage and went to the estimate of the Department. So far the Senator from Oregon is correct. Now he says that the committee having done that, I, as the representative on this bill of that committee, propose to reduce the whole amount by 10 per cent. That is not fair. The Senator has told part of the truth, but he did not take the oath usually administered in courts of justice, of which he is such an ornament professionally, and he did not tell all the truth.

The Committee on Appropriations did add $100,000, but with it coupled an amendment, which is printed and before the Senator's eyes in italics, which was yesterday stricken out by the Senate; so that I am not running counter to the action of my committee, but, on the contrary, the committee did not report an addition of $100,000 and stop there, but it reported an addition of $100,000 and coupled with it a condition printed here in the bill in italics, which did at least as much as this in the direction of reduction, but that proposed amendment of the committee was yesterday beaten by a vote of the Senate. So the committee does not stand before the Senate now recommending the $100,000 increase over the bill as it came from the House. It only recommended that increase, provided the Senate agreed to that italicized amendment which the Senate has rejected, and consequently the Committee on Appropriations is not committed to the increase of $100,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. How does the Senator claim that that italicized amendment is a reduction? It may or it may not be.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir. It says:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed.

And every Senator who opposed that committee amendment took the ground that it was a repeal of the sliding schedule in the act of March 3, 1873, which would result in a reduction of compensation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But the Senator himself admits that that sliding schedule, of which he speaks, is the old act of 1873, I believe?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That act was subsequently amended.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It never has been amended.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It simply fixes the maximum rate beyond which the Postmaster-General can not go under the law as it stood then, as it stands now, and as it will forever stand until it is amended by this or by some other proposition. There was no fixing of rates by that except to fix the maximum. The Postmaster-General had the discretion and has the discretion now under the law to reduce the amount to whatever he thinks is a proper figure in order to do justice by the public service and at the same time exercise a proper economy on the subject.

So I do not understand, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned as a member of the Senate, that the proposed amendment of the committee in italics, of which the Senator speaks, is a reduction at all. It does not have that effect. Consequently, it at least seems to me, with all due deference to the Senator in charge of the bill, that the proposition he now submits on his own motion is in direct contradiction, as I understand it, to the proposition of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. None so blind, Mr. President, as those who will not see. I submit this amendment on my own responsibility.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there does not seem to be any necessity for confusion with regard to this matter. The Senate yesterday, as in Committee of the Whole, voted down two propositions by decided majorities, one a proposition to put the whole matter of the expenditure of this $3,205,000 in the hands of the Postmaster-General. That was voted down. The second proposition to reduce the present rates 10 per cent was also voted down. Now the Senator from Kentucky seeks to reach the same end proposed by his former amendment by cutting down the rates by this amendment. That is all there is about it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky one question before I vote on this motion, and that is, whether the Postmaster-General to-day under the law has not the authority to reduce the cost of this transportation if in his judgment he deems it wise and in the interest of the public service so to do?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, yes; and he has had that same discretionary power for twenty-two years; but no Postmaster-General has ever yet exercised it or reduced the compensation below the maximum rates allowed by law.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is it not to be assumed that the Postmaster-General, knowing better than we do about this, thinks it is not in the interest of the public service that the reduction should be made?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is a violent assumption, and, in my judgment, an unwarranted conclusion, when the present Postmaster-General comes before the subcommittee and says the rates are too high, and my honorable friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who was Postmaster-General for nearly four years, stood here in a very full discussion of this amendment yesterday and concurred in the opinion of the present head of that Department that the rates are too high.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I may be mistaken, but I understood the Senator from Wisconsin yesterday to say that when he was Postmaster-General he did on more than one occasion reduce the amount below the maximum.

Mr. VILAS. That was as to the weight pay, not as to this compensation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was only as to the mail compensation by the hundredweight.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to read from the RECORD a statement made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] in debate on February 13. In answer to a question asked by me as to why the Committee on Appropriations saw fit to increase this appropriation the Senator from Kentucky said:

Because that service is extending every day and more money will be needed every year, even though you reduce the rates.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I say so now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BRICE. Mr. President, I do not understand that this is an amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir.

Mr. BRICE. But by an individual member of the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BRICE. Mr. President, as a member of that committee I oppose the amendment for the reason given in the extract read by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], which appears in the RECORD of the 13th instant, and for the further reason that after this amendment shall be disposed of I purpose offering an amendment to another portion of the bill dividing the appropriation made for the fast-mail service between the railroad lines running from the Northeastern portion of the country to the Southern States, and a similar line extending from the Northwestern portion of the country to the Southern States. I desire the appropriation to be increased for the fast-mail service rather than diminished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I should vote "yea," but I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is necessarily absent to-day.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—19.
Allen,	Cameron,	McLaurin,	Teller,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRICE. I move to insert on page 5, line 2, after the words "New Orleans:"

And for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Louisville, Covington, and Newport, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio, to Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., for Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Tenn., Birmingham, Ala., Meridian, Miss., New Orleans, La., and Texas points.

Mr. HUNTON. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BRICE. The effect of the amendment is not to increase the appropriation, but to divide the special appropriation which has heretofore, by the previous wording of the act, been taken away from the supervision of the Postmaster-General and expended entirely east of the Blue Ridge. It is to divide that sum between the line extending from the Northeastern States to the Southwestern States and another line extending from Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, and that region to the same destination.

Mr. LODGE. It is true the amendment does not raise or lower an appropriation, but it does alter existing law by dividing an existing fund and changing the law in regard to it. That fund is now by law used for the fast carriage of mails between certain points. It is now proposed to compel a division of an already existing fund by a fast-mail route to other points. The amendment also diverts a portion of the appropriation to a purpose for which no estimate has been submitted.

Mr. RANSOM. Not a bit.

Mr. LODGE. And it has not been considered, so far as I know, by any committee of the Senate. I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALL. I have an amendment to that of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], if he will accept it, providing for special facilities to Havana, Cuba, via Key West, Fla.

Mr. BRICE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I will state to the Senate that this appropriation for many years was confined to the fast-mail service from Springfield, Mass., over the Coast Line, via Jacksonville, Tampa, Key West, to Havana, Cuba. It was justified by the fact that it was no expense to the Government, as the returns from the foreign mails contributed, if not entirely, very largely to that fund. Last year the appropriation was taken away from that line and given to a route via New Orleans. I make no objection to that, although we opposed it at the time. But I ask that it shall now embrace a line through Florida.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida propose an amendment?

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] has accepted the amendment which I propose to his amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add to the amendment the words:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines via Jacksonville, Tampa, and Key West, Fla., to Havana, Cuba.

Mr. BRICE. If the Senator from Florida will strike out the last three words, "to Havana, Cuba," I will accept the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I strike out those words.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the modification offered by the Senator from Florida makes the amendment any less obnoxious to the point of order. It seems to me it rather increases it. It would bring in still further legislation that has not been passed upon by any committee or estimated for by any Department, and introduces still more general legislation. I think the point of order lies against it the same as before.

Mr. CALL. I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that a similar provision was in the law last year for fast-mail facilities from Springfield, Mass., via New York, Washington, Richmond, Charleston, Savannah to Jacksonville, Tampa, and so on.

It was altered in an appropriation act just as this is proposed. For many years it was the existing law, and then it was altered by a change in the appropriation contained in the last appropriation act. So there is no foundation in the precedents of the Senate for the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the whole amendment read, so that we will know how it stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 2, after the words "New Orleans," insert:

And for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Louisville, Covington, and Newport, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio, to Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., for Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Tenn., Birmingham, Ala., Meridian, Miss., New Orleans, La., and Texas points, and for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines via Jacksonville to Tampa and Key West, Fla.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MARTIN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. BATE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. On the assurance of his colleague [Mr. HUNTON] that it would be proper for me to vote on this question, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

Mr. TURPIE. I inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. TURPIE. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask permission to have the totals corrected so as to make them conform to the action of the Senate in amending the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to call up the agricultural appropriation bill, without displacing the unfinished business.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8727) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] desires to have it distinctly stated that the agricultural appropriation bill has been taken up temporarily, without displacing the regular order, which is the bankruptcy bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so understood. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 23, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and on page 4, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of botany: One botanist and curator of the herbarium, $2,500; one assistant botanist, $1,600; one assistant botanist, $1,400; one assistant curator, $1,200; one botanical clerk, $1,000; one botanical clerk, $900; in all, $8,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 19, before the word "and," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "nine thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of economic ornithology and mammalogy: One ornithologist who shall be chief of division, $2,500; one assistant ornithologist, $1,600; one assistant ornithologist, $1,500; one assistant ornithologist, $1,400; one clerk of class 1, $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000; one clerk, at $900; in all, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of pomology: One pomologist, $2,500; one assistant pomologist, $1,600; one clerk of class 1, $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000; in all, $6,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of vegetable physiology and pathology: One pathologist, $2,500; one assistant pathologist, $1,600; one assistant pathologist, $1,300; one clerk, at $1,000; in all, $6,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 25, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of forestry: Chief of division, $2,500; one assistant chief of division, $1,600; one clerk, class 2, $1,400; one clerk, class 1, $1,300; one clerk, at $900; one clerk, at $720; in all, $8,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for the division of seeds from $12,120 to $13,720; so as to make the clause read:

Division of seeds: One chief of division, $2,000; one expert, $1,800; two clerks of class 1, $2,400; one skilled laborer, $1,000; eight employees, at $340 each, who shall in addition to other duties execute the requests of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for the distribution of seeds among their constituents; in all, $13,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 20, before the word "and," to strike out "seven thousand" and insert "six thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Document and folding room: One superintendent, $1,600; two chief folders, at $1,000 each; one folder, at $540; four folders, at $600 each; in all, $6,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, to increase the total appropriation for salaries from $251,240 to $251,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 23 on page 14.

Mr. PLATT. I wish we might have some explanation of the amendment which is now reached. There is no objection to reading it. It has to be read, but I hope when it is read the Senator in charge of the bill will explain to the Senate what it means.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall desire to ask the Senator having charge of the bill one or two questions in relation to those provisions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 23, insert:

Provided, That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate commerce, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle, the meat of which, fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed, is intended for exportation to any foreign country, at such times and places and in such manner as he may think proper, with a view to ascertain whether said cattle are free from disease and their meat sound and wholesome, and may appoint inspectors who shall be authorized to give an official certificate clearly stating the condition in which such cattle and meat are found, and no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board any fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed beef for exportation to and sale in a foreign country from any port in the United States until the owner or shipper shall obtain from an inspector appointed under the provisions of this act such certificate."

Also, that section 4 of said act be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That said examination shall be made in the manner provided by rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and after said examination the carcasses and products of all cattle, sheep, and swine found to be free of disease and wholesome, sound, and fit for human food shall be marked, stamped, or labeled for identification as may be provided by said rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture. Any person who shall forge, counterfeit, simulate, imitate, falsely represent, or use without authority, or knowingly and wrongfully alter, deface, or destroy any of the marks, stamps, or other devices provided for in the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, of any such carcasses or their products, or who shall forge, counterfeit, simulate, imitate, falsely represent, or use without authority, or knowingly and wrongfully alter, deface, or destroy any certificate or stamp provided in said regulations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. CHANDLER. As I read the new section 2, a substitute for the former act, it provides for an inspection of all live cattle, the meat of which is to be exported in any form; and it provides that no vessel shall have a clearance having on board any meat in any form without a certificate that the cattle have been examined. As I read the section there can be no export of any canned meats whatever unless a certificate is furnished that the live cattle from which the canned meats were put up were inspected before they were slaughtered.

I should like to ask whether it is the intention of the amendment not merely that live cattle shall be inspected before they are slaughtered, but that an iron rule is to be laid down by this statute so that all canned meats in the United States are to be withheld from exportation unless the owners of the canned meats are able to furnish a certificate that the live cattle from which the meats were made were inspected before they were killed. If that is the purpose of the amendment, it seems to me that it goes too far.

The Senate is laboring under the disadvantage that the committee propose upon an appropriation bill to reenact a section of a statute, which statute, of course, is not before the Senate. We may send for it, we may examine it, but we may not be able upon a cursory examination to determine what is the difference between the existing law and the law as it is proposed to be enacted by the committee. Therefore, we are in the dark upon this subject. We are asked upon an appropriation bill to go it blind upon the authority of the Committee on Appropriations, and to reenact a very important statute, a statute of great moment and possibly of great usefulness, when necessarily we are without information as to the changes which are proposed to be made in the existing law.

The Senator from Florida doubtless understands these provisions, and I trust he will, in the lucid manner which always characterizes his statements, kindly tell us what the changes between the existing law and the proposed law are. Then we may be able to satisfy our consciences and vote, without carefully studying the old law and the proposed new law.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, before the Senator from Florida makes his explanation I desire to say that the law which it is proposed to amend is not indexed in any of our statutes; it can not be found by examining the index; but it is on pages 1089 and 1090 of volume 26 of the Statutes at Large. If Senators desire to examine it they can find it at the pages I have named.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the amendment is recommended by two committees of the Senate, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the Committee on the Inspection of Meat Products. The original act to which this is an amendment, recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture and by two committees of the Senate, is to be found on page 1090 of the Statutes at Large, volume 26, and is as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle the meat of which is intended for exportation to any foreign country.

The only difference is that by the amendment the meat of all animals intended for export to other countries is required to be inspected and is in detail mentioned, as canned and other meats. That is because of the correspondence which I shall send to the Secretary's desk to have read.

The amendment was introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], then the chairman of the Committee on Meat Products, was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, and by him recommended. I shall send to the desk to be read a letter of the Attorney-General, which was brought out by the fact that it was reported to the Department of Agriculture that quite an extensive business was being carried on in the exportation of canned meats, which were labeled as having passed inspection, but which had never been submitted to inspection; and there was no penalty provided in the original law by which this fraud upon the revenue laws and the inspection laws could be punished. So the Secretary of Agriculture submitted the question of an amendment to this law, in order that an inspection might be made, so that all exporters of the products of cattle, as specified in the original act, might be punished provided there was not a compliance with the act. It was understood that our relations with foreign countries had been complicated and great injury had occurred to the large interests which were dependent upon our exportation to foreign markets, and that this evasion of the law by sending products of diseased cattle abroad in cans was inflicting a serious damage upon the exporting business of the country.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator if these canned goods are sent abroad labeled as having been inspected by the authorities of the United States.

Mr. CALL. It has been so reported by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. ALLEN. Has that meat been imposed upon the purchasers of foreign countries to any extent?

Mr. CALL. It has been so reported. It was the belief of the Secretary of Agriculture, from the information obtained by him, that there was danger of serious injury to the exportation of meat products because of this evasion of the law.

Mr. ALLEN. To what extent has this evasion been carried?

Mr. CALL. I can not inform the Senator; but to a very considerable extent. There was one firm which was regularly engaged in the business of exporting meats in cans which were stamped as having been inspected which had never been subjected to inspection.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from Florida say there is no statute to prevent a fraud of that kind?

Mr. CALL. The Attorney-General of the United States has replied to the Secretary of Agriculture that there is no penalty provided in the law sufficient to prevent this fraud. I will send to the desk the letter of the Attorney-General.

Mr. PLATT. What is it that the Senator asks to have read?

Mr. CALL. A letter of the Attorney-General in reply to one from the Secretary of Agriculture in reference to this subject.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1895.

SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 31st ultimo, calling attention to a label for canned corned beef used by Mr. William Manning Hardy, of Victor, Cal., which label contains the statement that the meat contained in the can has been inspected according to law enacted by Congress March 3, 1891, regulating inspection of meats. I understand you to say that this statement is an entire misrepresentation and to inquire whether or not it can be made the subject of a criminal prosecution.

I regret that a careful examination of the statutes of the United States fails to show that Congress has provided for the punishment of such a fraud as that committed by the false statement contained in the label above referred to.

Respectfully, yours,

RICHARD OLNEY, Attorney-General.

The honorable SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this whole subject of the inspection of meats and of cattle the meat of which is intended for exportation, has been a matter which has received the most careful attention of the Senate and the committees having the subject in charge. Two or three bills have been hastily passed heretofore, and soon after their passage it was found that they were likely to work great injustice, hardship, and trouble, and they were recalled, recommitted, and amended. I speak of this for the purpose of showing how vicious and how utterly indefensible is this kind of legislation on appropriation bills, and I shall make the point of order when I have concluded that this whole legislation is out of order. That we should be called upon in a matter of this gravity and importance, without ever having known that any such legislation was to be proposed, without ever having seen the amendment, which was only printed this morning, without ever having been advised that any change was to be made in our laws relating to the inspection of our cattle or meat for foreign export, I think is utterly indefensible.

We do not many of us understand the business. I venture to say that there are not three Senators in this Chamber who have any practical knowledge of this business. I venture to say that the Senator from Florida, who is in charge of the bill, has no practical knowledge of this business of the exportation of meat. I do not know how many members of the Appropriations Committee have any practical knowledge of that subject. I venture to say that they have not heard from the people who are engaged in the business of exporting. I know that whenever we have attempted to pass bills upon this subject in haste and without much consideration we have heard very quickly from the persons who are engaged in the business of meat exportation.

I fear very much, Mr. President, that there is trouble in this amendment. I do not know that I understand it, but I find that the old statute provided that when cattle were intended for export they should be inspected. That was by section 1. When the meat of cattle was intended for exportation the cattle should be inspected, and a certificate given, "stating the condition in which such cattle and meat are found."

This is in the old statute:

And no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board any fresh beef for exportation to and sale in a foreign country from any port of the United States until the owner or shipper shall obtain from an inspector appointed under the provisions of this act such certificate.

That is all the statute we have on the subject now, that cattle which are to be exported shall be inspected before exportation, and cattle which are to be slaughtered for the export of their meat in a fresh condition shall also be inspected before slaughtered, and a certificate given to the vessel which takes the quarters of beef or the carcasses of mutton, the fresh meat, abroad that the cattle were free from disease when killed. Now, what does this bill propose? It proposes:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle—

Whether it applies to pork or not, I do not know—the meat of which, fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed, is intended for exportation to any foreign country, and no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board any fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed beef for exportation to and sale in a foreign country from any port in the United States until the owner or shipper shall obtain from an inspector appointed under the provisions of this act such certificate.

In other words, the present law being that the meat of cattle which have been slaughtered to be exported shall be inspected, it is now proposed to provide that no corned beef, no canned beef, no packed beef shall be exported unless the person exporting the same proves that the cattle which produced that meat were inspected when alive. It may be all very well for the great beef packers who live out in Chicago to give them the entire export business in beef, but it is not so well for the rest of the country. There are a good many people in the country who would desire to engage in the exportation of canned meats and salted meats and packed beef, but they would be cut off from it entirely. No one will be able to export, if this provision should be enacted into law, except the man who slaughters the cattle. There is no provision here by which the packages can be so marked and identified that they can be exported by anyone else. I do not know but that this is all right, but I do not like to pass a law in this way.

The astonishing thing about it is that, so far as I know, there has been no suggestion of a repeal or of an amendment of the existing law at the present session of Congress. I do not know what the Secretary of Agriculture may have thought about it, but certainly the attention of no committee has been called to it. I have the honor, Mr. President—and I think I am properly grateful to the Senate for the honor conferred upon me—of being chairman of the Committee on Transportation of Meat Products, and I should have supposed possibly, if anything of this kind was intended, that such a bill might have come to my committee or have gone to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or to the Committee on the Judiciary, which had charge of the bill which was originally passed and became a law.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. A bill, I think exactly in the terms of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, came from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, was reported, I believe, to the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLATT. I was not aware of the fact that it had been before any committee. Certainly it has not heretofore been brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that it has been before two standing committees of the Senate, and been reported by them.

Mr. PLATT. If it had been called up for action I venture to say that it would not have been supposed that it could pass the Senate in the course of ten or fifteen minutes, as it is expected to pass upon an appropriation bill.

There is only one other thing which I desire to say, and that is that in the last year or two a foreign nation has undertaken to retaliate upon the United States for some action of this Congress by barring out our meats. For one, I do not propose to engage in the repeal of any legislation which we have heretofore passed, or in the amendment of any act now existing, at the dictation of a foreign government. If Germany wants to retaliate, it is a game at which two can play, and the best return for that proposed retaliation, as is thoroughly understood in this country, is to make use of the powers which we now have for retaliating upon Germany. I have very little respect for legislation which attempts to conciliate Germany in her treatment of our meats by making the laws of the United States satisfy Germany.

I make the point of order on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will withdraw the point of order for two reasons. In the first place, he can renew it after the discussion is over—

Mr. PLATT. I waive the point of order for the present, and reserve the right to make it later.

Mr. CHANDLER. And again, if here is a wise and important object to be accomplished it would be well enough unanimously to accomplish that object by an amendment to this bill.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, the understanding that we had was that, in the consideration of the pending appropriation bill, the bill should be read through and the committee amendments first acted upon. Then, after the bill had been read through, individual amendments might be offered and discussed. I have no objection to amendments being discussed, but I hope no points of order will be made on them for the present.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to make some suggestions about this section now.

Mr. CALL. I was speaking of the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut has withdrawn the point of order for the present.

Mr. CALL. So far as discussing the amendment is concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the original law, as the Senator from Connecticut has shown, was perfectly clear and distinct. It was that no fresh meat should be exported unless the live animals had been inspected and a certificate given. Now, the Committee on Appropriations propose to reenact that provision and to insert the words "fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed," and to require the inspection of the live cattle from which that meat is salted, canned, corned, or packed to be exported, or otherwise no ship which has any meat so put up can get a clearance for a foreign port.

Mr. CALL. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that he has not, I think, considered carefully the language of the original act.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have given such study to it that I know exactly what the effect of it will be. The effect of it will be simply that no single pound or barrel of fresh meat, salted meat, canned meat, corned meat, or packed meat which is in this country on the day when this act takes effect can be exported to a foreign country. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the fact that here is a proposed law which puts an absolute embargo against the exportation of a single pound or a single barrel of the whole quantity of salted meat, canned meat, corned meat, and packed meat now in existence within the limits of the United States. I do not believe that that was the intention of the committee; but that is the plain meaning of this proposed statute. The law was consistent as it stood, because it was easy for any person intending to export fresh meats to have the cattle inspected; but take all the present owners of all the salted meat in this country, if they want to export it, they can not export it unless they can furnish to the collector of customs a certificate that the cattle from which that meat was put up were inspected by a Government inspector under the act of 1891.

Mr. President, there is not any such salted meat in the country, there is not any such canned or corned or packed meat in the country. It has all been put up with due precautions taken by the persons who have put it up, but in no case with an inspection of the live animal from which the meat came. I suppose the Senator from Illinois is a better judge than I am on that subject; but I suppose there are to-day millions of dollars' worth of canned, salted, corned, or packed meats in this country. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says, "Undoubtedly."

Now, I call his attention to the fact that not one pound or one cask or one barrel of that meat can be exported unless the owners of it can hunt up the live cattle from which it was taken, get those live cattle inspected by the inspectors, and take that certificate to the collector of customs when the meat is to be exported. I ask the Senator from Florida how, in Heaven's name, you are going to find the live cattle from which these millions of dollars' worth of meat have been prepared and get the certificate required by this proposed law, that the cattle were inspected before they were killed? This, it seems to me, is a patent absurdity.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, that is the most extraordinary position I have ever heard in regard to the operation of a statute.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has not read the extraordinary statute we are considering.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I drew it. [Laughter.] The idea that this statute is to exclude from exportation canned, salted, and packed meats which are now in existence is the most extraordinary legal proposition I have ever heard.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is not any doubt about it, I will say, with all respect to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. This proposed law will apply, of course, from the time it takes effect to all meat and cattle intended for exportation.

Mr. CHANDLER. It does not say so.

Mr. VEST. It says this—and no lawyer, it seems to me, would put any other construction upon it—

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle the meat of which, fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed, is intended for exportation to any foreign country—

As a matter of course, in the future. It is impossible that any man could come now and say that he had put up canned meat not intended for exportation, but had changed his mind and concluded to export it, and then that this statute applied to it. It can only have operation in futuro and not an ex post facto operation. That is so clear that I hardly think it is necessary to make any argument about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course the Senator from Missouri is at liberty to say that no lawyer ought to differ with him on a question of this kind, or that a person who differs with him is no lawyer; but I call the attention of the Senator to the last clause here:

And no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board any fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed beef for exportation to and sale in a foreign country from any port in the United States until the owner or shipper shall obtain from an inspector appointed under the provisions of this act such certificate.

What kind of a certificate? A certificate that there has been made a careful inspection of the live cattle; and if there can be any doubt about it I wish the Senator would expound still more. We will say that in the city of New York there is a million dollars' worth of salt meat. It is taken from the warehouse containing it to the dock and put on board a ship going abroad. The ship is about to sail. A Government inspector comes to the ship and says, "Here, you have on board salt meat for exportation to and sale in a foreign country from the port of New York. Where is your certificate that the live cattle from which the meat came were inspected before the cattle were killed?" I say as a lawyer that if that certificate can not be produced the vessel can not get its clearance, and the meat must be taken off the ship. There can not be any doubt about it.

The Senator from Missouri, I think, was not so good a lawyer when he drew this provision as he was when he made the tariff bill.

If the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] will frankly say that there is a mistake here in the provision and that it ought to be withdrawn for repairs, that course will be entirely satisfactory. I think the committee ought to do that. I have no idea the Senator from Missouri will admit that he is mistaken about it, and yet there is the express provision of the statute that no ship having any salted, canned, corned, or packed meat on board shall get a clearance unless a certificate can be produced that the live cattle were inspected before they were slaughtered.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to make a suggestion? The bill is now on its first formal reading. We have reached about midway through the bill. No amendment has been acted upon as yet, and the reading of the bill has not been concluded. The amendment now under debate is not before the Senate for action at present.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Tennessee is mistaken about that.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is being read the first time, and the amendments of the committee are being acted upon.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendments of the committee are now being acted upon.

Mr. HARRIS. On the contrary, I understand no amendment has been acted upon.

Mr. CHANDLER. For once in his life the Senator from Tennessee is wrong—only once.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New Hampshire is right, I grant I am wrong; but that may generally be said as to differences between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself.

Mr. CHANDLER. For once the Senator from Tennessee is wrong about the parliamentary situation of a bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask for information, for I was informed that we had not acted upon any amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have been acted upon as they were reached.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I was misinformed as to the matter. The Senator from New Hampshire is rarely, but now strictly, in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the Senator's gracious apology in the same spirit in which it was tendered.

I had hoped the Senator from Tennessee rose to tell us how the owners of the present stock of salted, canned, corned, and packed meat in this country who want to export their property can get it exported. I know of no way. I can not see any escape from the result, under the proposed law, that they must produce a certificate that the live cattle were inspected from which the meat came. If I am right about it, then all the owners of the present packed meats of this country are wholly cut off from their foreign market. Not a barrel, not a thousand barrels, not a can, not a hundred thousand cans of the existing stock can get to a foreign market, and the whole market for the next year or two years, while the existing stock is being consumed at home, is to be given to these great packers of meat who will have the cattle examined before they are killed, have the meat packed, and send it abroad.

I do not think the committee intended anything of the kind, but that is exactly what the committee have done. They have legislated a reduction in the values of all the existing stock of meat products of from 10 to 15 per cent; and the profits to be made by exporting meats for the next two years will be put into the pockets of the great slaughterers of meat in the cities of Chicago, St. Louis, and Kansas City. I will say to the Senator from Missouri. I do not say that when the Senator drew the provision he had any purpose of that sort. I have no idea that he did. I should not think of attributing that motive to the Senator, because I know he is unselfish, patriotic, and liberal in all his legislative acts. But here is the fact, and it shows this condition of things.

I am merely reiterating the point made so well by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], the point which we have had occasion to make in discussing the recent Post-Office appropriation bill, that there is the utmost danger in legislating upon appropriation bills. It is not good business and it is not good politics. The present Congress certainly ought to be allowed to expire without the passage of any important bills except the appropriation bills and such financial legislation as the able and learned and harmonious Committee on Finance may submit for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this matter at length, but the fact is that the amendment which the Appropriations Committee finally incorporated in the bill came from the Committee on Agriculture, composed of able lawyers as well as able agriculturists. As has been stated by the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], it was drawn by him, and I think in addition it was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Generally, I am not much in favor of enacting general legislation on appropriation bills. I have thought all the time that we undertake to do too much of that, and I think perhaps I expressed myself in that manner when this measure was under consideration in the committee. But, in the estimation of both Houses of Congress, it seems to have become to an extent a necessity in order to legislate in the interest of the people.

So far as concerns the point made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that all the canned meats now on hand will be subject to the law, I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] answered it fully and completely. The proposed law does not apply to the stock now on hand, but becomes operative as to the products canned or packed after the bill shall have become a law. Let us see what the exact situation is, so far as I can discover. The bill provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle, the meat of which, fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed, is intended for exportation to any foreign country.

The phraseology, "fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed," which is inserted, I understand, is new legislation. The law as it stands upon the statute books provides for the inspection of live cattle, the meat of which is intended for exportation. I suppose the meat of the cattle can be fresh or salted, canned, corned, or packed, whichever condition it may be the desire of the men engaged in the business to convert the meat into. So the law as it stands now really seems to cover the same ground, so far as that matter is concerned, as the statute which we are attempting to enact.

But let us go a little further. The Senator from New Hampshire makes a good deal of opposition to the proposed statute because he says we can not find the cattle. Of course we can not find them after they have been slaughtered and the meat has been canned. But what does the present law provide with reference to canning?

The Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be inspected prior to their slaughter, all cattle, sheep, and hogs which are subjects of interstate commerce and which are about to be slaughtered at slaughter-houses, canning, salting, packing, or rendering establishments in any State or Territory the carcasses or products of which are to be transported and sold for human consumption in any other State or Territory—

Under such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture sees proper to prescribe. The present law provides for the inspection of cattle, sheep, and hogs which are to be canned for the purpose of being shipped from one State to another or one portion of the country to another. So the only difference I see between the present statute in that in that regard is that the second section of the act does not contain the words "fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed."

It seems to me that Senators are a little hypercritical in trying to find fault with the provision of the proposed statute. I understand the real purpose of the enactment of the law with these amendments is to provide a penalty for the violation of any provision of the statute as it stands upon the statute book to-day. As has been intimated by the Attorney-General, it has been found that no punishment can be inflicted for the violation of certain provisions of the statute, and the main purpose of the enactment of these provisions is to make them broad enough so that the violator of any provision of the present law shall be subject to penalty.

I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment. If there is any little thing in it which ought to be stricken out, let us amend it. But certainly the interest of the agricultural people of this country demands that we shall put our laws in such shape as to secure an efficient inspection of our meats, so that we can get into the markets of the world with them, as well as transport them from one State to another in our own country. That is what we are trying to do, and I think the amendment fairly accomplishes that purpose.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Does he understand that if we adopt the amendment there will be any provision in the law as it stands for stamping canned meats which are to be exported. I assure him that there will then be no provision in the law for the stamping of canned beef which is to be exported. That provision is only found in section 3 of the law as it now stands, which relates simply to the slaughter of cattle, sheep, and hogs which are to be the subjects of interstate commerce, transported from one state to another. There is not in the law now anything that provides for the stamping in any way of canned beef or corned beef, and there will not be after the amendment which has been proposed shall have been adopted. If that is the object which the Senator is trying to reach I assure him that the legislation proposed is inadequate for that purpose.

Mr. VEST. What does the Senator do with section 4, which provides that this meat shall be stamped?

Mr. PLATT. In the first place, there is nothing at present in section 1 or in section 2 which applies to anything except fresh meat.

Mr. VEST. But in section 4.

Mr. PLATT. Section 3 then comes in, and applies to cattle, sheep, and hogs which are to be slaughtered and their products transported from one State or Territory to another. Section 4 provides that the examination of cattle, sheep, and hogs, referring evidently to section 3, shall be made in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the carcasses found to be free of disease, etc., "shall be marked, stamped, or labeled for identification, as may be provided by said rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. VEST. The Senator does not read it as it stands. It says "the carcasses and products of all cattle, sheep, and swine."

Mr. PLATT. But it is the cattle referred to in section 3 which are to be sent from one State or Territory to another and not to a foreign country.

Mr. VEST. That is the statute referred to in section 2. You must take the whole act together and the amendments together. But if there is any doubt about that, just put in the words "as herein provided for in section 2."

Mr. PLATT. It still remains true that sections 1 and 2 of the act as it now stands were not intended to apply to canned goods or any other products of live cattle except fresh meats.

Mr. VEST. That is just where we are amending the act.

Mr. PLATT. And the amendment to it will not give a different construction to section 4 from what it had when the original law was in existence.

Mr. VEST. I hardly think that if Senators fully understood the object of this proposed legislation they would indulge in any hypercriticism in regard to it. This is an amendment in the interest of human health and life, and it is not intended to put money into anybody's pocket.

Mr. CULLOM. And it is in the interest of trade.

Mr. VEST. I suppose Senators here know that if I were permitted to say anything personal to myself I would be acquitted of having any complicity with the packing houses in this country, and I could claim that merit, if it is a merit. I was chairman of the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, of which the Senator from Connecticut is now chairman, and I was the author of the inspection law of 1890, and partially of that of 1891. Those laws have done as much or more for the cattle interests of this country and for the exportation of swine and sheep products than any other legislation which has been enacted by the American Congress in that regard.

I wish to inform the Senator from Connecticut that a singular thing happened in regard to these amendments. He alluded to the fact that the amendments ought to have gone to the committee of which he is chairman and of which I was formerly chairman. When I introduced these amendments I asked that they be referred to the Select Committee on Meat Products, of which the Senator is chairman, and that was the order of the Senate; but by mistake the clerks of the Senate sent the amendments to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and they were reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I supposed, until I found that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had possession of the amendments, that the committee of which the Senator is chairman would consider and report upon them. So much for that, if Senatorial courtesy is involved, as it generally seems to be.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, I had no feeling on that subject. I was speaking rather playfully so far as the fact that the amendments were not referred to my committee is concerned.

Mr. VEST. Not only that; but I go further, and say that I looked for the Senator from Connecticut, who happened to be out of the Chamber on public business, in order to confer with him and to explain to him the necessity for this amendment to the inspection laws. I was surprised when I learned from the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that the amendments had gone before his committee. As a matter of course the point of order could not be raised upon the amendments whether they come from one committee or another.

Now, in regard to the criticism of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], I do not think as a lawyer (and I am willing to submit it to any lawyer here) that that criticism is a just one, because this law would apply to cattle slaughtered after the act takes effect. But in order to remove any difficulty in regard to that, I propose, in line 14, between the words "beef" and "for exportation," to insert the words "being the meat of cattle killed after the passage of this act." That, as a matter of course, would relieve the act from any criticism in regard to the stock on hand; but as a matter of fact (and I have given some attention to this subject), that criticism amounts to nothing, because the canned goods that are intended for export are not, on account of their nature, kept in large bulk on hand. They are shipped almost as soon as they are prepared when they go to a foreign market.

This amendment was called for by the Secretary of Agriculture. Any Senator who has paid any attention to the matter will see in the newspapers from day to day where people have died from eating poisoned canned goods. The gases that accumulate from poisoned or spoiled meat are deadly to human life.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri why the law has not been amended so as to make it broad enough to cover all meats, whether exported or whether consumed at home.

Mr. VEST. That was intended to be the law at first, but like all new statutes its operation developed the necessity for serious amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the language of the amendment in section 2, line 6, on page 15, where the words "fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed" have been inserted. I ask him if he expects that to be an enlargement of the statute as it now stands?

Mr. VEST. I do.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator understand that the enumeration of these specific kinds of meat is a limitation rather than an enlargement?

Mr. VEST. Not at all. I do not think it limits it, because it makes the definition more extensive than it was in the original act.

Mr. ALLEN. For instance, the amendment as it now stands would not cover smoked meats or meat that is cured in any other form than salted, canned, corned, or packed, according to the common understanding of those terms. So the words are words of limitation.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Nebraska will turn to the original act of which this is amendatory he will see that it does enlarge the meaning of it.

Mr. ALLEN. But what I call the Senator's attention to is that these are words of limitation rather than of enlargement of the former statute.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will turn to the original statute he will see that it is not narrowing the meaning of the act, but it is an enlargement of it.

Mr. ALLEN. The original statute in section 2 provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle the meat of which is intended for exportation to any foreign country at such times, etc.

The amendment proposed is to insert the words, "fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed." Those are words of limitation, not words of enlargement. Meat covers the entire question; it is the generic word, and "salted, canned, corned, or packed" are words of limitation; and if meat can be said to exist in any other form except in these enumerated forms, then that meat is not covered by the proposed amendment.

Mr. VEST. In the original act the words used are "all live cattle the meat of which," and that is construed by exporters and by the Department of Agriculture to be the fresh meats, the trade classification being salted meats, and of course the canned goods are composed of meat. But there is a specific meaning of the words "canned goods." It is the meat put up in cans and prepared for exportation.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator please, if the word "cured"—

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to putting that word in if the Senator thinks it necessary.

Mr. ALLEN. It seems to me that would probably reach the entire question.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no objection to the insertion of that word.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to it. Let it read "cured, smoked, or otherwise prepared." I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it read "fresh, salted, canned, corned, cured, or packed."

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to putting that in. Anyone who has paid any attention to this matter will see in the public press from week to week, if not from day to day, statements that persons have been poisoned by these canned goods. Whole families have been destroyed by using these canned goods which have not been inspected.

Mr. CULLOM. In this country, too.

Mr. VEST. In the United States.

Now, I was astonished to hear the chairman of the Committee on Meat Products talk about private citizens preparing these meats for export. There are no goods put up for export in this country by individuals who have no packing houses. They all come from the packing houses. If Senators will take the trouble to look at the testimony that was taken by the Committee on Meat Products at the time when I was chairman of it there will be found some disgusting evidence in regard to the quality of the meat which was put up in cans prior to the passage of the inspection act at the great packing houses in Chicago, some of it being so rotten that the gas caused the top of the cans to be blown off. Yet those canned meats were sent through the country and used in families and at hotels and boarding houses.

This amendment is intended to make more stringent the provisions which require that all meats canned or otherwise salted or packed shall come originally from sound meat and from animals that are not afflicted with any of the disorders and diseases that contaminate and poison their flesh. Is it possible that any Senator here upon any technicality should resist legislation like that? Is it possible that we are to be told that in order to protect a small quantity of canned goods now on hand (if that could be a legitimate construction of the law) this amendment should be defeated? The amendment was passed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture. If it can be made more stringent I hope it will be done, because the sole object is to prevent fraud and prevent the preparing either for this market or the market abroad of canned goods which are deleterious to human health and life.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that so far as I am concerned I am heartily in favor of this amendment and the policy of the amendment, but I want the language sufficiently comprehensive to cover every form.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection. I thought it did cover it when it specifies fresh meats, and then "salted, canned, corned, or packed."

Mr. GEORGE. "Cured."

Mr. VEST. "Cured, smoked, or prepared in any other way."

Mr. ALLEN. Put in the word "cured."

Mr. VEST. "Cured" as a matter of course; I am entirely willing.

Mr. CULLOM. That was put in by consent a while ago.

Mr. VEST. Now, I wish to call attention to section 4, where there is an important amendment. The Secretary of Agriculture called our attention to the fact that there were persons in the country who were simulating if not counterfeiting the labels prepared by the meat division or bureau of the Agricultural Department. They never had their canned goods inspected, and yet they had these labels prepared by themselves certifying that the goods had been inspected. These simulated goods, as I may term them, were sold in this country and sent abroad. The Attorney-General states that there was no law to punish this practice, and section 4 is intended to meet that case.

Does anybody object to that? Is it possible that a man shall be protected in putting a lie upon his goods and saying that they are pure and have been inspected by the United States when they have not been? Is it possible that any man wants to be accessory to putting into the stomachs of the people of this country a fraud, a lie of that sort?

Mr. CULLOM. And poison.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I can not see any objection to these amendments, only they are too narrow. If Senators will, in the spirit in which they are drawn, assist us to make them more stringent and more potent they will be entitled to the gratitude of every consumer in the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I will state that the clerks have called my attention to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. They do not know where it should come in. I propose to strike out the word "or," in line 6, before "packed," and insert after the word "packed" the words "cured or otherwise prepared."

Mr. VEST. That is right. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUTLER). If there be no objection that amendment to the amendment will be agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I will accept that amendment on behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment has been adopted. The Senator from Missouri suggests another amendment, the Chair understands.

Mr. VEST. I suggest an amendment to meet the criticism of the Senator from New Hampshire. In line 14, after the word "beef," at the end of that line, I move to insert the words "being the meat of cattle killed after the passage of this act." Then follow the words "for exportation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "beef," in line 14, page 15, insert the words "being the meat of cattle killed after the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CALL. I accept that amendment, so far as I can, for the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Missouri that the modification made in line 6 ought to be made in line 14, so as to make the section consistent.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not necessary, because it says, in line 7, "intended for exportation." I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri completely covers the specific objection which I made. I am very much obliged to the Senator for consenting to modify the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this matter at length, but I wish to say in behalf of the committee that the committee thought and I think it perfectly plain that the meat of cattle intended for exportation is still within the meaning of the act the meat of cattle even if it is put in cans or salted or packed, and therefore the amendment does not make any material change in that respect.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida whether the Secretary of Agriculture now under the law as it stands requires canned meats to have a stamp upon them showing that the cattle from which the meat came were inspected before being slaughtered? I do not think there is anything in the law that requires it. He may do it possibly outside of the law.

Mr. VEST. That is done.

Mr. CALL. I understand that the instruction from the Secretary of Agriculture is that that shall be done, and that the canners follow that instruction, but in some cases, as reported here, evading it; and for that reason this amendment was asked, that there might be a law made plain and definite and that they might be brought within the penalty of the law.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom this bill was referred for consideration, and had the honor of reporting to the Senate these amendments. The object of the amendments has been a subject of a great deal of discussion. It came about originally in this way: We discovered within the last year that there has been a good deal of difficulty experienced by our packers and the exporters of canned meats and cured meats with the laws of foreign countries. Whether the changes or the threatened changes in laws there are retaliatory in their character or what they mean we need not now discuss; but the truth is that our export trade in fresh meats and canned meats as well is somewhat jeopardized by reason of the changes in legislation or the threats of such changes abroad.

The head of the Agricultural Department, representing the agricultural interests of the country, very properly suggested such changes in the law as in his judgment would remedy this defect, so that there would be no further excuse upon the part of foreign legislators to assert that our meats were diseased, or that they were tainted in any way, or that the animals from which our meats were procured were diseased. With a view of avoiding that difficulty, and so as to make it entirely clear, officially clear, and to have this clearness properly certified, the Secretary of Agriculture called the attention of the committee to which I belong to the matter and suggested these changes.

There were a number of different amendments offered to the committee. I have one now in my possession that was presented by Hon. Mr. HAINER, a distinguished member of the House of Representatives from the State of Nebraska. Whether he is personally interested in the packing business I can not say, but he has a large constituency interested in the cattle trade. There is a very large packing industry collected about the town of South Omaha, in Nebraska, and Mr. HAINER understands the situation there very well. In view of the facts which I have been giving to the Senate he suggested an amendment providing for the inspection of animals whose meat is intended to be used among our own people here in the way of interstate commerce, and it was intended by his amendment to supplement the ideas of the Secretary of Agriculture. With that end in view I have here an amendment which substantially incorporates the views of Mr. HAINER, and I expect to propose it, to come in at the end of line 15, on page 16, when the proper time comes.

The matter is very important, Mr. President and Senators, to the people in that part of the country which I have the honor in part to represent. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] who sits before me, and his venerable colleague [Mr. PALMER], whom I do not now see in the Chamber, are perhaps more interested in this great question as representative men than any other two Senators upon the floor. Our object is to secure two things: First, to provide such precautions against the slaughter of diseased animals as will make it perfectly clear that none but healthy animals have been slaughtered for meat; and in two directions, one, for exportation to foreign countries, and the other for exportation from one State to another to be used at home.

The whole field ought to be covered, and in case these amendments are not broad enough to cover the whole ground, then let us take plenty of time, and after discussion provide the necessary amendments, so that there shall be no doubt left. We do not want to give any excuse for our neighbors on the other side of the Atlantic, nor for our neighbors in other States of the Union, to suspect, even, that there is anything tainted or diseased in the meat that comes to them from the great packing establishments.

Perhaps many Senators here are not familiar with the workings of those great packing establishments. The Armour establishment in Chicago alone occupies some 45 acres of ground. They employ over 11,000 people. They have 4,000 cars in their employment. They slaughter in the neighborhood of a million head of fat cattle every year, two-thirds of a million of sheep, and nearly a million and a quarter of hogs. All of this meat, with the exception of that which is consumed in the city of Chicago, is distributed through the different parts of the United States and shipped to foreign countries. The foreign trade alone of the Armours, of Swift, and of Morris, of Chicago, amounts to a good deal over $15,000,000. The distributive sales of the Armour establishment alone amount to over $75,000,000 a year. It is a wonderful business.

Mr. President, you may go to Texas, you may go to California, or to almost any portion of the country and you will see the cars of Armour or of Swift or of Nelson Morris carrying fresh meat to different parts of the country. Go down here to the depot in the city of Washington almost any day and you will see upon the tracks a number of cars, whole trains of cars, with this fresh meat. If we had such a snowstorm here as we had a week or ten days ago continuing for two weeks, we should have a meat famine in the city of Washington. It is so in the city of New York, and in all the great cities of the country, except in those cities where the packing establishments are situated. Because of the great necessity constantly existing for the dissemination of this meat and the changed conditions these things are not only proper, but apparently necessary.

What we want by these amendments is to provide all the safeguards that we can throw around our cattle that are to be slaughtered for meat used among ourselves or for exportation. That is all.

I suggest, if the ready and versatile Senator from New Hampshire has not already been satisfied with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, that he himself, always ready, always willing, who always has his wits about him, in an instant of time could draft an amendment which would cover the whole difficulty in this matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to state to the Senator that that amendment is perfectly satisfactory on that point. The difficulty that I labor under is that within a fortnight from the close of the session Senators who have not the enlightenment nor the opportunities for enlightenment which the members of the Appropriations Committee have are to be called upon to ascertain the merits of general legislation of the most important character. I for one protest against it. I think it is wholly and utterly vicious upon an appropriation bill to ask Senators who desire to vote with some degree of intelligence and conscientiously upon legislation to consider amendments of this character.

Mr. PEPPER. I had supposed, Mr. President, that the only trouble in the mind of the Senator from New Hampshire was lest some exporters should get into difficulty because they were undertaking to export meat from animals that had been slaughtered before the passage of this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator that I discovered, or thought I discovered, that this bill reduces the value of all existing prepared meats in this country. I disclaim the idea that that was intended. That trouble has been obviated, but I do not know how many more unwise things there may be in this bill.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will remain with us a short time, here is the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is an expert on this matter, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and several other members of the Senate who are now present, and we will enlighten the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. One represents Kansas City, Mo., and the other represents Chicago, Ill., and those cities are interested in this immense business of the slaughtering of cattle and the packing of meat, but I do not know that the farmers of Kansas and the farmers of the country generally, the small producers of prepared meats, want this legislation. How am I going to know when I am considering the propriety of furnishing the ordinary regular appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, whether they do or not?

Mr. PEPPER. Let me explain to the Senator why we want this provision in the bill.

The farmers of Kansas and the Northwest are fearful—and they have a good reason to be fearful—that the quantity of exportations of fresh meats and of cured meats from animals grown upon our prairies will be so greatly curtailed as to very seriously impair our profits. Now, we want to add what is necessary to be added to the existing statute, every precaution that will satisfy our customers abroad or at home that we have gone to the limit of our capacity in clearing out disease and clearing out anything that might possibly produce disease among our consumers, to give them clean fresh meat, clean salted meat, clean smoked meat, and sound meat. That is what we want to do. We simply want to improve the existing statute in order to effect that wise purpose.

I think the Senator from New Hampshire will agree with me that when we find an existing statute insufficient for carrying out any proper or necessary and wise purpose we may safely add to it from time to time, and we ought to add to it from time to time, and this is intended to amend the existing law. The Senator is lawyer enough, even if not a completed lawyer, to understand that those provisions of the law which are not in conflict with the law to be enacted will still remain.

Mr. CHANDLER. As an uncompleted lawyer, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he has spoken of smoked meat. There is no provision here for smoked meat.

Mr. CULLOM. Cured meat.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Nebraska suggested an amendment, which was accepted, to cover that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Exactly. That illustrates what we have to do here. We have to trust to luck that, with a dozen Senators on the other side of the Chamber and a dozen Senators upon this side of the Chamber, we shall at last get all kinds of prepared meats covered by this bill. I think this is vicious legislation.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator expect that any committee will be able to report a bill that every one will agree to on the first reading?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Appropriations Committee generally consider everything perfect which comes from them.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me—I do not wish to interfere with the Senator—I should be very glad to be allowed to have a vote on the amendment to-night, at least, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think the Senator had better ask for any agreement in regard to this bill at present.

Mr. CALL. I do not ask for any agreement. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know what shape this amendment may finally take, but I was about to suggest some of the defects of this legislation, as I view it, which I think, as long as the Senator has it in hand and has the assistance of the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators, attention should be called.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Kansas expect this amendment to be adopted to-night?

Mr. PEPPER. I do. I am endeavoring to enlighten the Senator from New Hampshire, and I hope I shall succeed in doing that to his satisfaction. Of course I will suspend my remarks if a vote can be had.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. The certificate here provided for is not connected in any way with the condition of the cattle from which the canned meat is produced. The man who ships canned beef is obliged to produce a certificate which shall state the condition in which the cattle are found, not that they are healthy and sound and fit to eat, but the condition in which the inspector finds them. There is nothing which connects that certificate with the canned meat which it is proposed to export. A man who is exporting canned beef must produce a certificate that certain cattle were healthy, but neither the officers of the ship nor anybody else can know whether the meat or cattle referred to in that particular certificate were used in the packing of these goods for exportation. The certificate, to be of any value at all, ought to be connected with the article which it is proposed to export.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator doubtless has read section 2 of the amendment, which provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all live cattle the meat of which, fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed, is intended for exportation to any foreign country, at such times and places, and in such manner as he may think proper, with a view to ascertain whether said cattle are free from disease.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The object of the inspection is to see that the meat is sound and wholesome, and inspectors are to be appointed "who shall be authorized to give an official certificate clearly stating the condition in which such cattle and meat are found."

Mr. ALDRICH. What is that certificate? Not that the cattle are healthy, but in what condition they are found.

Mr. PEPPER. Then, the section proceeds—

And no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board any fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed beef for exportation to and sale in a foreign country from any port in the United States until the owner or shipper shall obtain from an inspector appointed under the provisions of this act such certificate.

I see the point the Senator from Rhode Island makes, and I think it is a good one, upon my attention being called to it. I supposed that the matter had been remedied. We now see the benefit of discussion, Mr. President. [Laughter.] By a very slight amendment which can be made in line 12, which I shall suggest at the proper time if some other Senator does not do it, the difficulty which is in the Senator's mind will be obviated at once.

Mr. VEST. Do not lines 9 and 10 of section 2 show definitely what is the meaning of that? They read:

With a view to ascertain whether said cattle are free from disease and their meat sound and wholesome.

That is the object of the examination, as a matter of course, and that is the certificate.

Mr. PEPPER. That doubtless is true. I think there is a good deal of force in the suggestion the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] makes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Lines 11 and 12 say that the inspectors—shall be authorized to give an official certificate clearly stating the condition in which such cattle and meat are found.

Not that they are healthy or sound.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it would be better that the certificate should show that the cattle and the meat were sound, and not diseased.

Mr. ALDRICH. But what possible connection is there between the certificate and the canned beef, or whatever it may be, which is proposed to be exported?

Mr. PEPPER. We shall not get through with that amendment to-night, and that difficulty can be easily arranged.

Mr. President, the next section provides punishments for violations of the law. I wish to give notice to Senators that after section 2 is disposed of and the proposed amendments are adopted I shall propose the following, to come in at the end of line 15, on page 16:

The Secretary is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may decide to be necessary to prevent the transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, of the condemned carcasses or parts of carcasses of cattle, sheep, and swine, or the edible products of the same, which have been inspected in accordance with the provisions of the act. Any person, company, or corporation owning or operating any such slaughterhouse, abattoir, or meat curing, packing, or canning establishment, or any employee of the same that shall willfully violate any rule, or regulation, made pursuant to this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

At the proper time I shall suggest that as an amendment.

I hope now that Senators will let the committee amendments, when they are properly modified, go through.

Mr. CALL. I hope we may have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest, in view of the admitted defects in the two sections proposed by the committee, that they be sent back either to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Committee on Agriculture for amendment, and that we take a vote on those amendments at some time to-morrow morning.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senate will not do that.

Mr. PEPPER. We can easily arrange all these little difficulties to-morrow morning.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will not ask that. This amendment has been fully discussed, and there is nearly half of the bill to be gone through with yet.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment has been fully discussed, but no two Senators who have advocated it have agreed as to what it is, and they have all agreed that it requires further amendment. I hope the Senator from Florida does not expect us to vote on legislation of this kind, admittedly imperfect.

Mr. CALL. I trust the vote will be taken on the amendment.
Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island whether he proposes to move to recommit the bill to the committee or not?

Mr. ALDRICH. The suggestion I made was that the two sections here be sent to the Committee on Agriculture, if that is the proper committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BATE in the chair). The Chair understands that to be a suggestion, and not a motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. A suggestion; not a motion.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator is serious about it—which I very much doubt—I shall ask for a vote on it, and call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order to recommit an amendment without at the same time recommitting the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. A point of order is pending, and I suggest—

Mr. ALDRICH. I have not made any motion. I have simply made a suggestion in the interest of having the amendment properly amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I will suggest to the Senator from Florida, in charge of the bill, that if there is any serious purpose on the part of the Senators to contest the question further, to give them an opportunity to determine whether it is exactly right or not, instead of its being referred to a committee, we had better go on with the remainder of the bill, and let these amendments be voted on to-morrow morning.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, as I stated before, the only object of this legislation is to make the law as full and complete as possible. In order to meet the additional criticism of the Senator from Rhode Island, I move, at the end of line 18, on page 15, of the committee's amendment, after the word "certificate," that these words be inserted:

That said cattle are healthy and their meat sound and wholesome.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not disposed to stand in the way of these amendments, but I suggest that their final disposition go over until to-morrow, and that in the mean time we proceed with the rest of the bill.

Mr. CALL. Very well, Mr. President, we will proceed with the bill.

Mr. VEST. Is there any objection to my amendment to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. CALL. I accept that amendment for the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated more clearly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 15, after the word "certificate," at the end of line 18, it is proposed to insert:

That said cattle are healthy and their meat sound and wholesome.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill. The reading will proceed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator should use the words which are used in the bill, so as to read, "free from disease, and their meat sound and wholesome."

Mr. VEST. Certainly. That is the object of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will excuse me for having a disposition to be accurate in the framing of an important bill of this kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. I am not standing on words.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let that amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to the end of the following clause, beginning in line 20, on page 16, and extending to the end of line 11 on page 17:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what countries or parts of countries are free from contagious or infectious diseases of domestic animals, and that neat cattle and hides can be imported from such countries without danger to the domestic animals of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend the prohibition of the importation of neat cattle and hides in the manner provided by law. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause correspondence and negotiation to be had, through the Department of State or otherwise, with the authorities of the Kingdom of Great Britain, for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced by said authorities which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States of America to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in said Kingdom.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in the course of the tariff discussion three years ago Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, when the reciprocity provisions were under consideration, found great fault with us for suggesting that the President of the United States should have a right by proclamation and upon ascertained facts to prevent the importation of certain merchandise. Here is a power proposed to be given to the Secretary of the Treasury, a subordinate of the President of the United States, upon the certificate of the Secretary of Agriculture, another subordinate of the President of the United States, to suspend the operations of the laws of the United States in regard to the importation of cattle.

Now I should be glad to hear the Senator from Florida, who, if I mistake not, was one of the Senators who discoursed in the most luminous way about the limitations put upon the Executive authority in regard to importations, point out to us what part of the Constitution it is which allows Congress to delegate to the Secretary of the Treasury a right to suspend laws of the United States in regard to the importation of cattle or anything else. I should like also to have him state, if he can, how this changes existing law and what the object of the provision is.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the object of the provision is perfectly plain and does not require any explanation. It is well known that there exists great danger of contamination of the cattle of the country in the importation of disease and the exportation of disease.

As to the question of the delegation of power, we have given it in every form to the President of the United States, and why not to one of his Cabinet officers? There is no provision in the Constitution which says that any power shall be delegated to the President of the United States, but we authorize the President by proclamation to arrange our treaty regulations with other countries in pursuance of treaties passed by the Senate and provide the time when certain things shall be done. We delegate the power of Congress in various ways. We delegate it to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The question which the Senator from Rhode Island propounds, while it might have some logical and technical foundation, has been so often settled in the history of this Government by giving to the executive department, under the direction of Congress, the power to do acts within the scope of legislative power, that it can not now be raised. How would you have it done? Here is a danger in the recess of Congress of the importation of disease which may destroy the great cattle interests. The subject has been discussed, as the Senator from Rhode Island knows, for years and years, and the great cattle interests of the United States have pressed for severe and rigid laws, so that when disease was discovered there should be a quarantine to prevent the importation of diseased animals.

How is it in regard to human life as to the importation of disease? We recognize that in all the laws upon the subject which have been passed. We authorize quarantine to be imposed, exclusion of immigration, exclusion of communication; and it is done upon the proclamation of the President of the United States. This is no more than that. If such action can be taken with regard to human life, certainly it can be taken with regard to animals. That is all there is in it, and I do not think there is any force in the criticism of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. The trouble with this provision, and the only criticism I see fit to make of it, after the statement made by the Senator from Florida, who in his argument has stated the exact position taken on this side of the Chamber in regard to the reciprocity provisions in the tariff bill of 1890, is that it gives to subordinate officers of the President the right to suspend or put into operation laws in regard to the importation of merchandise into the United States. I agree fully that this power must be lodged somewhere. I should like to have the Senator state just how this provision changes the present law upon that subject.

Mr. CALL. Changes in what respect?

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the law at present governing the importation of meat, cattle, and hides in this respect?

Mr. CALL. I think this provision is exactly a copy of the former appropriation act. I am not positive, but I think this act follows the language of the former act.

Mr. ALDRICH. There would certainly be no necessity for reenacting it if it followed the language of a former act. There must be some change in existing law provided for in this amendment.

Mr. CALL. It is a change in regard to existing law, because it authorizes the suspension by the President or the Secretary of Agriculture in the cases mentioned. That, I think, is not in the existing law. I will send for and procure a copy of the law, which is in the committee room.

I presume if the Senator from Rhode Island makes a particular point on it there will be no difficulty in accepting a suggestion to give this discretion to the President of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would be better to give it to the President, it seems to me, than to give it to a subordinate officer.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Rhode Island will move an amendment to that effect I will accept it.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 21, on page 16, I will move to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "President of the United States," and in line 25 to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "President of the United States."

Mr. CALL. I will accept the amendment. I understand it simply transfers to the President the power of suspending the importation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the agreement was that the committee amendments should be first acted upon.

Mr. CALL. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island. He does not propose to amend an amendment of the committee, but to amend the text of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 21, after the words "certified to," it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "President of the United States;" and in line 25, before the words "shall suspend," to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "President of the United States;" so as to read:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the President of the United States what countries or parts of countries are free from contagious or infectious diseases of domestic animals, and that neat cattle and hides can be imported from such countries without danger to the domestic animals of the United States, the President of the United States shall suspend the prohibition of the importation of neat cattle and hides in the manner provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the word "shall," in line 25, before the word "suspend," should be changed to "may," so as to leave that discretion in the hands of the President.

Mr. CALL. I accept that amendment also.

I will state that I have the original act before me now. The Secretary of Agriculture is mentioned in it, and this bill follows that act. The Secretary of Agriculture is the one to whom the authority is given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 19, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture may use not to exceed $40,000 of the amount herein appropriated for the preparation, printing, and publishing of farmers' bulletins, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to the end of the proviso, beginning on page 20, line 18, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct experiments in sugar cane and rice production on reclaimed swamp lands in some suitable place in the San Joaquin or Sacramento Valley, California.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the particular provision of the proposed act which is now under consideration to show to what extent this is becoming a paternal Government. We have been experimenting with sugar for some time. This proviso enlarges the experiment and takes in rice. We are to experiment upon the production of rice in various parts of the country at the public expense.

Mr. PLATT. And sugar cane.

Mr. ALDRICH. As well as sugar cane. I do not know but that it is the Senator's idea that it is the province of the National Government to go into all these matters.

Mr. GRAY. Whom is the Senator from Rhode Island addressing?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Delaware, who sits in front of me.

Mr. GRAY. I have not opened my mouth; I have not said a word about the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I called the Senator's attention to this provision which seems rather extraordinary; and I did not know but that the Senator might open his mouth and say whether he thought it ought to be put in a bill of this kind.

Mr. GRAY. We will first hear the Senator from Rhode Island on that proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest it is going a long way toward making this a paternal Government when we expend public money in making experiments in the production of rice and sugar cane in various parts of the country. That has not been done as to other agricultural products, wheat and corn, or in regard to industrial enterprises of various kinds. Why should not the Government experiment as to the cheapest way of producing cotton cloth or woolen cloth, if we are going into this matter.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Rhode Island will move to strike out the proviso I will discuss the matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I do not propose any amendment.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will allow the bill to be proceeded with. This is an old provision. It has been voted for by Democrats and Republicans heretofore. There is nothing new in it, and Senators belonging to both parties have voted for it on previous occasions.

Mr. CHANDLER. Rice never was inserted before.

Mr. CALL. I think it was.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think so.

Mr. CHANDLER. Here, by the introduction of one word,

"rice," authority is given to divide the appropriation for experiments in sugar production and to set the Secretary of Agriculture to investigating the whole question of rice culture. If that be so, and I think this is a paternal Government to the extent that it may well make these experiments, should not the appropriation be increased? It seems to me it should be.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 22, after line 18, to strike out:

Irrigation investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the collection of information as to the best modes of agriculture by irrigation, $15,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me? I propose to pass over this amendment for the present.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us settle it right now.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to give notice that I intend to ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment, and before coming to a vote upon the question I desire briefly to give my reasons for it. I am opposed to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Kansas to allow us to read the bill through, and then he can make his remarks. Let us proceed with the bill and get through with the reading.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Florida, I understand, proposes to pass over the amendment until the reading of the bill is concluded?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 23, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

Nutrition: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestion of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 2, to strike out:

Investigation and experiments with grasses and forage plants, division of agrostology: Field and laboratory investigations relating to the natural history, geographical distribution, and uses of the various grasses and forage plants, and their adaptability to special soils and climates; establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations; employment of local and special agents and assistants; collection of seeds, roots, and specimens for experimental cultivation and distribution; materials, tools, apparatus, supplies, and labor required in conducting experiments; freight and express charges and traveling expenses; the preparation of drawings and illustrations for special reports, and the preparation of illustrated circulars of information, bulletins, and monographic works on the forage plants and grasses of North America, $15,000.

Mr. CALL. Let the next amendment be stated. I wish to make a suggestion as to both amendments.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 17, it is proposed to strike out:

Investigations in relation to agricultural soils, division of agricultural soils: Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life; for the investigation of the texture and composition of soils, in the field and laboratory; the location of stations and the rent of a building, not to exceed $1,000 per annum, for office and laboratory purposes; the employment of local and special agents and other labor required in conducting experiments; the preparation of drawings and illustrations; for materials, tools, instruments, apparatus, and supplies, and for traveling expenses, freight and express charges, $15,000.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate to pass over these two amendments until the reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Why does the Senator from Florida desire to have all the amendments passed over?

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Florida wishes to get through with the reading of the bill to-night.

Mr. CALL. It is now 5 o'clock, and if we proceed to debate these contested amendments we shall be delayed beyond the usual hour of adjournment.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Florida whether it is the intention to have a vote upon any part of the bill to-night?

Mr. CALL. It is not. It can not be done.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to these amendments being passed over to be considered after the reading of the bill is finished.

Mr. CALL. If there were no objection to the amendments I should not desire that they be passed over; but as there is objection, and as there is going to be discussion upon them, I think we had better finish the reading of the bill first.

Mr. PLATT. I propose to resist as vigorously as I can the amendment on page 23, contained between lines 3 and 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks that the amendment be passed over. If there be no objection it is so ordered. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, line 22, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That part of section 2 of an act approved March 3, 1885, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," which recites "That no part of the money herein or hereafter appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person, as additional salary or compensation, receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employee of the Government," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

And insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to pay out of this appropriation to a dispatch agent of the Department of Agriculture in the city of New York not to exceed $400 for the fiscal year 1896, notwithstanding section 2 of an act approved March 3, 1885, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 21, in the clause making appropriations for miscellaneous items for the Weather Bureau, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-one" and insert "fifty-six;" so as to read, "three hundred and fifty-six thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for the Weather Bureau from $860,610 to $885,610.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I have conversed with a good many Senators here about the amendments on page 23. Everybody seems to think they ought to be disagreed to, and I shall be very glad to have those amendments disposed of now.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Mississippi to allow me to offer some amendments on the part of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. Let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that I do not desire to take up much time, but either my colleague or I would like to occupy a few minutes in showing the importance of the grass investigation.

Mr. GEORGE. I think everybody agrees with me about that.

Mr. PLATT. Nevertheless we should like to make some remarks on the subject.

Mr. CALL. There are other committee amendments to be offered.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] know which side the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is on?

Mr. PLATT. He does.

Mr. CALL. I desire to offer other committee amendments. On page 3, line 11, after the word "statistician," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of statistics: One statistician, who shall be chief of division, $3,000.

The amendment is asked for by the Department, and the committee agreed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 8, line 23, after the word "herbarium," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of botany: One botanist and curator of the herbarium, who shall be chief of division, $2,500.

That change is asked for by the Department and was agreed to by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 4, line 3, after the word "entomologist," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of entomology: One entomologist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 4, line 20, after the word "pomologist," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of pomology: One pomologist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 4, line 25, after the word "microscopist," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of microscopy: One microscopist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 5, line 7, after the word "pathologist," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of vegetable physiology and pathology: One pathologist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 5, line 12, after the word "chemist," I move to insert "who shall be chief of division;" so as to read:

Division of chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of division, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 17, line 15, after the word "paragraph," I move to strike out "492 of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890," and insert "373 of the tariff act of 1894;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what are recognized breeds and pure-bred animals under the provisions of paragraph 373 of the tariff act of 1894.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. That ends the committee amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill whether all of the amendments made by the committee have been disposed of except the amendment in relation to meats, the amendment as to irrigation, and the two amendments following with reference to experiments with grasses and agricultural soil?

Mr. CALL. That is the condition of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider a short bridge bill.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to make one further inquiry about the pending bill? I did not hear the Senator, when the bill was reported or when it was taken up, make any comparative statement as to the amount appropriated by the pending bill and that carried by the last appropriation act.

Mr. CALL. I have a statement of it in my hand.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senator will give us that information.

Mr. CALL. The report of the committee sets forth the information asked for by the Senator from Connecticut, and I submit it to be printed in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. CALL from the Committee on Appropriations on the 12th instant is as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8727) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, report the same to the Senate with various amendments and a statement showing the estimates submitted by the Department of Agriculture for 1896, the amount of House bill, the amount of the bill as reported to the Senate, and the amount of the appropriations for 1895.

Mr. CALL. I understand that several Senators desire to call up local bills, and I am willing that the appropriation bill shall go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. GEORGE. There seems to be no objection to disagreeing to the committee amendments on page 23.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to make some remarks on that subject either now or in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut wishes to be heard on that amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. VEST. I should like to make a suggestion. Possibly it is a little selfish, but I am very anxious to call up a short bridge bill and have it passed. Will the Senator from Florida allow the appropriation bill to lie over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. CALL. I am willing to do so. There is no possibility of obtaining a vote on any contested proposition this evening.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider a bill which is very short and which, unless passed now, will amount to nothing in the way of legislation. It is the bill (S. 2726) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Florida having the appropriation bill in charge consents that it shall be temporarily laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Missouri will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is understood that nothing further is to be done with the appropriation bill to-night.

Mr. CALL. The bill will lie over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understands.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT LEXINGTON, MO.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2726) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHROP & CHICK.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the passage of the bill (S. 2365) for the relief of Northrup & Chick.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to examine and adjudicate the claim of Northrup & Chick, late licensed Indian traders with the Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas, for supplies furnished said Indians for their subsistence, and to determine the amount thereof justly due to said Northrup & Chick, and whether there is any fund belonging to said Indians which can be applied to the payment of such claim, and, if so determined, then to report and certify the amount found due to said Northrup & Chick, to be paid from the funds of said Indians, to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be so paid by him.

Mr. PLATT. The bill has been reported from some committee?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. From the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It was reported from the Indian Affairs Committee after having been first submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is an amendment of the committee which perhaps had better be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, after the word "Chick," insert "without interest;" so as to read:

To report and certify the amount found due to said Northrup & Chick, without interest, to be paid from the funds of said Indians, to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be so paid by him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read at length, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OKLAHOMA CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5624) to authorize the Oklahoma Central Railroad to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri wish to speak to this matter?

Mr. VEST. I was about to make a motion for an executive session.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let us dispose of this bill first.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is a House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5624) to authorize the Oklahoma Central Railroad to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 1, line 8, after the word "Territory," to strike out "and through the Territory of Oklahoma;" in line 10, after the word "company," to strike out "on the east line of the Cherokee Nation" and to insert "at or near Sapulpa;" and in line 14, page 2, strike out the words "within the limit" and insert "at or near the west line;" so as to make the section read:

That the Oklahoma Central Railroad, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of Oklahoma Territory, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company at or near Sapulpa, in the Indian Territory, and running through the said Territory and the Territory of Oklahoma by way of Chandler and Oklahoma City to a point on Red River at or near the west line of the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, branches, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem it to their interest to construct.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I am not quite sure but that there ought to be another amendment made to the bill which was just passed. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and it can be looked into in conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

H. F. MENOUGH.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2377) for the relief of H. F. Menough, late postmaster at Rock Springs, Wyo. It is a bill of only seven lines.

Mr. VEST. I desire an executive session. What is the bill the Senator from Wyoming desires to have considered?

Mr. CAREY. It is a bill simply to allow credit to a postmaster for a registered package lost. It is recommended by the Postmaster-General, and it involves only $170. There are only seven lines of the bill, and it will take but two minutes to pass it.

Mr. HILL. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. CAREY. It is reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2377) for the relief of H. F. Menough, late postmaster at Rock Springs, Wyo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "transmission," to strike out "after" and to insert "during;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to credit H. F. Menough, late postmaster at Rock Springs, Wyo., with $171, the amount contained in a registered package placed in the mail for transmission to the Post-Office Department by the said H. F. Menough while postmaster as aforesaid, and which was lost during transmission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment that I may make a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the order of business. I am not sure whether the order requested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] in regard to business tomorrow from 1 to 3 was adopted or not. I should like to ask for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The information of the Chair is that it was not agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I ask unanimous consent that the time between 1 and 3 o'clock to-morrow be set apart for the consideration of unobjected cases upon the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HIGGINS. What time is proposed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From 1 until 3 o'clock.

Mr. CALL. The agricultural appropriation bill comes up to-morrow.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That from 1 to 3 o'clock the Senate shall take up unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALL. I must insist on proceeding with the agricultural appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. TURPIE. I object.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Indiana objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. VEST. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before submitting the motion of the Senator from Missouri, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 16, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSING OF WORKING PEOPLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the eighth special report of the Commissioner of Labor, which relates to "The housing of the working people in different countries."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 14, 1895.

PORT ORFORD, OREG.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letter of the Chief of Engineers, report of a preliminary examination of Port Orford, Oreg.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HUTCHESON, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness in his family.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, NINTH CIRCUIT.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1813, providing an additional circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the ninth judicial circuit an additional circuit judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present circuit judges therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GILMAN L. JOHNSON.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 840) to correct the muster of Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson. This is the bill the consideration of which was objected to the other day by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], who has since withdrawn his objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the record of Second Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson, late of the One hundred and forty-second Regiment of New York Infantry, so as to make his muster as said lieutenant date from the date of his enlistment in said regiment, and that he have all rights and emoluments due him thereby or by reason thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report in that case.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I can state the substance of the report (which was made by the gentleman from Iowa Mr. HULL) in a shorter time than it will take to read it. As I stated on last Friday when consent was asked for the consideration of this bill, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] interposed an objection. Mr. Johnson went into the Army in my company in April, 1861, served two years, the entire term of his enlistment. When he was mustered out of the Sixteenth New York Volunteers he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers, which I then commanded. There were not, when he reported in August, enough men for him to be mustered, and at my suggestion he enlisted in that regiment as a private, was later promoted to be sergeant and sergeant-major, and performed the duties of a commissioned officer at various times. He was in command of troops on Johns Island, South Carolina, in January, 1864, and lost his right arm in an engagement there. His whole conduct and services while in the Army were of a most creditable character. As no opportunity was likely to occur for his muster under the general orders then governing musters, he was nominated for a first lieutenantcy and was so commissioned, but the commission was lost for a long time in a vessel which was sunk in Hampton Roads. Later he was mustered as a first lieutenant and performed duty until the close of the war. This bill corrects the record by giving him the muster which he ought to have had at the time he joined the regiment off Charleston, S. C.

Mr. JONES. As I understand it, the effect of this bill is to fix his rank?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. What change does it make?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It makes the difference between the pay of a private or sergeant and a second lieutenant for the time he was borne on the company or noncommissioned-staff rolls.

Mr. JONES. What period will it cover?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It will cover perhaps six or eight months.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, CITY POINT, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. McETTRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 2595 to establish a life-saving station at or near City Point, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near City Point, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, in such locality as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

SEC. 2. That the character of the equipments and appliances of the station, the number of men constituting its crew, and the portion of the year during which it shall be manned shall be determined by the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I would like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. McETTRICK. I can explain it in a word.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report can be read; or if the gentleman prefers, he can make a brief explanation.

Mr. McETTRICK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, in shorthand, that this is a bill which proposes to establish a life-saving station at or near City Point, in Boston Harbor. All that is necessary is to authorize the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service to establish a station at or near this point in the most available spot for this purpose, with the necessary equipments and appliances, including a boat's crew there, for such months in the year as he may deem advisable. The bill has been recommended by the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service. It has passed the other branch of Congress unanimously. It is recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House. It has also been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for inspection. It involves the question of saving human life. There have been some forty lives lost at or near this point within the last five years. It was at this point, or near it, that five Harvard students were drowned last year. Not far from there a boat's crew containing eight boys in charge of their master met with a fatal accident. The boat was overturned, and after clinging to it for almost an hour one by one the little fellows were compelled to relinquish their hold until finally all, including the master in charge, were swallowed up by the waves. The expenditure required will not be great, and I trust there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. Does this bill provide that the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service shall fix the time of the men employed?

Mr. McETTRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. That is contrary to the present law, is it not?

Mr. McETTRICK. I think not. The bill has been submitted to the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service and is recommended by him. The bill, I repeat, provides "that the character of the equipments and appliances of the station, the number of men constituting its crew, and the portion of the year during which it shall be manned shall be determined by the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service."

Mr. MALLORY. The general law now fixes the portion of the year during which the men shall serve, I believe.

Mr. McETTRICK. Well, this is a special case. The accidents occurring at this point are usually to yachts and small boats.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the bill simply authorize, or does it direct, the establishment of the station?

Mr. McETTRICK. It authorizes its establishment.

Mr. DINGLEY. That, I believe, is the usual form.

Mr. McETTRICK. So I understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McETTRICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARTIN MULLINS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6071) for the relief of Martin Mullins.

The bill was read.

Mr. SAYERS. About what period of time does this bill cover?

Mr. DAVIS. This officer was in the service about ten years. The matter occurred before the late war. The object of the bill is to remove the bar of outlawry from this claim and refer it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SAYERS. I must object.

EDWARD H. MURRELL.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of Edward H. Murrell.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to hear some explanation.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill proposes to pay Edward H. Murrell, of Lynchburg, $1,409.34. The Committee on Claims of the Senate, as well as the corresponding committee of this House, have unanimously recommended the passage of the bill. It is for the rent of three houses in the city of New Orleans, the rent for which was collected by the Treasury agents of the United States and turned over to the Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. This was during the military occupation of the city?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; during the occupation of New Orleans in the years 1863 and 1864.

Mr. DINGLEY. Was this abandoned property?

Mr. SWANSON. Abandoned property.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why was not the claim presented to the Court of Claims within the two years allowed by law?

Mr. SWANSON. Before this claim was presented the limitation allowed by law had expired; and consequently the only way now to obtain relief is by special act.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are there not a great many cases of this class? And if action for relief is to be taken ought there not to be some general legislation? It appears that this is an isolated case selected out of thousands.

Mr. SWANSON. This is the case of an old man about seventy who was once a man of wealth. If action is to be delayed until general legislation can be had he will doubtless die before getting the money to which he is entitled and which is now in the Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. There are thousands of other claims of this class—cotton claims and others.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not undertake to say what objection might arise in other cases which the gentleman has in his mind. I simply want to say that this is the case of an old man, once wealthy, but now penniless; and this money belonging to him is now in the Treasury of the United States. If he must wait until general legislation for the relief of all persons of this class can be adopted he will probably die without getting a cent, and his grandchildren or other heirs may get some benefit from legislation such as the gentleman suggests. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. DINGLEY. If this were a simple matter of sympathy, and we could in giving this amount of money confine our action to this single proposition, the case might be different. But this is one of thousands of cases standing on the same footing, cotton cases, etc., cases of abandoned property in various cities occupied by the Federal troops; but payment in this case might set the precedent for payment in all those other cases.

Mr. SWANSON. Such other cases as the gentleman has referred to might involve the consideration of elaborate evidence. No such question can arise here. This specific money, the property of this man, was paid into the Treasury, being the proceeds of rent of property which he owned.

Mr. DINGLEY. If this claimant had been a loyal man he could have presented his case to the Court of Claims within two years after the close of the war and obtained his money. What has been the difficulty in this particular case?

Mr. SWANSON. The report states the matter fully. This man was pardoned; I do not know what particular difficulty arose in connection with the presentation of his claim. Affairs were very much unsettled during those two years.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think the Treasury will not stand any further drain this morning. I object to this bill.

OLIVIA AND IDA WALTER.

Mr. REYBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 409) for the relief of Olivia and Ida Walter, heirs and children of Thomas U. Walter, deceased.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Has this bill been reported from the House committee?

Mr. REYBURN. It has been reported from the House committee and printed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read: "$14,000."

Mr. SAYERS. This bill carries a pretty large sum of money. I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. REYBURN. The report of the House committee is short and will explain the merits of the bill better than I can do. I ask that the Clerk read the report.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDS) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred House bill 1323, beg leave to report: This claim has heretofore received the favorable consideration of the committee of the Senate and passed the Senate for the sum of $25,000. In the last Congress it passed the Senate for $14,000. The committee of the House acted favorably on both bills of the Senate, but they were never reached on the Calendar. The facts in brief are as follows:

In the year 1850 the Government determined to build the new wings of the Capitol. At that time there was no such office as Government architect, and the Government advertised for plans and specifications for the extensions, just as an individual would. Various plans were submitted, but that of Charles U. Walter, who had spent most of his life in Europe studying his profession, was accepted. The contract as architect was awarded Mr. Walter, and he accepted, and his pay for that special work was fixed at $4,500 per annum, as shown by the following letter of Mr. Stuart, then Secretary of the Interior:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, October 9, 1851.

"SIR: I have to inform you that your salary as architect of the extension of the Capitol has been fixed by the President of the United States at $4,500 per annum, to commence with the date of your appointment.

"I am, very dear sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ALEX. H. H. STUART, Secretary."

Subsequently, the Hon. Mr. Stuart says:

"This I feel very sure was a single and separate contract relating exclusively to the two wings of the Capitol and the corridors connecting them with the old building."

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Walter was not a Government officer, but he was employed and paid for the specific work above referred to.

Mr. Walter displayed such taste, capacity, and energy in the execution of his work, the Government assigned him to perform the following duties: To add wings to the Patent Office, which, when completed, became the great Interior Department building; the extension of the Treasury building; extension of the Post-Office building; to make the fireproof Congressional Library; to plan and personally supervise the erection of the immense Dome of the Capitol, which required his hourly presence; marine barracks in Pensacola; marine barracks at Brooklyn, N. Y., and other valuable public services.

These services ran through the period of fourteen years, from 1851 to 1865, and by the estimate of architects would amount to over $100,000. They embraced nearly the whole of Mr. Walter's professional life, for so arduous were his services and the strain on his mind that he was subsequently incapacitated for any important work.

It appears that Mr. Walter's desire was to live on the sum paid him for the extension of the Capitol and to reserve the amount for these important extra services as his compensation and as furnishing the means to support himself and family. After he had completed all these extra works he was informed by the Treasury Department that there was no appropriation for that purpose and he must rely on Congress. Then he filed his memorial. Since then he died, leaving his will giving to his wife and daughters his interest; since, his wife has died, leaving the two daughters, who are single and without any means of support.

Your committee thinks it the merest act of justice to allow the sum of $14,000, the sum fixed by the Senate, as it seems, at $1,000 a year for fourteen years, for Mr. Walter's labor in all these matters. Your committee feel it due to his memory to state that no work was ever more superbly done and that his work reflects credit on this Government, for which he comparatively gave his life. Therefore, your committee report back the bill with the amendment to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fourteen," so that it will read, "$14,000," with a recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to consider this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I object.

MOUNT VERNON MILITARY BARRACKS, ALA.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8680) granting the Mount Vernon Barracks Military Reservation to the State of Alabama for public uses.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Let us have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I ask for the reading of the report, which is quite brief and explains fully the nature of the bill.

The report (by Mr. GORMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8680) entitled "A bill granting the Mount Vernon Barracks Military Reservation to the State of Alabama for public uses," have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

Said military reservation is situated in the State of Alabama, near the Mobile River, about 23 miles northeast of the city of Mobile, and not near any village or town, so that its location is isolated. It was set apart in 1830 from the public lands for military purposes, and was immediately occupied as a United States arsenal. In 1873 it was transferred to the Quartermaster's Department for use as barracks for troops, and was so occupied up to November, 1894.

For several years the Apache Indian prisoners of war were confined there, but they were removed in the fall of 1894, and in November of that year the garrison was withdrawn and the post permanently abandoned.

It embraces about 1,600 acres of sterile land, which supports a sparse growth of timber, and is of very little value.

The improvements upon it are suitable for battalion barracks, and are very good of their kind, but unfit for any other than some public use, so that the land can not very well revert to the public domain for ordinary entry, nor can it be sold at more than a nominal price.

While the Government has not and probably will not have any possible use for the property, it must if it retains it maintain a guard there and incur very considerable expense in keeping the buildings and other improvements in repair, or else they will rapidly go to decay and ruin.

The legislature of Alabama, on the 8th of December, 1894, adopted a joint resolution asking the cession of this property to the State for public uses. The bill has been submitted by the committee to the War Department, and the Secretary of War, in a written communication to the committee, states that the property is of no use to the Government and recommends the passage of the bill.

There are many precedents for such a disposition of an abandoned military reservation. Among others within late years are the grant of a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, by act of May 13, 1884; of the Baton Rouge Reservation to a religious denomination, by act of September 30, 1890; of a part of the Fort Sisseton Reservation to the State of South Dakota, by act of October 1, 1890; of a part of the Fort Randall Reservation to the State of Nebraska, by act of March 3, 1893, and of a part of the Fort Randall Reservation to the State of South Dakota, by act of March 3, 1893.

The only condition that Congress has imposed in such cases is that the State or municipality to which the donation is made shall use the same for public purposes.

The grant has been sought by the State on that express condition, and the bill so provides and guards the cession. The committee unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

MR. PAYNE. I think, if the land is of so little value, it ought to be put up at auction, and it will not be a great burden to the State of Alabama to buy it in if it wants it. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE YELLOWSTONE.

MR. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6750) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana.

The bill was read at length, and also the amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

MR. STALLINGS. I demand the regular order.

Subsequently, Mr. HARTMAN having stated that the objection of Mr. STALLINGS had been withdrawn, and there being no further objection, the bill was taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bill as amended engrossed and read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARTMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

THE SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

WATERWAY BETWEEN THE OCEAN AND LAKES.

MR. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the Senate joint resolution (S. R. 130) authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning deep waterways between the ocean and the Great Lakes, and providing commissioners therefor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBUILDING TERRITORIAL CAPITAL, NEW MEXICO.

MR. JOSEPH, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back the bill (H. R. 8839) to approve an act entitled "An act authorizing the rebuilding of the Territorial capital at Santa Fe, N. Mex., which was destroyed by fire May 12, 1892;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECTION 220, REVISED STATUTES.

MR. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Joint Commission to Inquire into the Laws Respecting the Executive Departments, etc., for the purpose of having it printed. The bill has already been inserted in the legislative appropriation bill, and has passed the House. I desire simply to have the report and bill printed.

THE SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8879) to repeal in part section 220 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes.

THE SPEAKER. This bill will be ordered to lie on the table, and, with the accompanying report, printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

MR. BELTZHOVER. Mr. Speaker, I am entitled under the rules—

THE SPEAKER. This is not debatable.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. I do not desire to debate it.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman may submit a motion if he desires.

MR. BELTZHOVER. I am entitled to move to proceed to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to-day under the rules; but I wish to ask unanimous consent—

THE SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order has been made, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

MR. BELTZHOVER. I think the gentleman from Maryland will agree to this.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. I did not demand the regular order.

THE SPEAKER. The demand has been made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS].

MR. BELTZHOVER. I am entitled to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar to-day—

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will submit a motion if the gentleman desires to make one.

MR. SAYERS. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry first. In case the motion of the gentleman from Maryland should prevail I desire, if it be necessary, to reserve the point of order on the Naval appropriation bill; and I do so now.

THE SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOVER] desire to submit a motion?

MR. BELTZHOVER. I do; but pending that I wish to ask unanimous consent to fix this day week for the consideration of the Private Calendar. I do not wish to antagonize the Appropriations Committee—

THE SPEAKER. That is a day fixed under the rules for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

MR. BELTZHOVER. I understand that; but it is liable to be antagonized by the Committee on Appropriations, as it has been heretofore. Now, if it can be understood that that day shall be secured for the consideration of the Private Calendar, as we have but two Fridays after to-day left of the session, I shall be content if one of the three is given, without restriction, to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

MR. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Speaker, with the general deficiency bill pending and conference reports which must be acted upon I can not consent to that.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider appropriation bills.

MR. BELTZHOVER. I will withhold my motion until next Friday, when I will insist on it.

The motion of Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8835) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. Now I ask that the report be read.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

MR. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD. That will save the time of reading it.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred so much of the President's message as relates to the support of the naval establishment, to the estimates therefor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, beg leave to report herewith a bill (H. R. 8865) entitled "A bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," and ask of the House its favorable consideration.

The estimates as originally submitted called for an appropriation of $30,952,000. The total amount carried by the bill as reported is $31,807,023.83.

A comparative exhibit of the estimates and appropriations and amounts recommended in the bill is appended herewith.

The Bureau of Navigation estimated the sum of $125,000 for barracks for the use of the naval apprentices at Coasters Harbor Island. This item was recommended last year, but was disallowed, and also disallowed in the present bill, your committee being of the opinion that the construction of the barracks was not necessary and having grave doubts as to the policy of training naval apprentices in barracks on shore.

The estimates submitted by the Bureau of Ordnance have been increased in the sum of $1,151,081.50 over the amount appropriated in the law for 1894-95. The principal items of increase are $150,000 for a modern battery for the U. S. S. Hartford, $150,558.50 for reserve supply of guns, $150,000 for a reserve supply of projectiles, $242,500 for additional supplies of torpedoes, $75,000 for magazine at Craney Island, and $500,000 for reserve guns for auxiliary cruisers.

In support of the appropriation for reserve guns, ammunition, and projectiles provided for in the bill, your committee desire to call attention to the following language of the Secretary of the Navy, found in his annual report, pages 16 and 17:

"The guns required for the new vessels heretofore authorized are now so nearly completed that the construction of a sufficient reserve supply should be commenced without delay, and the Department recommends an appropriation to that end.

"The most elementary maxims warn us that if it be worth while to maintain a navy at all we must also have a reserve supply of ordnance and ordnance stores, and certainly we need not call on military science to tell us that our reserve of naval vessels is of no value without guns.

"Congress should give careful attention to the ordnance requirements of vessels that are liable to be called into service as auxiliaries in time of war, in accordance with the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1891, and May 10, 1892, providing that steamers registered under the provisions of said acts can be used by the United States as transports or cruisers. To mention no others, the Paris and New York, of the American Line, are now receiving large sums of money annually on condition that they hold themselves in readiness to serve the Government whenever demanded. When they hoisted down the English to hoist the American flag they were receiving pay from the British Government to hold themselves in readiness to serve that nation, and the English had guns and gun mounts ready to be put upon them at a moment's notice. We have now been paying subsidies to these ships for months, and have not a gun to put upon them.

"Under treaty provisions neither the United States nor the English can keep more than one small naval vessel upon our northern lakes. So far the two countries are matched. In case, however, a war should unfortunately break out between them Great Britain could promptly furnish guns and gun mounts to her merchant marine on the lakes, and though their marine is far inferior to ours in strength, the British might master those waters and do incalculable damage to our lake cities. If we had a reserve of ordnance and ordnance stores we could dominate those waters without question.

For the equipment of vessels $188,000 was estimated and allowed in excess of the appropriation made under act of July 26, 1894, under the Bureau of Equipment. This increase is caused by the commissioning of the Columbia, Minneapolis, Montgomery, Marblehead, Castine, Machias, Olympia, Cincinnati, and Raleigh, some of the new vessels constructed under the various acts of Congress. The coal expenditures for these additional vessels, less the amount expended for the Columbia, Marblehead, and Machias for the time they were in commission during the years 1893 and 1894, amounted to $242,000.

As a matter of convenience the committee have transposed the item of repairs and preservation at navy-yards from the estimates heretofore submitted under public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks, to the ordinary expenses under said Bureau of Yards and Docks. The appropriation, however, under said item has been increased, in accordance with the estimates submitted, in the sum of $100,000. The Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks inform your committee that this additional appropriation is absolutely essential in order to preserve and keep in something like fair condition the yards and docks of the United States Navy.

Omitting the appropriation above referred to for repairs and preservation, which has been transposed to Bureau of Yards and Docks, ordinary expenses, there is still an excess of $542,523.95 estimated for the ensuing fiscal year over the amount appropriated in the law for 1894-95, $280,000 being toward the completion of the Puget Sound (Washington) Navy-Yard, and an additional $100,000 of expenditures estimated for the Brooklyn Navy-Yard. The Secretary of the Navy officially visited Puget Sound and inspected the grounds, and is impressed with the importance of this work, and increased the estimates of the Bureau for this work.

Your committee have still further increased these estimates by the appropriation of $30,000 toward the construction of a tug at the League Island Navy-Yard, by an increased appropriation of $50,000 for the navy-yard at Algiers, La., and an appropriation of $30,000 for the completion of a tug at the Mare Island Navy-Yard.

Under the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery the estimates have been increased by $1,300 for supplying three naval hospitals with ambulances of modern construction to replace vehicles condemned as useless.

Under the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts your committee have increased the estimate submitted by $100,000, the sum being for provisions required for the increased number of enlisted men authorized under the provisions of this bill.

Under the Bureau of Construction and Repair your committee have appropriated the exact sum estimated for by the Bureau. The following is a table showing the cost and valuation of the naval vessels of the United States:

Cost and valuation of all vessels borne on the Navy Register.

June 30, 1894.....	65,386,431.25	1895	900,000.00	July 26, 1894	1.36+

Under the Bureau of Steam Engineering the estimates are $245,000 in excess of what was appropriated under the act of July 23, 1894. This increase is caused by the increase in the number of modern ships in commission, and further by the authorization of the construction of new machinery for the U. S. S. Chicago, and also for the construction of new machinery and boilers for the U. S. S. Hartford.

The pay of officers on the retired list, under Marine Corps, has been reduced below the estimate in the sum of $2,635 on account of a death recently occurring in said list.

The amount under pay of Marine Corps for undrawn clothing has been reduced $1,000, the committee being satisfied that the amount appropriated will be sufficient.

The mileage for marine officers has been reduced $1,000 and the law changed so that hereafter marine officers traveling under orders shall receive the same allowance as officers of the Navy. This will also simplify the manner of keeping these accounts in the Treasury Department.

The item for commutation of quarters, Marine Corps, has been reduced in the sum of $550.

Under quartermaster department, Marine Corps, the amount to be transferred for retired men, heretofore appropriated, has been entirely omitted from the bill. This is a clear reduction of $6,570.40.

Under alteration and repair of barracks, "special," the estimate has been reduced $2,500.

This increase was asked for by the Secretary of the Navy last year, but the committee having the appropriation bill in charge did not authorize the enlistment or make the appropriation; but the time has now arrived when this authorization can no longer be delayed. The committee have therefore authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enlist as many additional seamen as in his discretion he may deem necessary, not to exceed 2,000. Inasmuch as it is not likely that the whole number authorized will be enlisted during the next fiscal year, your committee have only appropriated one-half the amount estimated. The necessity for this legislation will be found on page 27 of the report of the Secretary of the Navy.

"I again renew my recommendation of last year that the enlisted force be increased by 2,000 men. A careful study of the services of the Navy for several years past convinces me that the number of vessels which must be kept in commission and ready for service is greater than the present enlisted force allowed the Navy will suffice to man. Calculations place this increase at not less than 2,000 men, and the law to authorize such increase should be so worded as to permit the Department to enlist them whenever needed.

"An efficient and economical service can not be carried on without a fair margin between the number of men absolutely necessary to man the ships in commission and the limit as fixed by law. New ships getting ready for service and constantly recurring emergencies necessitating the dispatch of vessels to foreign waters are causing demands upon the enlisted force which the Department will very shortly be unable to meet. The expense of maintaining the additional number of men asked for will be small in comparison with the results to be obtained and the value of public property of which they become the care takers and defenders.

"Our new ships, too, will be of little value without officers and men trained in exercising them. This should not, however, be for a moment understood to mean that the vessels now building and those the Department is asking for in this report ought all of them to be kept constantly in commission. Battle ships and coast defense vessels, as well as other ships, should be kept as nearly as may be always ready for service. Armored ships, however, and some of the larger cruisers, like the Minneapolis and the Columbia, it would be desirable to keep cruising in our own waters for not less than one year out of three. When not cruising they might be laid up in fresh water under care takers who would maintain them in condition.

"Experience is demonstrating that long cruises by our largest vessels are expensive, and there is no question but that smaller vessels better subserve all the purposes of cruising in foreign waters for the protection of American interests in time of peace. Economy is not to be lost sight of by those who would befriended the Navy. Its affairs should be so administered as to entitle it to the continuing support of a people whose patriotism may always be relied upon to respond to every reasonable demand.

"If the naval policy I have here ventured to indicate and briefly outline be carried out, there will be no necessity, unless in case of war, to increase the force of enlisted men beyond that now requested for many years to come. This will make the total number of men authorized 11,000.

This increase is made necessary by the legislation added to the bill providing for the construction of three additional battle ships and the 12 torpedo boats recommended.

After a careful and exhaustive study of our naval needs the committee is of the unanimous opinion that the additional vessels called for in this bill should be granted. The necessities of our geographical position have been carefully taken into consideration, and the committee has been forced to the conclusion that the continuation of the building of battle ships is of vital importance. These vessels, as represented by those heretofore provided for, are believed to be of a class equally well adapted for defensive and offensive operations, and are especially suited for the defense of our own coasts.

The question of the superlative value of the battle ship, as compared with any other type of vessel for warlike operations, has been well exemplified in the present war between China and Japan. In the battle off the Yalu River official reports received by the Navy Department and statements of officers engaged in this battle make it clearly evident that, had it not been for the two Chinese battle ships, the entire Chinese fleet would have been destroyed. In this battle the Japanese fire was, for the greater part of the time, directed mainly against the two Chinese battle ships, and is described as having been terrific, one of these two battle ships having been hit about four hundred times.

Notwithstanding this terrific fire and the great number of times that these vessels were hit, they were practically uninjured, or to so slight a degree that with an additional supply of ammunition they would have been enabled to engage in battle with practically unimpaired efficiency immediately after the fight. It is a question whether, if they had been properly manned and handled, the Japanese would have been victorious.

The committee is satisfied that all questions relating to the building of battle ships heretofore authorized have been settled in such manner that they will be, for their size, without peers in any foreign navy. In addition, an exhaustive investigation has convincingly shown that, although carrying the most powerful batteries of their class, their stability is all that could be desired. It is undoubtedly true that with enlarged experience and added facilities, we can now build battle ships more quickly and at less expense than heretofore.

In the opinion of the committee there is no necessity, at the present time, for the building of any other class of vessels than those recommended. The consensus of the best military expert opinion of the present day places the battle ship in the first line of defense against a foreign foe. Its tactical position is in the line of battle of the fleet, and it is distinctly the primary fighting element of a navy. The cruiser, of which your committee is satisfied we have a sufficient number at the present time, is tactically a scout in time of war, and in time of peace is the type of vessel ordinarily used to protect the country's interests abroad, and to perform general naval duties in foreign waters.

In addition to the cruisers in time of peace for use on distant stations and in foreign waters, especially in Asia, where their presence is needed ordinarily with but little show of force, small gun vessels are used. These cruisers and small gun vessels are necessarily required to make long passages and to remain for more or less long periods on distant stations, thus increasing the amount of fuel which they consume and adding to the repairs and precautions necessary to their proper preservation. While our Navy is small in this respect, it is not asked by your committee that any increase be made in the number of these vessels. The battle ship is entirely distinct from the cruiser—protected and unprotected. In time of war it is per se the fighting ship. With us it would be the right arm of national defense. In case of war it would have to stand in the outer line as the national shield against alien aggression.

An argument frequently used against battle ships is that their cost of maintenance is excessively great as compared with all other types of vessels; but this, your committee is satisfied, is not true. In time of peace, which will be the condition during the greater part of the life of a battle ship, it can be much more economically maintained than a cruiser of the same or even of less tonnage. During such periods it is only necessary to keep the battle ship in efficient condition for war, some with full but most with reduced crews on the home stations and in home ports. Consequently the expense for coal, wear and tear, and maintenance is naturally far less than in time of peace for the active cruisers during the same period. Generally speaking, war does not increase the cost of maintenance of the cruiser.

To sum it up, the battle ship in time of peace is not used, generally speaking, for cruising purposes; hence does not make long voyages nor remain for considerable periods in foreign waters, and can be kept during peace, if necessary, with a reduced complement, thus making its cost of maintenance necessarily very much less than that of the cruiser under the conditions above stated.

It will be instructive, in this connection, to look at the disposition of the battle ships of the principal foreign nations, which is as follows:

England, with her large navy, and possessions spread over the globe, has on home station—
In reserve, laid up, etc.....	36
In commission, Channel squadron.....	4
In commission, Mediterranean squadron.....	10
In commission, China station.....	1

Total.....

51

The Mediterranean squadron is practically a home squadron, as the command of that sea is absolutely necessary to connect Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Egypt, or the route to India.

France has on home station—

In reserve, laid up, etc.....	9
In commission, Northern squadron.....	1
In commission, Mediterranean squadron.....	11
In service abroad (Asiatic station).....	1

Total.....

22

Italy, Germany, Austria, Spain have not a single battle ship on a foreign station, and Russia only two away from her own coast, which two are on the Mediterranean.

The above tables show that practically the great powers of Europe keep their battle ships for service in home waters as a first line of defense and expend the bulk of their maintenance appropriation on the cruising vessels.

Under the circumstances herein referred to, and taking into consideration the undoubted necessity for an increase of our naval force as a preservative against war, the committee unhesitatingly advocate the laying down at once of three new battle ships. In this connection it might be well for the House to remember that the need of a Navy commensurate with our power has been advocated by some of the greatest minds this country has ever known. The following extract from a letter of John Adams, written in the year 1812, is deemed particularly opportune at the present time:

"The counsel which Themistocles gave to Athens, Pompey to Rome, Cromwell to England, De Witt to Holland, and Colbert to France, I have always given and shall continue to give to my countrymen, that as the great questions of commerce and power between nations and empires must be decided by a military marine, and war and peace are determined at sea, all reasonable encouragement should be given to the Navy. The trident of Neptune is the scepter of the world."

As to the 12 torpedo boats recommended in this bill, your committee can bring no more convincing argument to the attention of the House than the information contained in the following table of the torpedo boats either built or building by the foreign powers:

Aside from these considerations, your committee desire to particularly call attention to the following language, used by the honorable Secretary of the Navy in his annual report, urging the continuance of appropriations toward the upbuilding of our Navy:

"The estimates for this year for 'Increase Navy' will be the last of the large annual amounts required for the building up of the new Navy so far as the same has been authorized. It may, therefore, be stated that this is substantially the last payment on account of the vessels provided for by law. Unless, then, new constructions are authorized, expenditures under this head will fall with great rapidity after the next fiscal year, and thereafter entirely disappear from the annual appropriations. It is estimated that with the expenditure of not more than $750,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the existing new Navy will have been entirely paid for. Thus it will be seen that the expenditures under 'Increase Navy' will decrease at one bound from the amount asked for this year, $13,259,392, to $750,000, as above stated. The condition of the work now in progress is such that the present estimates are for an indebtedness which will be due before the end of the next fiscal year.

"Without considering the effect of the cessation of this work on industrial conditions, and disclaiming all obligation of the Government to engage in public works for the purpose of giving employment to any class, however deserving, I respectfully urge that from the standpoint of national defense it will be unwise to stop entirely the work of naval upbuilding; that wisdom and experience demand that the present well-organized, highly trained, and exceedingly efficient body of mechanics and skilled laborers engaged in the work of naval shipbuilding shall not at least be entirely disbanded. With the stoppage of this work many large plants now at work for the Navy will have to shut down either completely or in part, and their corps of skilled workmen employed in the various phases of naval construction and development be discharged and scattered, while the plant and machinery for the production of vessels of war must of necessity become idle and be allowed to deteriorate.

"I beg to recommend that Congress be asked to authorize the construction of three battle ships of about 10,000 tons displacement each, to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each, and 12 torpedo boats of from 100 to 300 tons each, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, to cost not exceeding an average of $170,000."

In conclusion, your committee can do no more than to quote as follows from the farewell address of Andrew Jackson:

"While I am thus endeavoring to press upon your attention the principles which I deem of vital importance to the domestic concerns of the country, I ought not to pass over without notice the important considerations which should govern your policy toward foreign powers. It is unquestionably our true interest to cultivate the most friendly understanding with every nation, and to avoid, by every honorable means, the calamities of war; and we shall best attain that object by frankness and sincerity in our foreign intercourse, by the prompt and faithful execution of treaties, and by justice and impartiality in our conduct to all. But no nation, however desirous of peace, can hope to escape collisions with other powers; and the soundest dictates of policy require that we should place ourselves in a condition to assert our rights if a resort to force should ever become necessary.

"Our local situation, our long line of seacoast, indented by numerous bays, with deep rivers opening into the interior, as well as her extended and still increasing commerce, point to the Navy as our natural means of defense. It will, in the end, be found the cheapest and most effectual, and now is the time * * * that we can year after year add to its strength without increasing the burdens of the people. It is your true policy. For your Navy will not only protect your rich and flourishing commerce in distant seas, but enable you to reach and annoy the enemy, and will give to defense its greatest efficiency by meeting danger at a distance from home. It is impossible by any line of fortifications to guard every point from attack against a hostile force advancing from the ocean and selecting its object. * * * We shall more certainly preserve peace when it is well understood that we are prepared for war."

The estimate under increase of navy equipment has been reduced $175,000, the sum appropriated being deemed sufficient to equip the new vessels that will be commissioned within the fiscal year.

Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy the committee have not provided for premiums for increased rates of speed or horsepower in the vessels hereafter to be constructed.

The committee have provided for the removal of the U. S. S. Constitution from the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., to the navy-yard, Washington, D. C., and have made the sum of $3,000, appropriated under the act of July 23, 1894, available for said purpose.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his report in support of this appropriation, makes the following statement:

"For many years past this vessel has been used as a receiving ship at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., has been housed over, and only such repairs put upon her as would render her habitable and in condition to float. Her present state is such that if this famous old ship is to be longer preserved as a memento of our glorious past a larger sum of money than that appropriated at the last session will be necessary. In view of the memories which are inseparably connected with this vessel, the Department believes that it would be wise for Congress to authorize that she be repaired and put in such condition as will enable the Department to preserve her indefinitely. Should such an act be passed the old ship might then be brought to Washington and kept at the navy-yard as an object of interest to the many thousands of patriotic Americans annually visiting the capital of the nation."

The progress thus far made in the development of our new Navy is shown in the following table:

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. If the committee will indulge me for a brief time I will explain the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Would it not be better to try to arrange about time for the general debate?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I should like to arrange to limit the debate.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman that he allow those who are opposed to the bill two hours, and he can take two hours if he desires.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. We may want more than two hours.

Mr. SAYERS. Put it at five hours; two hours and a half to be allotted to those in favor of the bill and two and a half to those who are opposed.

Mr. MONEY. I do not suppose those who are opposed will want more than an hour.

Mr. PICKLER. Let the debate run a while.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I will consent that the general debate close to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman from Maryland will give his attention I will say that some of the minority members of the committee have overlooked the fact that the House met earlier than 12 o'clock to-day, and we should not fix the limit of debate until they come in.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. That is very proper, and I think I will act on that suggestion. When the minority members of the committee come in I will try to arrange with the gentleman from Texas to limit the debate.

The first item in this bill is the pay of the Navy. The last appropriation bill appropriated $7,772,000. There is an increase of $349,329. The reason for that increase is that we have provided in this bill for the enlistment of 2,000 additional seamen, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. We have only appropriated for one-half that number, however, because we do not think that he will enlist that many men before the end of the fiscal year 1895-96. We have appropriated $349,329 in this bill, which increases the general establishment and pay of the Navy by that amount. The Secretary of the Navy recommended just double the amount, but we cut it down one-half. With that exception there is no increase under the general establishment and pay of the Navy.

Mr. SAYERS. Do you not propose to increase the personnel of the Navy by 2,000 men?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. We provide in this bill for the additional enlistment of 2,000 seamen, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, but we only appropriate for one-half of them, and the Secretary himself agrees that that is sufficient.

Mr. SAYERS. You provide for increasing the enlistment by 2,000 men, when the Secretary of the Navy tells you that 1,000 will be sufficient?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. No, sir; he does not say anything of the kind. The Secretary of the Navy asked of this Congress and the two previous Congresses—

Mr. SAYERS. If 2,000 men are absolutely necessary, why did you not appropriate for 2,000?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. We did not appropriate for that number because the Secretary will not get them all into the Navy by the end of the fiscal year 1895-96. Therefore the whole appropriation will not be necessary. In the next naval appropriation bill it will be necessary to appropriate the entire amount.

Mr. LOUD. Is the gentleman from Texas dissatisfied with the smallness of the appropriation?

Mr. SAYERS. If you want to know my opinion, I think the bill is about $10,000,000 too heavy.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The gentleman very well understands why this bill is as large as it is, I think; at any rate to the extent of $2,500,000. I will come to that later on.

The next item is the Bureau of Navigation. The appropriation for gunnery exercise is the same as has been carried in previous bills. For ocean and lake surveys the amount is the same. In the outfit for naval apprentices there is a reduction in this bill of $25,000, because there is an unexpended balance under that head still at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy. Recruiting, transportation, and contingent, $45,000. That is the usual appropriation. For the naval station for apprentices we appropriate $50,000. In the last appropriation bill we appropriated $30,000. The reason for this increase is that that is now a flag station, and the Secretary estimated for quarters for the commandant of the station. The estimate for the quarters was $17,000 I think. The committee reduced it to $11,000. For naval station for apprentices, in addition to the amount appropriated, the Secretary estimated for $125,000 for quarters for the naval apprentices, which was not allowed by the committee. The committee did allow the estimate of $20,000 for the naval hospital.

For the naval war college and torpedo school the appropriation is the usual one.

For procuring and producing ordnance materials we have appropriated $180,000, which is the usual appropriation, and the estimate as furnished by the Secretary.

For expenses of target practice we have appropriated $15,000, the usual appropriation.

For maintenance of proving ground, $5,000, which is the usual appropriation.

The first increase is for the battery for the United States steamship Hartford. We appropriated last year $150,000 for the hull of the Hartford, and now we are appropriating for the guns. It is the estimate recommended by the Department.

The appropriation for reserve supply of guns is new legislation to the amount of $159,558.50. Under the acts of Congress of 1890, 1891, and 1892 provision was made for subsidizing first, second, third, and fourth class vessels to carry the mails, with the proviso in the act of Congress that those vessels were at the disposal of the United States Government for war purposes as auxiliary cruisers.

Now, that is the law. The Government is now paying a subsidy at the rate of $2 per mile for mail facilities—for carrying the mail. While we have these vessels, and they are at our command, the Department says if the necessity required it and the Government chose to avail itself of the law there is not a single gun at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy to place upon either of these auxiliary vessels.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to know from the gentleman whether or not the Postmaster-General has not been canceling these mail contracts which have been entered into, and whether or not the gentleman knows the intention of the Postmaster-General regarding those contracts which have not been canceled?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. We have, Mr. Chairman, the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy that this appropriation should be made. The ninth section of the act of 1890 and 1891, after providing the rate of compensation for carrying the mails, provides that such steamers may be taken and used by the United States as transports or cruisers, and then provides how the vessels shall be paid for.

Mr. SAYERS. Upon what page is that appropriation to be found.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. On page 6.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the fact that we have not a single gun to be placed on these subsidized vessels, which are termed auxiliary cruisers, we have not, in addition, a single reserve gun for the Navy; not one. If we were to engage in war and our guns should be disabled—explode or an accident happen—we have not to-day, and never have appropriated for, a single reserve gun to take the place of a disabled gun or a gun that was destroyed. I think this is as wise legislation as this committee can well be engaged in. The same argument applies to the next item, to preserve the supply of projectiles and an additional supply of torpedoes.

Mr. SAYERS. Is that for the same purpose?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. It is for the same purpose—for a reserve supply of guns and projectiles and torpedoes. We only have, and have only maintained, the necessary amount of these supplies for peace purposes and for the common uses for which they are to-day kept.

Now, the item for an additional supply of projectiles is $159,558.50; for additional supply of torpedoes, $130,000. They are the amounts recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and they are the amounts carried in the bill. The next item is for repairs of the Bureau of Ordnance, $30,000, which is not an increase. The next item is for the purchase of magazines to take the place of Craney Island, $75,000; and that is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and also recommended by the Board of Ordnance in a letter of Commodore Sampson.

After an investigation we concluded to allow that $75,000; which is an increase in that Bureau. For the torpedo station at Newport, R. I., $60,000 is appropriated. The item for reserve guns for auxiliary steamers is $500,000. The appropriation made for the naval militia is $25,000. The contingent fund for the gun plant at the Washington Navy-Yard is $8,000. The appropriation for the naval proving ground is $20,000, and for the civil establishment the usual appropriation is provided. For the Bureau of Construction and Repair we have increased the appropriation from $900,000 last year to $1,000,000, which is an increase of $100,000. In the Bureau of Steam Engineering we appropriate for steam machinery $425,000; which is the usual appropriation. For the purchase and handling of material an appropriation of $240,000 was made last year; the amount appropriated is $315,000; which is the amount estimated by the Secretary of the Navy.

The incidental expenses for that Bureau are the same as last year. For steam machinery special we appropriated $230,000 last year and appropriate $400,000 this year, because of the increased number of vessels now being constructed. One thousand dollars is appropriated for contingent expenses, which is the usual appropriation; and for the civil establishment the usual appropriation is made.

For the Naval Academy the appropriations are reduced about $500; otherwise the appropriations are the same as last year.

For the Marine Corps the appropriations are reduced $5,175, without going into details. The pay of officers on the retired list is reduced about $2,025. In the pay of noncommissioned officers the reduction is $2,947. In the pay of retired and enlisted men there is an increase of $2,345. On undrawn clothing there is a reduction of $1,000.

In mileage of officers traveling under orders there is a reduction of $1,000. The law was that they should receive 4 cents a mile and traveling expenses; but that made it extremely difficult to keep the accounts in the Treasury Department, and was a hardship upon the officers. Upon the recommendation of the Department, we have changed that law so as to give them 8 cents a mile, which is the same as is allowed line officers traveling under orders, and the same as is allowed, I think, in the Army; but I will not be certain about that.

Mr. SIMPSON. Does that cover all the traveling expenses?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Yes, sir. I will explain that to the gentleman. The officers said that the Treasury Department always insisted on vouchers. An officer goes to the railroad station and buys a ticket; he can not get a voucher for it, and when he goes to the Department he has trouble in getting his accounts settled on that account. This 8 cents a mile will not cover expenses, but they would rather have it than have the trouble with the Treasury officials.

For commutation of quarters there is a reduction of $550. In pay of the civil force the usual appropriation is made.

The next is the Quartermaster's Department, and there is an increase there of $12,510. It is caused by the additional enlistments of seamen. Clothing, $80,000, the usual appropriation. Fuel, the usual appropriation. Military stores, the usual appropriation. Transportation and recruiting, the usual appropriation. Repairs of barracks, etc., a reduction of $2,500. Hire of quarters, the usual appropriation. Contingent expenses, the usual appropriation. I come now to armor and armament under the increase of the Navy. Last year we appropriated for this purpose $4,000,000.

When the appropriation bill of 1894-95 was prepared by the subcommittee and reported to the full committee, it contained an appropriation of $6,500,000 under the head of "Armor and armament," but that was afterwards reduced by the committee to $4,000,000. My judgment is that the reduction ought not to have been made, because that amount of money was due to the contractors. The material had already been furnished and the money was due, and the result of that reduction is that we are obliged in this bill to make immediately available $2,000,000 under the head of "Armor and armament," so that the Secretary of the Navy can make his payments between now and the 1st day of July next, the beginning of the fiscal year.

Under "Construction and machinery" in the last bill we appropriated $5,955,025, and in this bill we recommend $8,342,422. That is an increase of $2,387,397.

This bill also carries the sum estimated by the Secretary of the Navy for the new vessels provided for in the bill. I desire to state to the committee that these two items complete the payment of all contracts for the construction of armor and armament for every vessel authorized to be constructed under existing law.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. What particular item does the gentleman say necessitates an increase of nearly $3,000,000?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. It is under the head of construction and machinery. All the vessels authorized to be constructed under existing law, with the exception of the Iowa, will have been completed by the 1st day of December, 1896.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. And you say that the contracts have already been entered into which require this increased appropriation?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Yes, sir; this bill ought really to be $2,500,000 less than it is, and the bill of last year ought to have been $2,500,000 more than it was.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. So that this extra amount really is not a regular appropriation belonging to this session of Congress?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. No. It is an appropriation of money required to carry out existing contracts. Under the head of equipment there is a reduction of $17,500.

We have also made an appropriation in this bill to pay the earned premiums for the United States steamship Maine, amounting to $22,439.30. This is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy in a letter, in which he states—

Mr. SAYERS. Can the gentleman inform the House why those earned premiums were not paid at the time?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I have not received that information specifically.

Mr. SAYERS. Another question: Would not those earned premiums be payable out of the appropriation for the increase of the Navy? I desire to notify the gentleman that I intend to raise a point of order upon that item when we reach it in the bill.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's question I will read a communication from the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 24, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter to you of the 19th instant of Hon. T. J. Campbell relative to the payment to the contractors of the premium on the machinery of the United States armored cruiser Maine, referred to this Department by your instructions on the 20th instant, with a request for information as to the facts in the case and for such recommendation in the premises as the Department may deem proper to make.

In reply I have to state that the Maine was constructed in accordance with the authority granted in the act entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," approved August 3, 1886, and in the contract dated April 3, 1889, with Messrs. N. F. Palmer, Jr., & Co., for her machinery provision was made for the payment of a premium for horse power developed and maintained by the machinery on trial in excess of 9,000 at $100 per indicated horse power and for the deduction of a penalty at the same rate per indicated horse power for failure to develop the 9,000 horse power required, the payment of the premium being subject to the express condition that if the aggregate amount expended in the construction of the vessel and her equipment and machinery, excluding armament, should reach the limit of cost ($2,500,000) fixed by said act, the claim of the contractors must first be approved by Congress.

The contract trial of the Maine's machinery was completed October 17, 1894, and the horse power developed on such trial exceeded the contract requirement of 9,000 by 224,230, by reason of which the contractors earned under the terms of the contract a premium of $22,439.30.

The machinery of the Maine was preliminarily accepted October 31, 1894, but the premium earned as above stated was not paid to the contractors for the reason, as they were informed on the 19th ultimo, that the appropriation for that purpose had been exhausted. Inasmuch as the premiums earned on the Bancroft, the Machias, and the Castine, and not paid by the Department for the same reasons that the premium on the Maine's machinery has not been paid, were authorized by Congress, it would seem to be not improper or unreasonable that payment of the premium in this case should also be authorized.

The Department has abandoned the policy of offering premiums for increased speed or horsepower developed by naval vessels on trial, and no stipulation therefor will be made in contracts hereafter unless specially directed by Congress; but the premium provision in the contract for the machinery of the Maine was inserted therein and accepted by both parties in good faith, and fair dealing on the part of the Government would seem to require the payment of the premium earned by the contractors.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

HON. J. A. GEISSENHAINER,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

Therefore the answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas is that the money available for this purpose has been exhausted.

There are two other items in this bill that I have not yet mentioned. One is for a tugboat at Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal. This tugboat was authorized by Congress last year. When the last naval appropriation bill was up for consideration the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLISH] offered an amendment, which was adopted, providing for this tugboat and appropriating $50,000, but when they came to make plans for the construction of the boat it was found that one which would answer the purpose of that yard could not be built for $50,000. This fact was brought to the attention of the committee, and, Congress having ascertained the necessity for such a vessel at that point and authorized its construction, the committee took it upon itself to recommend an adequate appropriation for that purpose.

We also recommend an appropriation for the construction of a tugboat for the League Island yard, Philadelphia. We make this recommendation upon information which leads us to believe that it is advisable to construct such a boat for use there.

With this brief statement of the provisions of the bill and the necessity for the increases which it contains I will yield the floor, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy the attention of the committee for a short time in relation to this bill. I shall direct my remarks more particularly to the provision making appropriation for the "Increase of the Navy."

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract three seagoing coast-line battle ships designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and nine torpedo boats of from 100 to 300 tons each, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, at a cost not to exceed an average of $170,000.

Now, I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the increased cost that this bill necessarily involves. These three battle ships will cost the country when completed, with their armor, $31,126,000.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Is this an entirely new contract disconnected with any other contract?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; it is a provision for the construction of three new battleships.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to know the basis of the gentleman's estimates of $7,000,000 and more for each of these war vessels.

Mr. SIMPSON. I will come to that later.

The nine torpedo boats will cost $1,530,000, and the three additional torpedo boats mentioned further on in this same paragraph will cost $510,000. So that we have carried in this bill a total increased expenditure, in addition to the regular appropriation bill, of $23,126,000.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Will the gentleman let us have the items of that computation if he can.

Mr. SIMPSON. The items are, first the three battle ships, costing four millions apiece—

Mr. LOUD. Not exceeding $4,000,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, the expenditures on matters of this kind always run up to the limit.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman, if he knows anything about the Navy, knows that none of these vessels have cost over $3,000,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. I say that these three war vessels, including the armor, will involve an increased expenditure of more than $21,000,000.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The armor is included in the cost of construction.

Mr. SIMPSON. No; it is not.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Kansas will yield a moment I will have read at the desk a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, which I think sustains the statement the gentleman has just made.

Mr. SIMPSON. I gladly yield for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 8, 1895.

SIR: In reply to your telephone messages of January 29 and 30, requesting information in regard to the appropriation "Increase of the Navy," I have the honor to reply as follows:

1. Estimated cost of the armament of the three new battle ships referred to in the naval appropriation bill now pending in the House of Representatives is $7,215,000.

2. Of the $5,287,670 appropriated under the head of "Armor and armament" in said bill there will be used upon the new vessels authorized in said bill the sum of $20,000.

3. The amount of the appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armor and armament," that will be absolutely necessary to meet the expenditures which will be incurred up to July 1, 1896, upon vessels already authorized is $5,237,670.

4. Of the $8,342,422 appropriated in the naval appropriation bill now pending in the House of Representatives under the head of "Construction and machinery," the sum of $463,200 will be used for the new vessels authorized in said bill; also, that the sum of $7,879,222 is the estimated amount that will be necessary to meet expenditures that will be incurred under the head of "Increase of the Navy" to July 1, 1896, for construction and machinery upon vessels already authorized.

5. On February 2, 1895, the records show 8890 enlisted men in the Navy. Men are being enlisted each day; more than the 110 short of the quota are needed to supply a full crew to the Olympia, commissioned on the 5th instant.

In your message you only ask for the estimated cost of the armament of the three new battle ships, and in consequence I have not included in the above estimate anything for the hull armor of the vessels in question. The estimate for armament ($7,215,000) does include, however, the sum of $3,015,000 for armor known as "gun protection," which, according to a decision of the Attorney-General, comes under the term "armament," and as the estimate for the hull armor for the three battle ships is $1,911,000, the total estimated cost for armor and armament for the three vessels is $9,126,000.

Very respectfully,

HILARY A. HERBERT, Secretary.

HON. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SIMPSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill provides that these battle ships shall not cost, "exclusive of armament," more than $4,000,000 each. The letter just read discloses the fact that the cost of the armor will be $9,000,000 and more, making, as I have stated, an increased cost eventually for the construction of these ships and the torpedo boats of more than $23,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is worth while, perhaps, to consider whether it is absolutely necessary to have these battle ships constructed. Does the defense of the country require this large outlay? Does the history of naval warfare warrant us in going on constructing these enormous ironclad battle ships? It is a very grave question among those who are best informed on naval affairs whether the battle ships have come up to the expectations of the people as a means of defense.

The history of recent years, and particularly the last year, has developed the fact that they have not proved equal to the fast cruisers. In the late contest between China and Japan the fact has been developed at the battle of Yalu River that the unarmored cruiser of Japan was more than equal to the two great battle ships that China had in line during that contest. The vessels of China had the superior armament both in regard to the thickness of armor plate and weight of artillery, yet the swift unarmored cruiser of Japan, with rapid-firing guns, proved to be more than a match for the great battle ships. Mr. Herbert, the honorable Secretary of the Navy, in an article in the North American Review of last November, says:

Judging from what we see in the newspapers, the fight off the Yalu River seems to have created a somewhat widespread impression that they are, and that the naval battles of the future are to be won by swift, unarmored cruisers, armed with powerful guns and fighting at long range.

Recent events have developed the fact that this was a correct prophecy. I quote from the Scientific American of this morning an account of the sinking of those two remaining battle ships belonging to China by torpedo boats, proving that such war vessels are not a match either for the cruisers or for the torpedo boats.

It reads as follows:

The major part of the Chinese navy, including the two principal ironclads, the Ting-Yuen and Chen-Yuen, has also been destroyed. They were both engaged in the great battle at the mouth of the Yalu River, from which they escaped only to be sunk at Wei-Hai-Wei, after about ten days' almost continuous fighting, by the torpedoes sent against them by the Japanese. They were sister ships, and the most powerful vessels in either the Japanese or Chinese service, each having a displacement of over 7,000 tons and belted 14-inch steel compound armor. It is reported that the Chinese torpedo fleet subsequently attempted to escape from the harbor on February 7, but that they were pursued by a flying squadron of Japanese vessels and twelve of them either sunk or driven ashore.

That, Mr. Chairman, proves beyond dispute, I think, that they have not come up to the expectations which were indulged in as a means of defense. The little torpedo boats and swift armored cruisers are more than a match for these enormous battle ships, with their unwieldy bulk and enormous draft.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, does he consider the instance given there as a fair test, when he recalls at the same time the extent of the Chinese Empire and the great population they have as compared with little Japan? Is there not something in the human animal after all in the Japanese army, and something in the same animal as displayed in the Chinese army, that perhaps has much more to do with victory or defeat than the torpedo boat or the armored battle ship?

Mr. SIMPSON. I think perhaps the gentleman is right; and it shows the superiority and the wisdom of the Japanese in selecting the swift armored cruisers and torpedo boats instead of spending enormous sums of money in the construction of unwieldy battle ships. Japan has no battle ships with armor to exceed 9 inches. That we would call a light-armored vessel. But you propose here in this bill to construct big line-of-battle ships with these enormously thick steel armor plates.

Besides that, Mr. Chairman, such vessels are not seagoing vessels. They are not intended for such purposes, and are fit only for coast defense. Few nations avail themselves of the battle ships to send to foreign ports. Great Britain is the only exception of any of the maritime nations that sends any number of her 51 heavy battle ships to foreign ports. They are used mainly for coast defense.

Mr. MONEY. If the gentleman will pardon an interruption, I did not catch his statement accurately. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the armored battle ships were not seagoing vessels?

Mr. SIMPSON. Not considered as such—

Mr. MONEY. Not considered by whom?

Mr. SIMPSON. Because the heavy armor plates make them top-heavy, in addition to the immense armament they carry; and what I have just stated with reference to the use of these battle ships is true of every nation except Great Britain, who sends a few of them to foreign ports.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is speaking now of the heaviest class of battle ships?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir; the heaviest armored ships?

Now, the only reason why we want these ships is to be enabled to use them for coast defense. Let us see how practical that is. This class of ships, of the displacement mentioned in the bill, is in the neighborhood of 10,000 tons; and they will draw probably not less than 26 feet. How many ports in the United States can vessels enter with such a heavy draft and be utilized as a means of coast defense? I venture to say that there is not a half dozen ports in the United States in which they can safely enter; and so, as a means of coast defense, they will be useless. For the protection of our long line of coast and the numerous small bays and harbors that indent it we want light-draft vessels, quick, active, speedy, and which can defend the coast by being able to enter the smaller ports, or those having less depth of water, with facility. So, I repeat, as a means of coast defense vessels of this class, light-draft vessels and swift cruisers, are invaluable.

But, sir, there is another phase of this question to be considered; that is, whether the battle ship when built will not be useless on account of the rapid development and discovery in the shape of inventions increasing the already powerful ordnance we have in this country. We go to work now and construct a battle ship at an immense cost, sheathe it with enormous steel plates, and then at once produce a gun that will shoot a ball right through her. We have to-day ordnance that will shoot through the most powerful ironclad that has been built.

I cut from the daily press the other day a paragraph which throws light on this subject. It says:

The Golden Gate is to be protected by three of the biggest guns in use in the United States. They will be pointed seaward from vantage positions on either side of the gate, and they are calculated to furnish a complete defense against any craft that might escape the shells which the new mortar batteries will send out to sea for the distance of 6 miles. These guns are as long as seven average-sized guns, and two men might easily crawl into the bore of one of the wonders.

Mr. LOUD. When is that to be?

Mr. SIMPSON. Right away.

Mr. LOUD. Well, we have heard the same thing for many years, and it has not come yet.

Mr. SIMPSON. Every man who has witnessed the tests of ordnance at the Indian Head proving grounds within the last year realizes the utter helplessness that these ironclads would exhibit against the modern guns now being produced at our gun factories. You have seen there a 10-inch gun knock into splinters the strongest and heaviest plate that is at present produced.

All of the recent naval engagements prove that the very best armor and the heaviest armor upon the battle ships of this day can not resist the tremendous power of the guns we now have in our possession.

So after this very large expenditure we shall probably find, with the inventions in regard to dynamite and torpedoes and different explosives, that the Government will have expended a large amount of money for a useless pile of iron and steel that will not meet modern requirements. I think it is a very dangerous course to pursue, in the light of what is transpiring, to tax the people of the United States for what I consider so very large and useless an expenditure of the public funds.

Mr. RAY. If the gentleman will permit me, following the line of his argument, it would be just as well not to have any ironclads at all, would it not, according to the gentleman's view?

Mr. SIMPSON. I said that in the beginning. Recent events have developed the fact that the light-armored cruiser has proved more than a match for the battle ship, and that under our peculiar conditions, with such a long coast line to defend, I think if we need anything at all we need more of the light, swift cruisers that can enter ports where ships of light draft can obtain entrance.

Mr. RAY. Following out your argument that you make, what is the use of any armor at all?

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not see that there is very much use in it.

Mr. RAY. The way that it struck me was that your argument tended to show that armor of any kind on these vessels was useless.

Mr. SIMPSON. I read an account of the battle between the Chinese and Japanese at the Yalu River, and there was one Japanese gunboat which was unarmored which stayed in the fight throughout. There were more than forty holes shot clear through her, and yet she remained in action. The men on board plugged up the holes as fast as they were shot through her, and she continued in action all through the fight.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Does the gentleman know that one of the Chinese battle ships received over four hundred shots, and none penetrated?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; and a torpedo boat came along and struck and sunk her, and the account said that she turned over and went down with her propeller wheel sticking up in the air. And that is about all they are good for.

Mr. RAY. As the penetrating power of our guns is increased, should we not also proportionately, as far as we can, increase the power of resistance from the ships themselves?

Mr. SIMPSON. There seems to be no limit to the increase in the force of propelling projectiles from rifled cannon. We have gone on increasing the thickness of armor, until to-day it seems that we have about reached the limit. There is a limit to the carrying capacity of ships. All this armor is placed above the water line, or very nearly so. It projects but very little below the water line, and therefore the enormous weight must necessarily rest upon the top of the ship. Any man who is familiar with vessels and the things pertaining thereto knows that a ship must have a part of the weight she carries down below the water line. Anything else makes her top-heavy and unseaworthy.

We have, as I say, apparently reached the limit. We have gone on increasing the thickness of this armor so that it makes such an enormous weight that these ships seem to be now unable to bear it. The history of the sinking of the British ship of war Victoria shows that she was top-heavy, and when a hole was cut in her and some water got in which ran over to one side it gave her a list which capized her.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. How much water?

Mr. SIMPSON. It did not take much to tip her over, on account of the enormous weight on the top of the ship. Even though the bulkheads were closed, the water coming in at one side gave her a list which threw the additional weight on that side, and she tipped over very quickly. It proves that we have apparently reached the limit of the capacity of the ship to carry any thicker armor plate, while we are going on increasing the piercing capacity of our ordnance. Therefore I think, as I said before, that, in view of these facts, it is extraordinary that we at this day should go on appropriating or pass a bill that will eventually necessitate an appropriation to complete these ships of more than $23,000,000.

Mr. LOUD. You approve of torpedo boats, do you not?

Mr. SIMPSON. If they are necessary.

Mr. LOUD. Then you do not know whether they are necessary or not?

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not know. I will direct my attention now to these battle ships.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman one question, and have a fair answer. I would like to ask the gentleman if his objection is not to the amount of the appropriation, rather than an objection to the construction of a navy, or rather than to the class of vessels carried in this bill?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I will give the gentleman a fair answer, as he wants a fair answer. I always try to give a fair and honest answer to any question that is asked me, as I see it. I am opposed both to the appropriation and to the ships, because, of course, the ships carry the appropriation.

Mr. LOUD. Which do you oppose the strongest?

Mr. SIMPSON. I oppose them both equally, because I do not see how any sensible man can separate the two; and I do not see any necessity for an increase of the Navy.

Mr. LOUD. That is a fair answer.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think we have a sufficient Navy to protect our interests both at home and abroad. Now, what do we want an increased Navy for? Do you apprehend a foreign war; and, if so, who with? There is no nation on all the face of the globe that would have any pretext or could have any interest in attacking the greatest nation in the world, and if we deal fairly with other nations we need not fear any war. There is but one country with whom a war might be had, and that is Great Britain, which is the greatest naval power on the earth. Her naval power exceeds that of any navy ever built. She must necessarily have a navy, because her commerce goes to every port in the world. She, by the system of trade she has adopted, has intercourse with all the world, and so her ships enter into every port. Therefore she has been compelled by circumstances to build up a very large navy to protect her great ocean carrying trade. We are in different circumstances. We have no ocean marine worth speaking of. Why, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] the other day, in a speech here, showed beyond question that we have to pay many hundreds of millions every year to foreign ships; and I think he made the statement that we paid the Germans also an enormous sum, and that it was a rare thing to see the American flag in any foreign port. Then why do you need an increase of the Navy?

Mr. LOUD. When your party comes into power, in 1896, when you will have this free trade which you have been speaking of, will it not be well to anticipate it, as it will take longer to build ships than to pass your free-trade bill?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing an appropriation bill which carries an increase of expenditures of $23,000,- 000, and does the gentleman want to divert the discussion from that to party politics?

Mr. LOUD. You were referring to England and her free trade.

Mr. SIMPSON. It is so, because of the different conditions of that country from those of this country, which I think is a perfectly legitimate argument in this question. England is confined to a small territory. Her people have been compelled to take to the ocean and to trade with all the nations of the earth; and therefore she, of course, has built up a large navy to protect her commerce from the navies of the other nations of the world who are engaged in the same kind of trade. England is also engaged in a system of gobbling up territory in foreign countries, and therefore she has been compelled, to protect her interests, to build this enormous navy.

I have been drawing a comparison between nations that are entirely differently situated. We have a large territory here, many thousands of miles in extent, over which a vast population can spread and find ample employment without taking to the sea. That may become necessary in the future, when the territory of this country becomes more densely settled.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that the shipments abroad amount to $900,000,000 a year?

Mr. SIMPSON. I am aware of that; and also aware of the fact that it is not carried in American vessels.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I understand that; but that is our commerce with foreign nations.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. But what would be the effect on the West if that were interrupted?

Mr. SIMPSON. There is no possibility of an interruption of that foreign trade, because the nation that attempted to blockade our ports would starve her own citizens.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, I want order in the committee. This is a very important question, and the gentleman is debating it with ability. I want to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. SIMPSON. As I was saying, the condition of certain different nations is such as to compel them to adopt different modes of occupation. I have called attention to the fact that Great Britain, confined to a small territory, had been compelled to take to the sea; and that is the condition largely of Germany, of Italy, and other crowded countries. They must resort to some means of livelihood for so large a population, and so commerce on the ocean has grown up under those circumstances and they have built up this enormous number of ocean marine.

They are prepared, ready and willing, to do the carrying trade of the world at a cheaper rate, it appears, than we can do it ourselves; and so, instead of building up our ocean marine under the present conditions, we have been compelled to employ others; and why have we done that? Because it is more profitable. When it ceases to be less profitable than building our own ships, then we will have an ocean marine, and then, under the better conditions that will exist, the necessity even of having a navy will pass away. I hope by that time that men will have learned the great lesson, of which this country has set the example, that the way to settle all international disputes is by arbitration, and peaceably, and not by cutting each other's throat with a navy or other means.

Now, if I thought this was necessary; if I believed that, for the protection of this country, the preservation of the property, and the defense of the citizens of this great Republic, this appropriation was necessary, I would not oppose it. But, as I said before, in the first place, recent events have proved beyond a doubt that the battle ship does not answer the purposes for which it was intended, as a means of defense in warfare, and, in the next place, the battle ship is not an available craft for coast defense, particularly in this country, because many of our harbors are so shallow that she can not enter them.

Again, the rapid development along the line of explosives will, in my opinion, in a very few years make her a useless machine for defense. I believe that if it is necessary to increase our naval force at all, which I deny, we could expend the money very much more profitably in the construction of cruisers and torpedo boats, and for harbor defenses in the shape of improved ordnance. I am aware that there is always a large pecuniary interest behind these appropriations. There are many firms that are always anxious to get these contracts which involve such enormous expenditures of money, because whenever a firm or a man gets a fat contract from the Government there is ample opportunity to make a lot of money out of it; but we are here as Representatives of the people, and it is our duty to see that their money is wisely expended if it is expended at all; and, in view of the present condition of the people, I think this is an unwarranted expenditure. The cry is coming up from all over the country that there are many hundreds of thousands of our people idle and many of them on the verge of starvation. Even in this capital of the nation we are appropriating money to keep poor people from starving—

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman has just made a remark which is capable of misconstruction. I do not presume that he means to impute to the Navy Department any such motive as a desire to supply contractors with fat jobs?

Mr. SIMPSON. Not at all. I believe the Navy Department is entirely honest.

Mr. MONEY. Then I understand that the imputation simply rests upon the members of Congress who favor these appropriations.

Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman will remember—it must be fresh in his memory—that a short time ago, under a contract with Mr. Carnegie for armor plates for these battle ships, it was found that many of the plates furnished were defective, and that apparently a conspiracy had been entered into between Mr. Carnegie and some of his employees to put off upon the Government plates that were full of blowholes and other defects, and we all know that Mr. Carnegie compromised with the present Administration by paying back to the people some hundreds of thousands of dollars. Does the gentleman remember that?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, that is what led me to make the remark to which the gentleman has called attention; for it seems impossible, where these large appropriations for the construction of war ships are concerned, involving great quantities and a great variety of materials—it seems impossible for the Government in such cases to protect itself against fraud. That is one element that I take into consideration in voting on these appropriations; and it is our duty to take that into consideration, because these constructions involve an enormous expenditure, which ought to be saved to the people if possible.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to inquire if the gentleman thinks a Navy is necessary at all to this country?

Mr. SIMPSON. I suppose it is, under present conditions.

Mr. MALLORY. Another question. Has the gentleman any idea of the number of vessels that would be required for a Navy for this country?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have not informed myself sufficiently in connection with the matter to answer that question. But the thing I am satisfied about—because I have taken some pains to inform myself upon it—is that we have reached the limit of building battle ships, and that to go any further in that direction is unnecessary and unwise. I am satisfied that we ought not at this time to build any more of these expensive and unwieldy vessels.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Do you think the English Government is well "up" as to the class of naval vessels that ought to be constructed?

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not know what the English Government is well up to.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Do you know that that Government not long ago launched one vessel of nearly 15,000 tons displacement, and a day or two ago another one of the same tonnage—the Majestic and the Magnificent?

Mr. SIMPSON. I know that the English Government is like other governments; it does the best it can. The English Government has never yet had any practical test of the value of these battle ships as a means of defense. As a matter of fact, she has copied after us. The battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac set the fashion of building armor-plated vessels, and since that time, with very few exceptions, there has been no practical tests of the value of battle ships as a means of naval defense. The only exception I remember is in the war between the Chinese and the Japanese.

Great Britain goes on and appropriates enormous sums of money to build such naval vessels as other nations build, in order to compete with them. England always aims to keep ahead, so when any other nation builds a big battle ship she builds two. She feels bound to follow other nations in building ironclad ships so long as it is the accepted policy to build such ships. But why should this great Republic, occupying the position it does, isolated from all foreign powers, beyond the danger of any foreign invasion—why should this Republic imitate Great Britain or any other country in this respect? Great Britain dare not attack us. She is under bonds to keep the peace with us.

Every interest of Great Britain puts her under bonds to keep the peace with us. Why, sir, if Great Britain should throw her shells into any of our great cities—Boston, New York, or Philadelphia—she would in all human probability destroy more property belonging to British subjects than to American subjects. [Laughter and cries of "Oh, no!"] Mr. Chairman, if we can go on in the line we are now following it will be only a little while till Great Britain will own all the property here.

Why, sir, the Rothschilds, whose home is in Great Britain and who are represented by Belmont & Co., have now an option on the Treasury of the United States until the 1st of October, if we were informed correctly yesterday.

Now, who do you expect is going to attack us? What nation will have any incentive to do so? Why, sir, we feed the nations of the world. The minute any foreign nation attacks this country she cuts off her means of supply and support. Foreign nations would simply starve themselves to death if they should blockade our ports.

There is another view of this question. A great Republic like this, established by people who have held in abhorrence the ideas of extravagant armies and navies, should not ape the policy of the monarchical governments of Europe. Let me read something which will explain what this line of policy is bringing European nations to. Those nations have gone on increasing their armies and their navies until they are breaking the people down with excessive expenditures.

A cable dispatch which declares that Germany and Italy are considering a modification of the Triple Alliance is not surprising. The Italian monarchy is staggering under the burden of supporting an army and navy far in excess of the ability of the nation. The struggle to keep up appearances as a first-class military and naval power has produced general discontent, and in some instances driven peasantry and populace to insurrection. Italy has before her, therefore, a choice between bankruptcy and rebellion on the one hand and a reduction of her enormous armament on the other. If the Kaiser and King Humbert are to meet, as reported, to discuss the Triple Alliance, one subject of their discussion will doubtless be how to extend some relief to Italy without weakening the strength of the compact which binds together the powers of central Europe.

Now, what do gentlemen propose to do in this bill? They propose to go on in this same line of action, appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for the purpose of building up a navy, so as to be on an equality with those European nations; yet if the dispatch which I have just read is correct one of those nations has already shown unmistakable signs of breaking down under such a policy.

In the light of past history and of recent events shall a great Republic like this, isolated from foreign nations, removed from the danger of foreign conquest or anything of that sort, go on and tax its citizens by these enormous expenditures for building battle ships which, as I think I have proved, will be useless in the hour of need? That is a question for Representatives here to consider. As I was about to say when interrupted, our people are not in the best of circumstances. In every city there are thousand and thousands of idle men. Poverty and starvation seem to be the cry all over the country. The great agricultural interests, on whose shoulders this enormous tax must largely fall, are selling their products below the cost of production. Yet in a time of profound peace, with no probability of our being invaded by any foreign nation, you propose in this bill to increase our appropriation for naval expenses by more than $23,000,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good thing to give these idle men of whom he speaks something to do in building these new ships?

Mr. SIMPSON. That is the old, old process of taxing the people to make them rich. My sympathies go out toward the men who pay the taxes, the men who walk down through the corn rows on the hot summer's day, the men who work in the cotton fields, the men who toil all day long in the factories "where the wheels go round" till the heads of the workmen almost turn like the wheels they watch, the men who work down in the coal mines, all the laborers who produce the wealth which at last must be utilized to pay the taxes of the country. Those are the men toward whom my sympathies go out.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to say much more on this subject. There is one other phase of this question, however, which was brought to my mind by a question asked a while ago. What should we do if we should adopt the system of free trade and have a commerce, as the gentleman from California suggested? Sir, there was a time in the history of this country when American ships whitened every sea. They were the fastest and best ships afloat; they had the best sailors that ever manned a ship.

During the war period a system of high protective tariff was adopted; and this system, acting in conjunction with the raids of the Alabama and other Confederate cruisers, drove our merchant marine from the ocean. Since that time under the system which has been pursued we have not been able to recover our lost ground. It is my opinion that, if we should adopt the policy by means of which Great Britain to-day controls the great ocean-going trade of the world, we may, under the direction of statesmen wise enough to adopt such a policy in regard to our foreign trade, regain our lost ground. If such conditions should arise there may be some excuse for an increase in our Navy. But at present we have ample force to protect our scanty commerce in every land and to protect our citizens wherever they may be.

And, Mr. Chairman, I think at this time, in view of the condition of our people, in view of the poverty of the nation and the condition of the Treasury, remembering the fact that we are borrowing money at excessive rates of interest, it is a very unwise thing for us to do to pass the bill now before us, carrying, as it does, this enormous appropriation to build three useless battle ships and this number of torpedo boats, involving an outlay of some $23,000,000. I think it would be unwise, and that you who do it will be repudiated by the people at the next election.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me a moment, he has just made an assertion to which I would like to call attention.

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman remarked that one of the causes that had driven our shipping from the ocean was what he calls the high protective system. Does the gentleman assert that on the basis of any facts that he can present to the House?

Mr. SIMPSON. I think the protective tariff had the effect, as I have stated, of driving our ocean marine from the high seas.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then how did it happen that from 1835 to 1860, when we had the tariff that pleases the gentleman from Kansas, our merchant marine in the foreign trade declined more rapidly than at any time since the close of the war of the rebellion under our protective tariffs?

Mr. SIMPSON. I am not informed as to whether that is a fact or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a fact, I can inform the gentleman. I ask him how he explains that condition in view of the assertion he has just made?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman is not using facts in his argument now.

Mr. SIMPSON. I will state that for eighty years in the history of this Government we have had a constantly increasing tariff, sometimes going up and sometimes reducing a little; but the tendency has been gradually but constantly upward—

Mr. DINGLEY. It was not so between 1835 and 1861.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the gentleman will just let me proceed now. I say that the system of tariff had been gradually increasing until it culminated in the McKinley bill, which was the highest we ever had. Now, it is an undeniable fact that whenever we increase the tariff on the materials that enter into shipbuilding we necessarily stop shipbuilding. Why? Because the tariff was levied on every article that went into the construction of the ship from the keel to the truck at the top of the mast.

Now, not alone was the material that went into the construction of the ship increased, but all the machinery that was necessarily used in shipbuilding was increased in cost because of the protective tariff, and under any logical process of reasoning it must follow from these facts that the building of ships in this country would necessarily decline when the cost of every article that enters into the ship is increased and you must come in competition with the ships built by other nations where no such conditions apply.

England repealed her navigation laws and put all the materials that went into the construction of ships on the free list. The result was that she was enabled to build up her ocean marine and do the carrying trade of the world at such rates that it practically drove us from the high seas.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman will pardon me—

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand the gentleman to assert that the increase of duties on imports, which he calls the increase of protection, drove our merchant marine from the ocean. Now, how did it happen that from 1835 to 1860, during which time our duties on imports were reduced by the tariff of 1857, our merchant marine in the foreign carrying trade—while the coastwise trade increased—declined more rapidly than at any other period in the last thirty-five years?

Mr. SIMPSON. That is a very easy question to answer. I wish the gentleman would ask me something hard. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well, I will be glad to have the answer to this easy question first.

Mr. SIMPSON. Because Great Britain in 1846 adopted a free-trade policy. In 1856 she repealed all her navigation laws, and took the duties off everything that went into the construction of ships; and she was enabled, and did, as a matter of fact, build ships so much cheaper than we did or could do that she could afford to carry cheaper than we could, and drove us from the ocean. We did not have free trade here at that time or anything approaching to it in comparison to the absolute free trade of Great Britain. It is true that we had a little lower tariff than the tariff immediately preceding it; but still it was a burden which was levied upon shipbuilding. And it was not alone a high tariff on the timber that went into the construction of the ship, or the iron that goes into the shipbuilding, but on everything that went into the construction, material and wages. There was an increase of wages, increase of rent, increased cost of clothing, increased cost of everything that the tariff increased, and forced our shipbuilding to the wall by increasing the cost of the ship. In addition—

Mr. DINGLEY. But will the gentleman pardon me—

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, when I get ready I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, I do not blame the gentleman for keeping right on.

Mr. SIMPSON. I hope the gentleman will wait until I get through with a sentence. I notice that the gentleman from Maine is the last one on the floor who is ever willing to yield for a question. I have attempted many times to ask questions when he was discussing or debating important measures before the House; and I do not know any gentleman who is better informed than he is or better qualified to give information—but I could never get any from him. He always passed me by or waved me aside like a school teacher, and he will pardon me now if I give him some of his own medicine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman from Kansas think the gentleman from Maine is responsible for the ignorance he is displaying now?

Mr. SIMPSON. I think I will answer the gentleman before I get through. I was attempting to show the gentleman from Maine why American commerce disappeared from the ocean. It was owing to the fact that we had adopted a policy that compelled our people to build ships at a disadvantage, and made our ships cost us more than those of other nations; and whenever those conditions come about in a competitive market, like the carrying trade of the great ocean, when we have to compete with nations that build ships more cheaply than we do, the man who ships his products abroad will avail himself of the shipmaster who will carry his goods the cheapest. Now, I have shown, and it is of record in history, that we have been building ships at a disadvantage because of our protective tariff, a disadvantage in comparison with the people of Great Britain, who build ships under better and more favorable conditions.

Mr. DINGLEY. One important fact the gentleman has evidently overlooked in this matter. Is not the gentleman aware that by the act of 1873 nearly all of the materials that entered into the construction of vessels were put on the free list, and in 1890 the whole range was covered, so since that time this question of duty upon materials entering into vessels for the foreign trade has not been a factor in the question at all?

Mr. SIMPSON. Now the gentleman quibbles. There is no question but what he is quibbling on the question.

Mr. GROUT. Does not the gentleman from Maine state a fact?

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SIMPSON. No, it is not the fact, and I will tell you why. Because you misapprehend what it takes to build a vessel.

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, you mean to say that labor costs more here than it does abroad?

Mr. SIMPSON. You can not tell what I mean to say in advance of what I do say. [Laughter.] You may be very smart and wise, but I do not think it is possible for you tell what I am going to say now.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman state what material entering into the construction of a vessel has not been duty free since 1890?

Mr. SIMPSON. I want to say that during that period shipbuilding changed all over the world. We were going through the transition state from wooden ships to iron ships.

Mr. DINGLEY. We went through that before the war.

Mr. SIMPSON. We commenced to go through it about that time. We began to feel the effects of that transition. Now, the materials out of which ships are constructed are iron and steel. Does the gentleman mean to say that the construction of ships in this country has been cheapened by the taking off the duties on iron and steel? Does not the gentleman know that duties are levied on iron and steel in this country—a very high protective tariff—which enhances not alone the machinery which makes the iron and steel, but the iron and steel itself? And if you plant yourself upon the proposition that materials from abroad were put on the free list, you still have to pay the freight and the cost of transportation for 8,000 miles.

Mr. GROUT. That is what England has to pay.

Mr. SIMPSON. Another thing. Your protective-tariff system has increased the cost of living to every laboring man in this country, and increased the cost of labor necessarily, and therefore put your shipbuilder at another disadvantage.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You believe in cheap labor, do you?

Mr. SIMPSON. Of course the gentleman wants to make political capital to bolster up a barbarous system of protective tariff, and he is trying to take this opportunity of doing it. But in view of the fact that Great Britain, under a different policy of absolute free trade in regard to shipbuilding and navigation laws, has been able to wrest from us the ocean carrying trade, that fact ought to be sufficient to every intelligent man—ought to be sufficient proof to enable him to come to a wise conclusion as to the cause of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say again that I entered upon this discussion for the purpose of opposing the construction of these battle ships. I think that the committee and the members of the House ought to investigate this subject thoroughly before they vote this very large appropriation to place this extra charge upon a people already overburdened with taxation.

Let us go slowly. Let us wait a while, until science and discovery have proved beyond dispute whether those ships are really what they are claimed to be as a means of defense. There will be time enough in the future to build these ships if it is proved that they are superior to all other means of naval defense. Let us wait until the inventive genius of this country has determined whether we are not on the eve of inventing explosives that will make these battle ships useless. I think we ought to hesitate long before we adopt this policy of trying to build up a great naval power in this country.

If I understand the genius of this Government it was to establish upon earth and among men a free government ruled by the people, by law and by order, not by force, which a great army and navy means—a government by force.

We must set a better example to European nations; we must set the example of a peaceful solution of the differences between peoples, and thereby carry out the mission of the people who founded this Government. [Applause.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia was recognized.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Before my friend from West Virginia proceeds I would like the attention of the Chairman of the committee for a moment, with a view to agreeing upon a limit of time for the general debate.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. To-morrow at 2 o'clock there is a special order for eulogies on the late Senator Vance. I think it would not be at all out of place to let general debate run until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland ask that general debate close to-morrow at 2 o'clock?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. There is a special order for 2 o'clock to-morrow, and so far as we are concerned we have no objection to general debate continuing until that time. I do not want to close general debate without it is agreeable, but I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland in charge of this bill asks unanimous consent that general debate close to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOLLIVER addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia will have to give way, as the gentleman from Iowa wishes to be recognized, and being a member of the committee, he has preference.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON], but not in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia, then, is recognized.

Mr. PENDLETON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, with the greater portion of the latter half of the argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] with reference to his dispute with my friend ex-Governor DINGLEY, I am happy to say I agree; but I do not agree with his concluding proposition, that we should wait until somebody else has had an opportunity through the medium of war to test the question as to whether or not modern battle ships are likely to be of use. I have ever been a believer in the theory that the best way to preserve peace is to be prepared to maintain it, if you have to fight for it. If we permit ourselves to remain in a state which shows that we are not ready to contend with nations that are prepared to attack us, it is an invitation on our part for an attack from some one; but when it is known that we are fully prepared to resent insult, from whatever quarter it may come, when it is known that the United States is fully armed and equipped for every event that may come up, then the nations of the world will hesitate long before they will begin to insult this country or to threaten us with assaults of any kind or character.

I believe it is our duty to so prepare ourselves for attack that we shall not be compelled to await the result of wars between foreign countries. I have never believed in a strong army. I do not believe that, situated as this country is, there is any necessity upon our part to maintain a great Regular Army on an equality with those maintained by the great nations of Europe. We are thousands of miles separated from them by the waters of the Atlantic upon the one side and thousands of miles from the Asiatic powers by the waters of the Pacific on the other side. To the north of us is a small country, inhabited by a brave and civilized people, but so few in numbers that of their own volition they would never feel called upon to carry any dispute with us to the arbitrament of arms unless driven by the last necessity. South of us lies Mexico, as well as Central America and the States of South America.

Those States will never feel disposed to enter into a conflict with the United States upon land, because they know—and I say it in no boastful spirit—that in a conflict of that character with any nation on the continent of America this country would be absolutely irresistible. We could raise armies as Pompey claimed to be able to raise them in the time of the Roman Republic. By the stamp of the President's foot an army could be raised sufficient in numbers to repel any attacks that might be made by any of the powers native to this continent. We do not need any great army to repel an attack from Europe. The distances are too vast, the difficulties of transportation are too great, and the sources of supply too difficult and too uncertain for the maintenance of a successful land war with us by any of the European powers, and it is not probable that any of them will in the near future attempt to wage an offensive war of that character with us.

A small, well-equipped, and disciplined Army has in the past served all our purposes for defense, and it is not likely that we shall ever endeavor to carry on a land war anywhere on the Continent of Europe. This Army, with our numerous militia as a nucleus around which to assemble our volunteers, will answer every need for our defense.

We are under no necessity to allow ourselves to be led into any competition with the warlike powers of Europe as to the size of our Army, and no one would venture to propose such a competition. I venture to say that if it was necessary we could surpass any nation in the world in the resources needful for the support of a great army. My friend from Kansas has not made a fair comparison when he compares this Republic with Italy in the ability to support military expenditure. He tells us that Italy is bankrupt because she maintains a great regular army and a powerful navy. It is true. Italy is to-day, according to newspaper accounts, on the verge of bankruptcy. But what is Italy compared with the United States? Italy maintains near 300,000 regular soldiers, and sinks under the burden. We maintain near 30,000, and hardly feel the weight.

Italy maintains a great and powerful navy far beyond her wealth, far beyond her resources. Her navy is greater than any possible demand upon it. While she has a population of 29,000,000 we have a population of 65,000,000. While all the real estate and all the personal property of Italy when put together might probably amount to the pitiful sum of $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000, when this country counts her wealth and sums up her property we reach the gigantic total of nearly $70,000,000,000, making our people the richest nation of which history tells. There is no comparison to be made between the two countries; America rich beyond the dreams of avarice, and Italy poor to the verge of poverty.

Now, my friend says that we are unable to and can not afford this expenditure at the present. I see no reason why the country can not afford the expenditure. I see nothing in this that will indicate any increase in the permanent taxation of the American people. If I am not mistaken in my judgment with reference to the new tariff bill, I believe that bill is not only going to raise a far greater amount of revenue than now comes into the Treasury, but I believe that it will ultimately, within the next year or two, be so productive that the revenues under that tariff bill, and without any increase in the present rate of taxation, will far exceed any demand that may be made upon our Treasury by the building of these new ships, and will yield to the Treasury a very handsome surplus. There is to-day no real great strain upon our revenues. We are at peace with the world. If we ever intend to become a great naval power, now is our time. We have the time, the money, and every opportunity in our favor.

I am in favor of an increase of the Navy for many reasons. I believe it is necessary that the Navy should be increased. We have something to protect. We have more to defend upon the seas than many countries. If we had nothing to protect, then there would be no necessity for a navy. We have more to protect upon our coasts than any nation. My friend from Kansas argues that we do not need to create a navy for another reason apart from the expense. He says that we are not liable to find ourselves embarking in a foreign war. Now, I am no prophet and no son of a prophet, but I defy anyone to show any good reason upon which such a prophecy can be based, if we are to judge the future by the history of the past.

It is true that after the wars of the French Revolution had terminated in 1815, and the world for thirty years had failed to witness a great European war, many prophets as to the world's future, many people who hoped to see peace prevail all over the universe, began to predict that war would never come again, and that the nations might do away with cannon, with ships of war, with forts, and fortifications. But, Mr. Chairman, the people who made those predictions were people of the same character as my friend from Kansas. They were visionaries, doctrinaires, and idealists. They forgot human nature. They thought man was as he ought to be, not as he is.

They forgot that as long as the opportunity is given to man to quarrel man will quarrel; that as long as temptation to plunder is before him, and as long as his nature remains unchanged, so long man will plunder and fight. What has happened since 1848? The student of history will tell you that in the last forty-five years, with all our civilization, with all our enlightenment, with all the progress that we have made in the direction of the gospel of peace and humanity, there has been more of war in that period than the world has ever beheld before in the same length of time, more destruction of human life and human property than has been witnessed in any like period in the more than five thousand years of human existence.

Take our own country. In 1860 no one believed that we were on the verge of the greatest civil war that the world had ever seen; and a prophet like my friend from Kansas, occupying at that time a seat in the House of Representatives, would have made the same prediction that he has made here to-day as to what was to occur in the way of fighting within the next two or three years. We all know the sad mistakes made by the prophets of those days, and we still suffer for our belief in their ability to predict.

In 1867, when our civil war had ended, when half a million of lives had been lost and more than five thousand millions of property had disappeared through the ravages of war never to return again to the possession of our people, when it might have been supposed that we had had enough of war to do us for many centuries, we were ready to again plunge into strife if France and her soldiers had not gathered up their bag and baggage and cleared out of Mexico.

Our Government, in pursuance of its historic policy, was then prepared with the almost universal assent of our people to send a great army to Mexico to aid the Mexicans to drive the foreigners from their soil. Thus at the risk of war with one of the most powerful of nations, we were ready to maintain the inviolability of the "Monroe doctrine." My friend tells us that we are in no danger of war. In 1875, when the crew of the Virginius was captured in Cuba, and when those men were taken by the Spanish soldiers and shot down without trial or hearing, a wave of indignation rolled over this country North, South, East, and West that, before its power was realized, or its meaning understood, had almost plunged us into a war with Spain.

A few years later, in the city of New Orleans, when the people had been outraged by the machinations of a secret society, when American citizens had been assassinated and shot down in the streets by members of that infamous society known as the Mafia, and the citizens of New Orleans had taken the law into their own hands and were inflicting a merited punishment upon assassins, we came near finding ourselves at war with Italy; and we all know that it was but a very few years ago, during the Administration of President Harrison, when the Government of Chile refused for a time to make reparation for the outrages committed upon American citizens in the city of Valparaiso, that it was only when President Harrison sent a message to the House of Representatives practically threatening war and showing the Chilean Government that we intended to assert our rights that we succeeded in obtaining the reparation that was due to our citizens, due to our nationality, due to our honor as a nation in the eyes of the world. And yet my friend tells us that we are never again to have war with a foreign power, and therefore we need not prepare for it! The gentleman's vision is a beautiful one. I would welcome its realization as much as he would; but I say that the old doctrine is true to-day as it has been true for more than five thousand years, "In time of peace prepare for war." Man is still a fighting animal, and for many centuries will continue to be.
